Members of the Council see racism and sexism as divisive to the unity of working people and detrimental to the development of a revolutionary body which would overcome the inequalities of the capitalist system.

The Radical Women's Council is meeting in the Campus Center Auditorium today at 11:30. All interested women are invited.

$54 Stolen At Pierpont

University police say that two armed males entered Pierpont dormitory early Tuesday morning and robbed several residents of $54.

The robbery took place in a student-designed suite in the basement of the dorm.

The method of operation of the thieves, as described by the police, was: One of the men came to the door and asked for a cigarette. Upon receiving the cigarette, he left to get his companion. They then forced their way into the room, allegedly brandishing a .45 revolver and a knife.

The following is a description of the men: two black males ranging between 19 and 21 years old. Both had short hair, moustaches and were wearing hats. One was approximately 5' 9" and wore a cranberry medium length coat. The other suspect was about 5' 7", wearing a blue denim jacket.

The campus community is advised to be looking for men answering this description or method of operation. The police caution against confronting the suspects and ask instead that anyone with information contact them.

CEQ Elects New Officers

The Coalition for Environmental Quality held its annual election for its Steering Committee Tuesday.

The results are: Doug McCallum, president; Steve Ambrose, vice-president; Carolyn Stefanik, secretary; Justin Millium, treasurer; Rani Cohen, outreach coordinator; Micki Rhyne, projects coordinator, and Scott Corley, resources coordinator.

Cole Reports On Cuba

By DEBBIE MORIARTY

Professor Johnetta Cole, of the CCEBS Department, spoke last night on her recent three-week trip to Cuba with eleven other Afro-Americans. Their trip was sponsored by the New American Movement, a socialist movement.

Ms. Cole said that the goals are what really distinguish Cubans from capitalist Americans. Their goals are genuinely being pursued and therefore will probably be attained.

Ms. Cole discussed the three major values in Cuban society todah: productive work by all, internationalism, and egalitarianism. These values, Cole said, are expressed in their institutions.

Concerning agriculture, Cole said that there are no labor directors in Cuba. Manual labor is shared by all. There is also no private ownership of farm land. There are only large cooperative farms, run by the government.

Cole also said that there is no such thing as the full-time student in Cuba. All students in the universities must work four hours a day in exchange for free education, housing, and allowances. The universities are open to all those who can pass the entrance exams.

Ms. Cole also discussed the Federation of Cuban Women, an organization comprising 87% of all Cuban women. Through this organization, women are becoming a greater part of the productive work force. In Cuba today, 50% of all medical students are women, as are one out of every three judges. In 1959, 9% of the work force were women, most of whom were prostitutes. Today there is no prostitution in Cuba, and 23% of the total work force are women.

One job which women take pride in is sugar cane cutting, according to Ms. Cole. The Tanya Brigade is the most efficient and honorable brigade of women sugar cane cutters. Some of the members take pride in being able to cut 2-1/2 tons of sugar cane per day.

Ms. Cole said that because of an upheaval in the basic social structure, Cuba does have problems, but, on the whole, it is a place, and maybe the only place, where racism no longer is.

New Africa House Casts Ballots

The new Steering Committee of New Africa House will hold its first election for chairmen. The election is open to all Third World People on or around this campus.

A spokesman for the New Africa House says, "It is important that you cast a ballot for the candidate of your choice. New Africa House is in your hands since it is the cultural center for Third World People and accountable to the Steering Committee, and also because the Steering Committee is accountable only to the Third World Community."

The polls will open Monday, March 12 at 9:00 a.m. until 4:00 p.m.

The candidates: Rosa Blanco, Karen Brown, Neil Brown, Johnathan Clarke, Herbie Flores, Jack Highsmith, Andre McLaughlin, Rafael Otero, Teddy Patrick, Craig Richardson, Sam Penn, Bob Saunders, Dale Spencer, Marie Thomas, Jose Tolson.

Rep. Collins To Speak

State Representative James G. Collins (D-Amherst) will address members of the Project 10 Political Campaigns Seminar and the UMass Political Science Association tonight at 7:30 p.m. in Room 174 of the Campus Center.

Collins graduated from UMass in 1968 with a B.A. in Government. During his senior year, he served as President of the undergraduate Student Senate. In 1968, he was Co-Chairman of UMass Students for Humphrey-Muskie. In the Fall of 1970, Collins campaigned for Democrat F. James Gensheimer, who was a candidate for State Representative from the First Franklin District. In October, 1971, Collins announced his support of Senator George McGovern for President; he was one of the earliest contributors to the McGovern for President campaign in Massachusetts' First Congressional District.

In last year's election, the 27-year-old freshman legislator was top vote-getter in the hard-fought contest for two State Representative seats in the Second Hampshire District, followed by Rep. James Nolen (D-Ware), a 14-year incumbent. Collins now sits on the Education and Taxation Committees in the House, and he was recently appointed to serve on a special commission to investigate conditions at Belchertown State School and Monson State Hospital.

Collins' speech tonight will be concerned with some of the problems he has encountered in Massachusetts State Government. Tonight's presentation is one in a series of appearances by local political figures in conjunction with the Project 10 seminar. The public is urged to attend.

Outing Supplies Expand

By NANCY BASMAJIAN

The UMass Outing Club, with Student Senate funding of $5,386 for this year, has expanded its inventory to meet increased demands of the club's equipment for outdoor activities.

As a result, the following equipment is available for rental by UMass students, whether or not they are members of the Outing Club:

For Cross-Country skiing—skis and poles, wax and wax kits, ski tips.

For Canoeing and Kayaking— Grumman aluminum canoes with paddles, life jackets, canoe repair accessories, kayaks.

For Caving—rappel slings, brakebars, karabinders, descending rings, rescue pulleys, carbide, maps.

For Rockclimbing—Chouinard ropes, 150 foot Goldline ropes, a bolt kit, Karabinders, rock hammers, slings, wired nuts and pitons.

For Winter Climbing—crampons with neoprene bindings, snowshoes with neoprene bindings, ice axes, Mickey Mouse boots, ice screws, ice climbing rope.

For general camping—packs and frames, Optimus 111B stoves, Svea 123 stoves, sleeping bags, foam pads, Coleman stove, collapsible saws, axes, Jerry jugs, gas cans, Coleman ice chest, first aid kit, Coleman lanterns, various size tents.

The Outing Club locker, located on the first floor of the Student Union, is open Thursday evening, 6-8 PM for equipment rental. All equipment must be returned either Monday 6-6:30 PM or Tuesday 6-8 PM.

Jay Rondeau, president of the 113 member club, concerning says most of the problems the club has is that people "take off" with the equipment even though an individual's name is taken at the time of rental.

Also, referring to Kayaking, canoeing and climbing equipment as "technical stuff," Rondeau says, "When you don't know the person, you don't know if you should give them some of the technical stuff, because they might go out and hurt themselves."

Rondeau suggests that once an individual has rented equipment and has successfully tried and enjoyed an outdoor activity, personal equipment should be bought. Otherwise the strain on the equipment supply will cause inconvenience for others who would like to rent it.

The Outing Club bulletin board, located outside the Index office on second floor SU, includes trip notices and club information.

Speaking of the open opportunity of club membership, Rondeau says, "Essentially it's just to have fun anyhow."

Groups Can Buy Alcohol

"Purchase of Alcoholic Beverages by duly recognized Student Organizations shall be permitted...," the Senate Financial Affairs Committee recommended last night. The bill allows residence halls, area governments and R.S.O. groups to buy alcoholic beverages in compliance with State and University regulations.

Student Activities Tax Fund (SATF) organizations will not be able to purchase alcohol without the permission of the Student Senate, according to the bill. Paul Hamel, chairperson of the committee, said this limitation was imposed to allow only those "groups who raise their own money" to purchase alcohol.

The recommendation strictly forbids the resale of alcoholic beverages. Group members and their guests will be the only people eligible to drink. Hamel said a "chit" system is now being studied which allows the buying of tickets to be redeemed for drinks.

Panel Discusses U.S. Aid To South Africa

By HUGH OWEN

"Foreign economic investment in white minority ruled African countries bolsters and perpetuates the racist policies of the countries. Chief among the contributors of capital investment in these countries is the United States."

Khstsho Dube, a Rhodesian graduate student in the School of Education, explained last night in a Great Decisions of 1973 panel discussion the extent of United States involvement in the racist governments of Africa.

"The United States," said Dube, "is in direct violation of a United Nations Security Council ruling that in 1963 prohibited the sale of military supplies to South Africa."

Under the cover of a NATO alliance with South Africa, the U.S. in 1969 alone shipped over $360,000 worth of military aid to that country. Portugal, which rules by colonial mandate over Anglia, Mozambique, and Guinea, has received $400 million in military supplies during a period ranging from 1960-70. These arms received from the United States are used to enforce apartheid rule in Africa.

Mfuldi Vundla, a South African Political Science graduate of UMass, cited a few problems faced by Blacks living under apartheid rule in South Africa. According to Vundla the labor conditions in his country suffer greatly due to capitalist involvement in industry. Blacks receive 1/3 the salary of their white counterparts in labor, resulting in a 25% profit from foreign controlled industry. France and England are also involved in labor discrimination in South Africa, said Vundla.

Correction

In Wednesday's story about the emergency meeting at the School of Education, it is the School of Education Graduate Degree program that has been cut, not the UMass master's degree program.

Also, the next meeting will be March 13, not March 14. The Collegian regrets the errors.

Wounded Knee: 'Situation Grave'

By F. RICHARD CICCONE
Associated Press Writer

WOUNDED KNEE, S. D. (AP)—The U.S. government broke off talks Wednesday with the Indians holding Wounded Knee and asked that women and children be evacuated from the historic village because "the situation has become extremely grave."

Ralph Erickson, senior Justice Department official at the Pine Ridge Reservation, said the position taken by leaders of the American Indian Movement-AIM-"amounts to nothing more than intolerable blackmail."

No Injuries in Exchange of Fire

Federal officials said the Indians fired 250 rounds at marshals and FBI agents before dawn Wednesday and that federal agents returned approximately the same amount of fire. There were no injuries reported.

The exchange was the most intense between the 200 Indians who invaded the hamlet eight days ago and the circle of federal lawmen surrounding Wounded Knee. At the Indian encampment, AIM leaders called a meeting to discuss the government's announcement that talks were being broken off.

"Negotiations cannot be made at a gunpoint," Erickson said. He added that two federal negotiators had rifles aimed at their cars en route to discussions.

"I cannot escape the feeling that the leaders are bent on one of two courses—total capitulation by the U.S. government to their illegal demands or violence."

Send Out Women and Children

"It is no exaggeration to say the situation has become extremely grave," he said. "If the leaders are bent on violence, that is their concern, but I call upon them to send the women and children out of Wounded Knee before darkness falls Thursday."

Dennis Banks, an AIM leader, said it will be up to the women in the village to decide whether they will remain past the Thursday deadline. "The women who came in with us said they would lay down their lives for this cause. If they decide to stay, we'll accept it."

Other Indian leaders said the government's reaction was what they had expected. However, Clyde Bellecourt, an AIM leader from Minneapolis, said, "I'm not worried about it. I think the negotiations will reopen soon. We've got too much national support for the government to risk another massacre."

Negotiations ended early Wednesday after the Indians rejected the government's last peace proposal by insisting on three demands which neither the Justice nor Interior departments would concede.

The Indians want the highest Interior official responsible for Indian affairs to meet with them in Wounded Knee. The second demand is that the Oglala Sioux Tribal Council be suspended, tribal President Richard Wilson dismissed and new elections held.

The final demand is that three Indians arrested Tuesday be released and returned to Wounded Knee. Federal marshals said they found four gasoline fire bombs in the Indians' car.

Erickson said that Marvin Franklin, assistant Interior secretary for Indian affairs, promised to come to Pine Ridge within a week after a peaceful settlement. The Indians rejected this proposal.

As to the second request, Erickson said the Interior Department "will not and cannot interfere with the right of the Indians to govern themselves unless there is a total breakdown of government at a reservation."

Erickson said demands for release of federal prisoners is "similarly unacceptable."

The removal of Wilson, a political foe of AIM, has been a primary objective of leaders of the Wounded Knee occupation.

The shooting overnight was the first since Saturday, except for occasional gunshots heard near the encampment. The Indians had called off a cease-fire Tuesday that had been in effect since Saturday.

More POWs Return Home

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Eighty more former prisoners of war flew homeward Wednesday aboard four Operation Homecoming jets that were to land at bases in Maryland, California, Illinois and Texas after flights of up to 11,000 miles from Clark Air Base in the Philippines.

Some of the men were assigned to military hospitals near the four landing spots—Andrews Air Force Base, Md., just outside Washington, D.C.; Travis Air Force Base, northeast of San Francisco; Scott Air Force Base in Central Illinois, and Kelly Air Force Base near San Antonio, Tex. Other transport planes stood by at the four bases to ferry the rest to military hospitals near their homes.

As they boarded their C141 StarLifter jets, the men got a hero's sendoff from American school children and others stationed at Clark, where the men had enjoyed their first full two days of freedom and made their first telephone calls home.

"God bless you! God bless you all!" Navy Cmdr. Edward Martin, 41, of Coronado, Calif., shouted to the crowd.

Air Force Col. James H. Kasler, 47, of Indianapolis, Ind., said, "We feel like we have been surrounded by a loving family of thousands."

All 80 are officers, most of them Air Force and Navy pilots. They were released from North Vietnamese prison camps by Hanoi on Sunday.

Their flights to the American mainland were via Hawaii, a refueling stop in the long trans-Pacific journey.

The 80 who flew homeward Wednesday were among 106 Americans freed Sunday. The other 56 will fly back Thursday in three flights—to Travis, Scott and Kelly. Thirty Americans freed by the Viet Cong also will fly to the United States Thursday.

U.S. Resumes Troop Withdrawal

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)-The U.S. military force in Vietnam, once numbering more than a half-million men, dropped to fewer than 8,000 troops Wednesday.

A U.S. spokesman said the United States was speeding its redeployment of troops to set the stage for more American prisoner releases which are contingent on the rate of American troop withdrawals, under terms of the Vietnam peace agreement signed in Paris Jan. 27.

The United States apparently intervened in settling a dispute over the number of Vietnamese prisoners to be exchanged this week in the second phase of repatriation, thus removing a potential roadblock that could have delayed American prisoner releases.

Plans were made to begin Thursday the exchange of the first group of 6,300 Communist prisoners and 1,200 South Vietnamese prisoners after more than a week's delay.

The U.S. spokesman said the prisoner of war subcommission of the central four-party Joint Military Commission is meeting again Thursday "to deal with future releases of POWs," presumably American as well as Vietnamese.

"Our main focus in the next couple of days," the spokesman added, "is going to be with getting our forces down to 25 per cent of what they were at the time of the cease-fire. We are now at the lowest level since 1962. To get down to 25 per cent of what we had here at the time of the cease-fire would mean withdrawing to a little under 6,000.

"We hope to do that by the end of the week, if all goes well, if the flying weather is good. Then on that basis we would have withdrawn 75 per cent of our forces at the time of the cease-fire and set for further releases of American POWs."

Europeans Seek Help In Currency

By NEL SLIS
Associated Press Writer

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP)-West Europeans drew up a bid Wednesday for U.S. and Japanese help in solving the international monetary crisis as the dollar moved uncertainly on European markets.

The Europeans want help to organize a joint float of their leading currencies in relation to the dollar and the yen. It would bring them closer to their goal of a tight economic and monetary union.

But with small prospect of massive U.S. intervention to help support the dollar, officials backed away from the joint float as an immediate project.

A list of what the Common Market countries want others to do was drafted in a two-day meeting by their 19-man monetary committee led by Bernard Clapper of the Bank of France. The list was not made public, but European officials made it clear they would like to see:

—A step toward restoring convertibility of the dollar by U.S. repurchase of some of its unwanted currency in Europe. There are several ways this could be done, none of them attractive in Washington. The United States could sell some of its gold, or borrow from the Europeans.

—A U.S. pledge to do something about $80 billion moving uncontrolled outside the United States.

—An effort to curb further big outflows of dollars and to tempt some of them home by raising U.S. interest rates.

—A start on the use and expansion of the network of swaps that enables a country where a foreign currency is in short supply to arrange for huge short-term loans of the desired money by putting up an equivalent amount of its own and paying a low rate of interest.

—Japanese action to allow the price of the yen to climb further against the dollar and European currencies.

These proposals and others go before finance ministers from the nine Common Market countries Thursday. They are to choose which will be presented next day to Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz at a meeting in Paris of 15 countries prominent in world monetary affairs.

Whatever the outcome, the Common Market finance ministers face the problem of when to reopen their major official foreign exchanges and how currency rates are to be influenced.

The exchanges have been closed since Friday, and seem likely to stay that way until at least Tuesday.

Unofficial trading has been continuing on a smaller scale among banks, with speculators apparently holding their fire. On Wednesday, price movement were indecisive. In London the dollar drifted down. One pound was $2.47-1/4 in contrast to $2.46-1/4 Tuesday. In Frankfurt the dollar dropped to 2.793 marks from 2.795.

But in Paris the price improved. On the commercial market the dollar closed at 4.49 to 4.49-1/2 francs compared with 4.47 to 4.49, and on the free market it was up to 4.48-4.49 against 4.46-4.48.

In Italy and Belgium there were no significant changes.

Haig Gone, Henry Has New Hopes

By FRANK CORMIER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Henry A. Kissinger is reorganizing his National Security Council staff to reflect greater administration involvement with East-West relations and international economic problems.

A source close to Kissinger said Wednesday the departure of his deputy, Gen. Alexander M. Haig Jr., now vice chief of staff of the Army, is prompting a reorganization that will give increased influence to a number of aides to President Nixon's assistant for national security affairs.

Whereas Kissinger and Haig used to sit alone at the top of the National Security Council staff pyramid, Kissinger, besides replacing Haig, plans to name new deputies to specialize in international economics, Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union and to handle the vast paperwork involved in NSC planning and coordination.

In addition, Kissinger intends to assign increased responsibilities to Philip Odeen in the area of NSC analytic work.

Haig's replacement, already announced, is Air Force Brig. Gen. Brant Scowcroft.

As director of NSC planning and coordination, Kissinger is appointing Richard T. Kennedy, an Army colonel who retired after 30 years of service and who has been doing somewhat similar work on the NSC staff for 3-1/2 years.

To specialize in Eastern European and Soviet affairs, Kissinger will name a veteran member of his staff, Helmut Sonnenfeldt, provided Sonnenfelt does not tranfer to the Treasury-which seems better than a 50-50-bet-as a specialist in East-West trade matters.

Kissinger was said to describe the impending NSC changes as an extension and elaboration of the existing machinery rather than a shakeup.

One obvious aim is to reduce the burden Kissinger and Haig bore for four years, spreading responsibility more broadly with the hope that all involved can devote more attention to detail and longer-range planning.

Assassination Aftermath

In Sudan-A Crackdown

By D.C. MINICLIER
Associated Press Writer

KHARTOUM, Sudan (AP)-President Jaafar el Numairi decreed an antiguerrilla crackdown Wednesday and his judicial team was reported interrogating the terrorists who murdered two American diplomats and a Belgian.

Numairi said in a statement that he had ordered a roundup of all Sudanese suspected of working with spies and terrorists of the kind who assaulted the Saudi Arabian Embassy here last week.

The government-controlled newspaper Al Sahafa reported that five Sudanese men already have been arrested on charges of conspiring with the Palestinian guerrilla organization Al Fatah against the security and sovereignty of Sudan. A sixth is being hunted, the paper added.

Numairi said the assault-in which U.S. Ambassador Cleo A. Noel Jr., U.S. Charge d'Affaires G. Curtis Moore and Belgian envoy Guy Eid were killed-was part of "an effort to destroy Sudan."

"I will not be lenient with destructors and those who are paid agents," Numairi said. "I shall return the blow twofold."

He described the killings as "the massacre at the Saudi Embassy" and said they constituted "a clear crime which was committed inside Sudanese territory."

The president had said in a broadcast Tuesday night that he will "leave justice to take its course" in punishing the eight guerrillas who surrendered after occupying the embassy for 60 hours.

Egypt's Middle East News Agency reported that a three-man judicial committee began questioning the eight soon after that broadcast. Secretary of State William P. Rogers has said he believes the death sentence would be appropriate for them.

A prominent Khartoum lawyer said, however, that although the death penalty remains in force in Sudan he doubted the killers will be executed.

He said the Sudanese criminal code spells out exceptions to capital punishment, including "grave provocations." Defense attorneys could argue, he added, that the guerrillas are at war with Israel and the murdered Americans represented the government that is Israel's chief arms supplier.

If they are convicted of murdering the Belgian envoy, the defense undoubtedly will appeal for executive clemency from Numairi, he said, pointing out that the killers of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy and Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. were allowed to live.

The appeal could revolve around Arab solidarity against Israel, an argument Numairi may find hard to reject. In his broadcast Tuesday night, however, Numairi blamed not only the extremist Black September guerrillas who murdered the diplomats, but also Al Fatah, the largest Palestinian resistance group.

A Rain-Drenched Funeral

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The two American diplomats slain in Sudan by Arab terrorists were buried in adjacent graves Wednesday on a rain-drenched slope of Arlington National Cemetery.

Ten fellow foreign service officers, three of whom flew home especially to bid farewell, stood somberly under a gray canopy as the caskets bearing the remains of Ambassador Cleo A. Noel, Jr., and his deputy, G. Curtis Moore, were lowered into graves.

Secretary of State William P. Rogers presented the American flags that had draped the coffins to the widows and then led them away from the burial site to waiting black limousines.

Noel, 54, and Moore, 50, were murdered last Friday by their Black September captors in the Saudi Arabian embassy in Khartoum. Slain with them was Guy Eid, the Belgian charge d'affaires.

The assassinations led President Jaffar el Numairi to crack down on Palestinian guerrillas operating in Sudan, and several Sudanese suspected collaborators were arrested Wednesday.

The rain that has fallen on the Capitol all week subsided just before the motor cavalcade led by two hearses entered the cemetery. The Navy Band played the National Anthem and then the Navy Hymn as the caskets were unloaded. Then they were carried by military pallbearers up the gentle hill, preceded by a military color guard and the Rev. Edward Nelson, who had married the Moores and presided earlier Wednesday at a funeral service for the diplomats at the National Presbyterian Church.

"Fasten your seatbelts, it's going to be a bumpy night!"

DVP To Present Poets

The poetry of Biafra and Chile are the topics for the final day of the International Poetry Festival. Tonight the Distinguished Visitor's Program will present Chinua Achebe and Nicanor Parra reading poetry in the Engineering East Auditorium at 7:30.

The poet Chinua Achebe has produced a moving and powerful collection of verse covering a wide range of subjects—the tragedy of Biafra, an appeal to African consciousness, a gentle mockery of tradition, a recollection of personal relationships. Mr. Achebe has recently won the Commonwealth Poetry Prize for Christmas in Biafra and Other Poems. He is now Senior Research Fellow at the Institute of African Studies, University of Nigeria and is spending the 1972-73 academic year in the United States as a Visiting Professor at the University of Massachusetts, here in Amherst.

Presently a Professor at Columbia University, Nicanor Parra has published a number of volumes of poetry. His first book of poems gained notice for what became known as its "antipoetry"—a poetry that is understated and relaxed and, as Parra says, "returns poetry to its roots." It is unadorned, unlyrical, nonsymbolistic.

The International Poetry Festival closes tonight after an extremely exciting week of distinguished poets. Tonights readings by Achebe and Parra will be well worth hearing.

Dreams Expert Speaks Friday

Room to Move has invited Dr. Stanley Krippner, authority on dreams, altered states of consciousness, bio-feedback and hypnosis research, to speak Friday evening on: acupuncture, phychic phenomena and parapsychology in the USSR.

Dr. Krippner is director of the Menninger Dream Laboratory at Maimonides Medical Center and editor in chief of "The International Journal of Psychoenergetics." Dr. Krippner has visited the Soviet Union several times and is an authority on current research in parapsychology throughout the world.

In addition to his address at 8 p.m. in the Engineering Building East Auditorium, he will also participate in a "natural tea" hour Friday afternoon. Several of his publications will be made available at Room to Move, from a list of more than 100 that he has authored.

For further information, call Room to Move at 545-0400 or drop in for a visit. Room to Move is in the Student Union.

Post Office Said To Be Improving

By HARRISON HUMPHRIES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Postmaster General E. T. Klassen said Wednesday the Postal Service was "so hell-bent" on reducing costs "we perhaps lost track of service."

But he promised the Senate Post Office Committee that mail service will get better.

We are going to provide the service the people need," Klassen said.

The postmaster general attributed some failures to "damn poor management."

He said the special delivery service is "a disgrace," and he conceded that United Parcel Service "has done a better job" than the Postal Service in handling packages.

Klassen was called on the carpet as the first witness in a Senate-authorized investigation of the performance of the Postal Service in the 20 months since it has replaced the former Post Office Department.

Blaming part of the problems on the dilapidated and ill-equipped buildings the Postal Service inherited, Klassen pleaded for "more time."

"We need more time to do the job to achieve optimum service at minimum customer costs," he said.

"You may rest assured, however, service will visibly improve with the passing of each month. Improvements within the next couple of years will be substantial if all the energies now directed in the form of criticism are converted to constructive assistance."

He said also he is "having real trouble with the airlines" leaving airmail sacks on the loading platform and taking passengers instead.

Klassen claimed credit for for having avoided a $900-million postal rate increase scheduled for January, but he said preoccupation with accomplishing this partly by an employment freeze that cut 64,000 jobs distracted from efforts to improve service.

Now, he said, he has given 85 district managers throughout the country an average $100-million budget each and flexibility to manage it to achieve the best balance between cost and service.

Women's Day A Holiday In Soviet Union

Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP)-Women across the Soviet Union are laying down their jackhammers, hunting rifles and snow shovels to take the day off Thursday.

In eastern Siberia, a hairdresser boarded a helicopter on a mercy mission to attend the fisherwomen and women hunters of isolated Nelma village.

She was dispatched because "the women wanted to be especially beautiful on their holiday.'

Such is the importance the Soviet Union attached to Women's Day, a Soviet national holiday celebrated with a fervor that puts the Western Mothers Day to shame.

Women Honored

On this day, Soviet menfolk present the females with bunches of yellow mimosa, colored scarves or perfume, take over the household chores and wine and dine their women.

Woe betide the Soviet man who wakes up Thursday without a present for his wife. A hard-drinking, skirt-chasing Russian is usually forgiven for straying, but such charity doesn't mean he can forget Women's Day. He's not likely to.

Reminders have been plentiful in the state-controlled press. Bright red banners wishing "Happy Holiday to Our Glorious Women" adorn buildings and a sudden abundance of cherished consumer goods and tons of flowers-normally hard to find when snow still lines Red Square-appeared in the shops.

More Women Than Men

Women out number men 136-1/2 million to 111-1/2 million in the Soviet Union today. Glorified as heroic workers, they have been forced to fill the manpower gap created by massive Soviet casualties in World War II. Females hold down 51 per cent of the nation's jobs and then go home to run their households.

Soviet women remain at the bottom of the world's beauty and fashion ladder, earn less money, have less free time and far more household work than the men.

A recent sociological study reported the average Soviet woman spends at least 40 hours working on a factory assembly line, a road construction gang or a collective farm. She then devotes 35 hours to cleaning house and looking after her children, the study said.

Given the "right" to take industrial and agricultural jobs, females are allotted the more arduous manual jobs while men fill the foreman and executive slots.

It is not uncommon to see women in quilted overalls shoveling snow off the streets as men, warmly ensconced in heated cabs, operate mechanical snow plows.

The nation's managerial and professional occupations-the top paying posts-are dominated by men. Government and diplomacy are almost exclusively male domains.

Thursday, females bask in the limelight, taking full advantage of their one annual day off, for Friday, sweetheart, it's back to the cement mixer and snow shovel.

Understanding Self-Confidence

By DRS. McCASHIN and KLEIN

Q. I have a problem with self-confidence which is hard for me to understand. I've usually accomplished what I have set out to do and have held various positions of responsibility. Yet, I worry about being a failure. Do I have an inferiority complex?

A. The reality in your situation is that you achieve your goals and that you seek responsibility. Yet as you describe you take away the feeling of accomplishment by worrying about failure and inferiority. Paradoxically as it might sound it is not failure that is bothering you, it is success. While society places a great value on success, being able to take responsibility and projecting confidence, there is a complex counter strain in our culture which places a negative value on those personal qualities by which people gain success. Success is achieved through interpersonal power. Interpersonal power requires competitiveness, aggressiveness and a willingness to assert one's being and personal potency. To some these qualities lack virtue. So, often people are caught in the highly ambiguous position of striving for interpersonal power while at the same time needing to repress and disavow the fact that they are struggling for it. Certain family dynamics can accentuate and intensify this conflict. Part of the difficulty in acknowledging success is the belief that competitiveness, aggressiveness and potency are destructive and are associated with force and violence, particularly violence done to the freedom of others. Often ignored is the fact that there are many facets to aggression and competitiveness that are constructive. Passivity, docility and interpersonal powerlessness actually invite others to misuse their power.

Therefore your preoccupation with failure and inferiority reflects a difficulty in acknowledging those facets of your personality through which you have achieved your success.

Cambridge Philosopher To Present Lectures

Bernard Williams, philosopher, from Cambridge University will present two lectures tomorrow and Friday.

Thursday's talk, at 8 in Hasbrouck room 120, will be titled "The Makropulos Case: Reflections on the Tedium of Immortality" and is sponsored by tue UMass Undergraduate Philosophy Club. Friday, for the philosophy department's Colloquium Series, Dr. Williams will discuss "Egoism and Altruism", at 3:30 p.m. in room 804 of the Campus Center.

A leading British philosopher, Dr. Williams holds the Knightbridge Chair of Moral Philosophy at Cambridge University. He is a former professor of philosophy at Bedford College, University of London, a lecturer of University College in London, and a fellow of New College at Oxford.

His recent work has been in the field of moral philosophy, and recently published a book titled, "Morality". He is an authority on Descartes philosophy.

Love Colloq

Bob Zelman, M.A. in philosophy will teach a one credit course on the emotional physical and spiritual aspects of love. Readings will include excerpts from Fromm's "Art of Loving" Ellis' "Art and Science of Love", Lindberth's "Gift from the Sea" and Buber's "I and Thou."

The class will meet on the 12th floor lounge of John Quincy Adams Dorm, S.W. at 8 p.m. tonight, Thurs., March 8.

Attorney For Students

Towing And Phoning

Editor's note: This is the third in a series of columns written by Richard M. Howland, attorney for students. The columns deal with alcoholic beverages, divorces, wills, and now towing and telephone crimes.

Since it is impossible for Mr. Howland to guess the questions that may be bothering various groups and individuals, students and others may write questions for this column and deliver them to the Collegian office.

Although spring reduces the amount of towing of cars on campus, people have lately been experiencing problems. Spring also brings long distance phone use into more common abuse.

Included in this article are Massachusetts rules on telephone misconduct, but since a telephone is also used across state lines, misconduct may involve federal crimes as well. Last year, for instance, one individual who was hitchhiking across Canada was successfully apprehended for one fraudulent credit card call between two pay phones in Canada after returning to Amherst seven months later.

TOWING

There are three excellent ways to involuntarily have your car towed:

1. Park your car in a tow zone or otherwise illegally;
2. Park your car on the road anywhere in New England overnight between November 1 and April 1 (roughly) during snow season (including downtown parking areas and at meters) at least if it snows; and
3. Commit a crime or violation with your car (including improper registration, plates, insurance, inspection sticker, and operating to endanger or under the influence, etc.).

The tow company that actually tows your car, charges rates set by law and by contracts with the local governing authority (town or school). A storage rate as well as a towing fee is lawful and may vary by a couple of dollars depending upon the contract and the offense. The charge is lawful and must be paid. Usually cash payment is required. If a check is accepted, stopping payment or otherwise preventing payment may be a crime. Taking the car from the tow company lot without payment or permission may constitute larceny and is probably criminal in any case.

It may be helpful to remember that the tow company is simply contracted to do a job and does so only at the direction of the police, or according to local laws, or by request of the property owner and not by its independent decision. If damage occurs, file a claim with the tow company when the car is picked up.

The prevailing charges in the area are $14 or $15 for the tow and $2 or $1 per day for storage which begins the moment the car reaches the tow company lot. Once the tow truck has the car hooked up (one hook or lifted, it makes no difference) the full tow charge may be required by the driver before the car is released even though no towing is actually done.

Golda At Brandeis

The occasion was the 25th Annual Convocation Ceremony at Brandeis University. The mood on the campus was anything but ceremonial. The cool, austere beauty of the hillside in Waltham had suddenly been violated. The scene had been converted into an armed camp. Guards toting rifles dotted the rooftops surrounding Spingold Theatre. Police Dogs barked threateningly at the Entrance. Riot helmets and Nightsticks dramatized the precautions taken for security.

Brandeis, the world's most distinguished private Liberal Arts school of Jewish sponsorship, thought it befitting to use the occasion of its 25th Anniversary to honor the leader of another twenty-five year old Jewish enterprise, known in the world today as the independent State of Israel. The impression that a stranger would get from the demonstrations parading across the campus was that the individual being so honored would be nothing less than a fire-breathing dragon. Placards reading "smash the Jewish-Communist conspiracy" and "Zionism is Jewish Nazism" were prominent among the outbursts of hostile sentiment.

When the controversial recipient walked out onto the stage, the outburst in the audience was a tumultuous applause. Yet the target of the hostile agitation, and the enthusiastic reception, was neither a fire breathing dragon nor an image of a conquering warrior. Golda Meir, age seventy-five, resembled the popular stereotyped picture of the proverbial Jewish grandmother.

When she approached the podium, she did not receive the expected standing ovation. The audience was strictly urged to show their appreciation from a seated position, due to the need for tight security. Despite the temptation to stand in respect, the audience scrupulously adhered to the regulation.

Her voice was strained with fatigue, and she spoke without notes. Her delivery was brief, but in it she did not fail in her mission. She inspired her audience with her very symbol, that of a lifetime commitment to her one passion: the Zionist movement and the preservation of her people. Considering the circumstances since her first embrace of Zionism, it would be hard to scoff at her passion.

Power Of The Purse

I. PREAMBLE

"The idea that no solution exists never occurs to them, and therein lies their strength . . ."

Brave words and worthy sentiments. Recognize them? They're on the letterhead of an organization called the Student Senate. Huh? Yeah, that's right, that same group that brings you the three-ringed (and sometimes more) circus every Wednesday night.

Oh, they've found solutions all right (and proper, of course), but these solutions often leave you wondering what the hell the question was . . . and that brings us to the case of . . .

II. POWERS (Real and/or imagined)

According to the SGA Constitution (always look at the original skeletal document before you nitpick), the Student Senate does have powers above and beyond the capabilities of making themselves assess week after week. The Senate funds.

Now, look. I'm playing this straight from the shoulder to you. Funding of various R.S.O. (Recognized Student Organizations) is power, because it reflects the main power in the rest of the society, which is of course (recite Economics 125 by heart now kiddies)—money. Money is what enables you to do things, right kids? Why if it weren't for money, we might be having a good time with all the resources that some little capitalist laid claim to without your permission. But that's all right. We expect a little bit of robbery (banditry), because that's the way things are' right? Social Darwinism and all that rot (and please, before you attempt to correct me, I do know my terminology!) . . .

But while the previous part of this essay is seriously worth consideration, let us say that the Senate is above all that; after all, they're not a tacky bunch of moralists. The cry "Fiscal Responsibility" goes up, and conservatives bow in reverence, liberals shut up, and what few radicals there are left in the Senate run around wringing their hands in anguish (before they hit the ultimate trip of resignation from the illustrious body).

III. Before Rigor Mortis Sets In . . . How to Speed up the Process

Make a budget rationale that tells you exactly what you are going to fund . . . no if's, and's or but's. Fund no organization political, academic, athletic, repetitive. Okay. . . that successfully eliminates any type of competition with the Senate, and it also eliminates (in the name of the monetary squeeze), thoughts, morals, and any type of organization which would try to rock the boat a little bit. Y'see, now, we don't want to be an ideological organ—that "went out" a long time ago, and we don't want to fund any new organizations which would copy the old.

Now, that sounds nice and logical, doesn't it? It also allows monopolies to exist right here on campus, and face it friends, if an organization has that kind of security just will not try any sort of readjustments in its techniques. "Well, the students finance you . . . " "Yeah, but we're the only one on campus of its kind" "But . . . " "Take it or leave it." Sad to say, in most cases of this, the student leaves it, because through hierarchical structures, that one student out of one hundred who wants to do something had no way around it. Around what? Around the vested interests which permeate this campus.

IV. Super Bureaucrat Strikes Again (. . . and Again, and Again)

The Student Senate, especially with the new Budgets rationale, is in the final stages of becoming the mirror bureaucracy of Whitmore that it has been striving to become the past few years (you know . . . after relevant change became a dead issue). Oh, it will sit around, argue about how much money an organization (the recognized ones—which leads me to wondering how the unrecognized ones are doing) should get, and outside of that, do pretty much nothing.

Oh, they'll be debating points of order, points of personal privilege from their Robot's (Robert's) Rules of Order until the day they seek to leave this architect's nightmare of a university. But, as some of my former colleagues are aware, they won't give any students a sense of sharing, they'll be up reciting dead spells from the Constitution and by-laws (them's the reinforcements), and will end up vegetating the campus. Who is to say one set of values is more important than another? Why, the Student Senate, of course. Chants (Points of Order) and ritual (magical Senate documents) are the evil spells of this place. And if you don't know what that leads to, you'd better learn fast.

I wish you realization.

Financial Commitment

By AL KELLEY

This Spring is fast becoming the most important one for the Orchard Hill Program. In the past few years, the student governing body, Orchard Hill Area Government, has developed a degree of responsibility and maturity never before seen on this campus in any student government. Today, a new president of this body is preparing to take the reigns and it is hoped that the dynamic role OH Area Government has taken in academic and cultural areas, in particular, will be continued under the new administration.

Other areas of the Hill program have not shared this success. Under a tight time schedule, a Special Faculty Senate Committee is in the process of thoroughly evaluating the whole Orchard Hill program. It was just a matter of time before such an evaluation would have taken place anyway. Hurn's resignation as newly-appointed Master of the program was just the green light. Since the program receives a sizable budget, it is only reasonable for the University at large and the State, especially under the present tight budget, to "check out" their investment in the Orchard Hill Program.

When first announced by Whitmore, the Evaluating Committee was seen as a threat to the continued existence of the program. The program could cease this semester, but it would not be as a result of the committee. Evaluation of the program, and many others that the University has or continues to invest in have been a standard thing. Orchard Hill has been extensively evaluated every few years since it started in 1964. On October 14, 1968, a long range plan for the residential college was given to then-Chancellor Tippo, and in November of 1967 an extensive evaluation was completed for the Danforth Foundation, an early supporter of Orchard Hill. But the present evaluation and its important recommendations to the University will surely be the most important. For the first time, the concept of a residential academic program has the support of key people on this campus. The Evaluation Committee has been far from hostile. Rather, they seem to be earnestly interested in making the program a more effective one. Students and faculty, both on The Hill and University-wide, should lend a hand by making criticisms and suggestions known to Dr. Lee Short, the faculty chairperson of the committee. When the committee has completed its most important task in April, the responsibility for the future of the Orchard Hill program will rest with the Administration. Given the limited financial resources at its disposal, will the administration make the moral and financial commitment necessary to implement the recommendations of the Evaluation Committee for the future Orchard Hill?

International Women's Day

This day of solidarity among working women of the world is in commemoration of the needle trade workers' demonstration in New York on March 8, 1973. The demonstrators called for the unionization of women needle workers, and the right for women to vote. At the International Socialist Congress of 1910 Clara Zetkin, a leader of the German Socialist Party, dedicated March 8 to the working women of the world.

It is important that on this day we emphasize the unity between the women trade unionist struggles and the women's liberation movement. The development of child care centers, the move for equal pay for equal work, and the development of rape crisis centers are equally important to both working class women and the middle class women of whom the liberation movement is purported to be comprised.

Feminist Ideology

To Liberation

By ZILLAH EISENSTEIN

On International Women's Day it is important for us to be thinking about historical Feminist Ideologies as well as recent statements concerning theories of Women's Liberation. The excerpt below from a paper entitled "Feminist Ideology: Toward a Theory of Liberation" attempts to clarify some of these issues.

It is important for us to be familiar with the ideological statements which derive from the Women's Liberation Movement because there are several different theoretical positions within the literature. The different ideological statements clearly have like concerns but they also have conflicting views of the conceptual picture of woman, of society, her relation to society as well as different models of human development.

For some, the feminist revolution involves the elimination of patriarchal rule. In this analysis patriarchy is seen as the first oppressive division. The relations of domination and submission are seen as reflective of patriarchal society, and therefore problematic and necessitating social change.

For others, like Robin Morgan and Shulamith Firestone the feminist revolution is seen in terms of freeing woman from her reproductive process. Programs are organized around her unique needs as woman, and these stem from her biology. Of course, such an emphasis does direct itself towards the liberating of woman from her biological being, but it also allows her biological being to define the contours of the feminist revolution. Radical Feminism (such as Morgan and Firestone define it) poses woman as unique, her needs being defined by the very reality that she is a woman. Such an ideology clearly acknowledges woman's interests. But to define the feminist revolution, or to limit ideology to this dimension of woman's existence is to accept a certain Freudian backlash. My body is still key here. My concerns are defined in terms of Radical Feminist Ideology in relation to my biology, even if it is in terms of freeing myself from my body.

I do not mean to put down these issues. They are real. Every woman who has to see doctors, have pregnancy tests, or think about being raped or has been raped knows they are real. But they are not the whole story. They therefore are a part of Liberationist Ideology, but there is more to the problem of liberation.

What about the more total conception of the woman, not just as woman but as person. That means that an Ideology of Liberation would need to posit the picture of a woman as a person which involves her mind as well as her body. This means that woman needs to be seen in terms of a total process. It will require a different kind of society, not just a different kind of technology.

Historically Feminism was limited by its liberal perspective. It accepted in large part the sexual division of labor as well as the division of labor which created private property and alienated labor. Radical Feminism, although it moves much beyond historical Feminism does not encompass Women's Liberation to the degree it is defined by the Freudian backlash and accepts the severance of mind and body. The conceptual picture of woman is deficient as is the analysis of the connection between woman and society.

The picture of woman in terms of her liberation as a person involved her potential to develop. Specifically it will involve her potential for living in social community, rather than isolated homes, her potential for creative labor or work, rather than alienating or mindless work, and her potential for critical consciousness as opposed to false consciousness, which requires a self-consciousness and then moves beyond this. Then the picture of woman should encompass a being with goals, purposes, and meaningful choices. She becomes something more than an individual defined (inversely) by her biology. Such a picture of woman as person (which incorporates the Radical Feminist stance but moves beyond it) is revolutionary Ideology. I think the point here is that (when the time comes for revolution) women will lead this revolution. I think this is different, and moves durther than saying that it will be a woman's revolution. The first will include the second statement, but is somehow broader.

An ideology of Liberation needs to posit a conceptual picture of woman as a social and historical being, who is thereby affected by economic and technological change. This posits woman as changing, rather than defined by her natural biological states. As the individual unfolds and develops through social and historical stages she develops her creative capacities.

Clearly woman needs to know herself as woman before she can know herself as person, and we may be sull finding out about our identities as women. Becoming conscious of ourselves as women and dealing with this awareness is integral to the process of growth as persons. Our full consciousness as women must involve the

Sisterhood: A Re-appraisal

By ZOE BEST

Every movement must appraise what it has done, who is it reaching and where it is going.

Taking the first question, last year at this time during Women's International Day, local, regional, national and international issues were examined. Women have impressed upon the public that they are serious. Abortion is legal, though expensive. Bella Abzug is in Congress. Angela Davis is out of prison. Nixon has submitted to a Peace Agreement in Vietnam. The Equal Rights Amendment will be constitutional soon. Women's Centers are popping up everywhere. Women are reaching toward women. This is good.

This might be a time for self-criticism, for reassessment, a time for study and a time for renewed action on behalf of ourselves and our sisters everywhere.

Women from this area, mainly middle class and university women have expressed their need and right to independence, legitimacy, and liberation. They are finding ways via Women's Studies, support groups, study groups, Feminist Press, HEW's affirmative action which allows entry of more women into what were previously almost exclusively male professions.

At the same time women are carrying picket signs in California asking consumers to boycott non-union iceberg lettuce. They have been beaten. Their families on the average combining the income of all family members make $3000 a year. In Springfield, Holyoke the poor women cannot hope to have a dining commons type meal. They are overworked, unemployed with more of the same and worse for the future.

Women in the movement have expressed their demand and right to control their own bodies (reproduction) and to some control of production, that is to diminish the control of the male doctor, psychologist, professor, mate, boss. Before the Supreme Court decision on allowing abortion, men and the state (men also) had decided whether women, even when raped, could be allowed to have an abortion. Rich women have always had the privilege and the means to get an abortion. Presently there are some women on campus who want to protect the life of the fetus. Who protested the abortions created by this government's policies in Indochina, that is the involuntary abortions at My Lai? Who is protesting the taking of human life in Brazil? A decade ago perhaps 13 million indigenous people shared the Amazon Basin, but four years ago the population had been reduced to 400,000 and now to 100,000? The people in the Amazon are being replaced by miners and by cattle, quick-frozen and then flown to your local supermarket where buyers complain of the price of meat. Genocidal death is generally ignored even by "conscious" women in the U.S. Involuntary abortion is genocide. What is the price of life?

Eight times as many Native American infants die as whites; they die from gastroenteritis, starvation, malnutrition. Their parents are lucky to live 45 years. Recently Native Americans occupied a medical clinic in Arizona. They were protesting the lack of care they were receiving, the refusal to admit emergency cases, the high costs of medical attention. The farmworkers, rural and urban poor face the same problems. In solidarity with these people even in worse situations than we, to support our own needs for cheaper health care, more humane health care, women should and could have similar sit-ins all over the country.

Economy and Child Care

The ultimate loss of control over one's body is to see it completely in the grasp of oppressive hands of a dominant society and state. A state which carries out the decemination and genocide of peoples while at the same time a few people live in luxury and participate in the profits and decisions guaranteeing continued misery for millions.

The majority of women face decrease in buying power, a decrease in their real wages. They face increased taxation to support institutions that will not admit them. Unemployment is increasing. There are higher food, transportation and education costs. For all the women who must work to help in the feeding of their children there are no child care centers or, as in Amherst, there are child care centers that charge a tuition that is the same as for college students!

Wars continue. There is a war at Wounded Knee. In 1890 twice as many women and children died at Wounded Knee than men. Gen. George Custer killed 106 men and 250 women and children. Women who voted for George McGovern should demand he and other government officials hear and act upon the demands of the Native Americans.

The Future

Women will and must spend some time in identifying the enemy of all oppressed peoples, including the majority of women. Where is the napalm made that is being dropped in the Philippines, Guatemala, along the border towns of Tanzania? Who trains and teaches police forces of dictatorships the latest techniques in sadistic torture, spying, etc.?

The war continues and will continue until liberation is attained by many struggling people. Women will help in that struggle. We are needed to help. The multi-national corporations, the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Nixon clique will have to be looked upon as the enemy. Our sisters in this country, poorer than we, our sisters in the poorer countries know who the enemy is.

Women in this country have done alot; they must do more. They must love more. They must work more. They might even have to fight more.

We must re-dedicate our women's movement to ourselves, yes, but we must also dedicate ourselves to the struggles our sisters everywhere are a part of. Our liberation depends on their liberation. Power to our sisters.

Vietnamese sisters rebuilding the dikes. (LNS)

Our Sisters:

Political Prisoners

Women helped in the international effort to gain the release of Angela Davis, imprisoned for no crime, imprisoned because of her political beliefs and acts. Presently, there are many political prisoners whose release U.S. women, from their more privileged, comfortable situations, can assist in obtaining. Women should try to increase their awareness of the conditions under which most of the women live in this world. In many places, when women try to undertake action to change conditions which threaten their lives, they suffer imprisonment, torture, and assassination.

Women should learn to become alert to what is happening internationally. They must read from sources other than that printed by U.S. press. They can utilize petition, letter and telegram campaigns. They can be ingenious and incorporate the stories of these brave women into stories, theatre, films, letters to the editor, and other art forms.

First, we can not allow Thieu to continue to imprison, torture and kill those who worked so hard to bring about the Vietnam Peace Agreement. Mrs. Ngo Ba Thanh was a professor of International Law at the University of Saigon. She has a Ph.D. from Columbia University. In August, 1971, she was arrested after having participated in a demonstration protesting the one-man presidential election. She was tried by military judges, imprisoned, tortured. She was so ill at her military tribunal trial, held after she had spent some time in Thu Duc prison, that a doctor injected heart stimulants and he and friends administered artificial respiration to keep her alive. The court after a 30-minute recess postponed the trial and refused to allow her to be admitted to a civilian hospital and ordered her return to Thu Duc Prison. Last year she was moved to a prison outside of Saigon and immersed in a barrel of water, where for days the barrel was beat upon. This torture destroys internal organs. Presently Ngo Ba Thanh is still imprisoned by Thieu and is in solitary confinement with no access to medical care or friends.

After 18 years of imprisonment Lolita Lebron, an advocate of Puerto Rican independence, is in solitary confinement in Alderson Federal Women's Prison in West Virginia. She was a participant in the shooting that took place in Congress in 1954. She is a prisoner of war. Lolita Lebron is still alive, a POW sentenced for 25-65 years. In solidarity with Puerto Rican sisters who not only want women's liberation but people's liberation, for those people who must pay 70¢ for a loaf bread, for those people whose beaches are now visited by the wealthy of North America while the Puerto Rican people are not allowed on them, we women in the U.S. must demand the release of Lolita Lebron and independence for Puerto Rico.

There are many anonymous women in prison in Iran, in Greece, in Brazil, in Guatemala, in Argentina, in South Africa. They do not have Ph.D.'s or famous names. The following stories have taken place in all these fascist countries. Adamaris de Oliveira Lucena speaks for herself:

"I was imprisoned in Brazil in 1970 after a shoot-out at my home between several of the dictator's police and my husband, who died heroically. My three youngest children were also imprisoned. They were kept alive in an orphanage and one of them, nine years old, was mentally and physically tortured by the tyranny's lackeys.

My husband fought consciously against the dictatorship. As a worker he suffered exploitation in his own body. I am of peasant origin. I am from the Northeast, from that dry and arrid land where 60 per cent of the people are unemployed. I saw my own son die of hunger when he was only a year and a half old and I have seen hundreds of children die like that in my country. We are used to seeing death by starvation in our country. We are not resigned to allowing this to continue. That is why we are fighting...

"I ACCUSE the dictatorship of keeping hundreds of teachers and doctors in prison, while in the countryside and in the cities there aren't enough hospitals or classrooms. I accuse it of maintaining the most ferocious kind of censorship through total control of mass media; in that way, it often misleads public opinion and, through the publication of false news items, tries to demoralize the revolutionaries. I ACCUSE it of keeping dozens of honest journalists in prison; many of these, far from being revolutionaries, have simply identified themselves with the people.

"A Brazilian mother greets you and appreciates the publication of this letter, a Brazilian mother who is just one of millions who have suffered misery, exploitation and the death of her children, but who is not about to ask clemency for her son. A Brazilian mother who will continue the struggle to VICTORY."

Those women who will take part in efforts to reduce the rapes of her friends in this area, must also remember how rape and torture is being used systematically by all oppressive regimes and must also join in efforts to do away with these regimes.

awareness of both our bodies and our minds. To sever the relationship is to deal, once again, with only a partial definition of ourselves as human beings. And it is the unique quality of humans to be able to integrate thought and action.

Women In Cuba

Struggle To Liberation

Note: These comments were taken from an interview in "Women in Struggle", Nacla's Latin America and Empire Report, Dec. 1972.

In the following comments, Vilma Espin explains how the Cuban woman is experiencing a liberation because of the national liberation of the Cuban people. A combatant in the Cuban struggle, founder of the Cuban Women's Federation, director of industrial development in the Ministry of Food Industries, she has been president of the Institute of Child Care since June, 1971:

"...the liberation of women cannot be separated from the liberation of society in general. A woman cannot have any political, economic or social rights in a capitalist society where she suffers from class oppression and discrimination because of sex and race. Historically, the feminist movement has put forth partial solutions, but it has not attacked the roots of the problem capitalist society.

In our country where, since the triumph of the Revolution, a tenacious struggle is being waged to overcome underdevelopment, we are creating institutions, services, all the conditions to free women from domestic problems, although we still don't have all the resources we need to do this. We are also waging an intense ideological battle aimed both at women and at the rest of society to eliminate all vestiges of backwardness, the prejudices about women and the role they must play in society. In Cuba the woman is aware that she is part of the productive forces fighting against underdevelopment to build the material base which will make it possible to create all the institutions, services and industries which will alleviate her domestic work load.

Moreover, work gives new perspectives to women, it broadens their horizons, helps create a social consciousness, but just working itself will not solve all the problems. All society must be aware of this problem and be willing to solve it.

It is very difficult to change man's mentality, that's why we still have some vestiges of discrimination and prejudice toward the woman. In woman herself these vestiges have their roots in the centuries of colonial and imperialist exploitation to which we were subjected and to the place which women occupied in that society: women in the home and man in the street.

Latin America is now the scene of great transformations. The triumph of the Popular Unity government in Chile, the interesting and deep-rooted process in Peru, the position taken by Panama in the struggle for sovereignty over the canal, just to mention the most important processes, show us that the era of absolute U.S. domination in Latin America is beginning to decline. The struggle for the liberation of our sister peoples of Latin America is growing and in it we are feeling more and more the participation of women.

We are convinced that women must and will play a very important role in the fight for full national independence. Moreover, in Latin America there is a deep-seated historic tradition of women's struggles. In the battles for our first independence, together with the popular and internationalist armies of San Martin and Bolivar, women are present. Outstanding fighters such as Colonel Juana Azurduy de Padilla who fought in the area then called Upper Peru; Manuela Saenz, the companion of Bolivar; Remedios Escalada de San Martin; and our own Ana Betancourt who in 1869 demanded that woman's rights be included in the new constitution; Mariana Grajales, the mother of the Maceo brothers, the heroes of our independence; captains of the liberating army, Adela Azcuy and Rosa Castellanos, the Bayamesa, and many others who not only helped the combatantants but were also combatants themselves.

Thus, with these examples which we have inherited and the awakening of consciousness on the part of the Latin American woman, we know that women will make their enormours renovating and patriotic force felt in the struggles for the liberation of their peoples and for their second and definitive independence.

Our people, our women, are following the development of these struggles and have expressed their full solidarity with them.

In China - A Struggle With Dignity

By MARNIE RESNER

March 8th, International Women's Day, is a holiday for all women in The People's Republic of China. I shared this day last year with hundreds of women workers, peasants, intellectuals, students and performers in the County Town of Hsiyang County, Shansi Province, in the loess hills of northern China, a county famous for (among other things) the strength, courage and leadership of its women. What is discussed at such a gathering? Is there equality between men and women in China today? The head of "Women's Work" in this county laughed once when asked that question and answered by saying, "every village, every factory, every school in China has a Women's Association responsible for all special problems pertaining to women. Equality between men and women? Don't be silly! When we've reached complete equality we won't need Women's Associations."

The discrepancy between the goal articulated in Mao's statement "times have changed, men and women are equal now, everything a man can do women can also do" and the reality of daily life in China today is apparent to visitors from the West who are often surprised at seeing institutions we are fighting for here; twenty-four hour free day care centers, free abortion on demand, complete legal and political equality, existing simultaneously with seemingly backward things such as generally traditional roles within the home. However trying to describe the role of "a woman" in Chinese society exactly as they are today, March 8th, 1973, would be rather like showing a photograph of a spot on a river to someone who has never seen a river, or tried to swim upstream, for such "a woman" would be swept away as swiftly in the current of the on-going revolution in China as that photograph would be tossed into a real river.

Today is a day of solidarity of all women and throughout the world, and I'd like to extend the expression of solidarity, as it was extended to me by our Chinese sisters, to all Women in America who are struggling for dignity and equality.

Equality for women in China has by no means been achieved. However, if there is one term applicable to these women and to their relationship with men, it is "dignity".

Today's pullout section celebrating Women's International Day was compiled by: Barbara Bagley, Ann Brentlinger, Ellen Caracciolo, Amy Dillenbeck, Dolly Doucette, Ellen Gavin, Mary Anne Kuroczko, Kathleen Reardon, Nancy Rice, Kay Smith, and Gail Sullivan. These pages represent the work of University and community women. The viewpoints expressed are not necessarily those of the Collegian staff.

Sojourner Truth,

"THE LIBYAN SIBYL."

'...Ain't I A Woman?'

By KATHLEEN REARDON

..."And Ain't I a woman..."

One year ago today, women of this University circulated a petition to name the newly built library in honor of Sojourner Truth, ex-slave and feminist. A formal proposal was submitted in early April endorsed by the feminist community and the Third World Alliance. The Committee on Buildings and Grounds thanked us for our "suggestion" and said they would notify us when our proposal was to be brought before the Committee. Nothing has been heard from this committee since. It is clear that we must renew our struggle, for this University only responds to the politics of threat, whenever an oppressed group moves toward acquiring power.

Sojourner Truth was born with a double burden, she was black and a woman. She was born a slave at the end of the 18th century in Ulster County, New York. Her Dutch master named her Isabella Baumfree and referred to her as "Bell". She was sold with a herd of sheep to a Yankee farmer, her master John Dumont raped her and married her off to an older slave. Sojourner mothered thirteen children and watched the selling of her young son, Peter. Slavery was declared illegal in New York, yet Sojourner was detained. Fanally, she contracted to serve another master and he freed her in 1827 to live the life of a domestic. She sued for Peter's freedom and won the case in Kingston, New York.

Sojourner became involved with a group of religious fanatics and lived communely. She eventually split from the group, however, she internalized a strong sense of mission. In June 1843, she left New York on foot and changed her name. "When I left the house of bondage, I left everything behind, I wasn't goin' to keep nothin' of Egypt on me, an' asked the Lord to give me a new name. And the Lord gave me Sojourner because I was to travel up an' down the land shown' the people their sins an bein' a sign until them."

Sojourner then took on the last name Truth, for her life's vision was to bring the truth of human oppression to the people she met. She spoke passionately for blacks, women, and the poor. Sojourner was the nly black woman present at the first National Woman's Rights Convention in Worcester, 1850, where she delivered her famous "ain't I a woman" speech. She possessed the unique ability to transform hostile crowds into compassionate listeners with her simple message of love and struggle.

"I know that it feels a kind o' ticklin' like to see a colored woman get up and tell you about things and Woman's Rights. We have all been thrown down so low that nobody thought we'd ever get up again; but we have been long enough trodden now, we will come up again and now I am here."

Of the 134 buildings on this campus, only eleven are named for women; ten dorms and one academic building, Home Economics, of course. There is not a single building in honor of a black woman. It is time to break the tradition of dedicating buildings to UMass trustees. The Sojourner Truth library must stand as a sign to us, a constant reminder of our commitment to the eradication of oppression.

Communique From Third World Women

The power wielded by imperialist countries holds Third World people in a death grip. The imperialist nations act as a multi-armed octopus holding Third World people in control. The revolution that took place in China took off an arm of this octopus. The revolutions in Cuba and Algeria cut off arms of this octopus. The liberation struggles in Vietnam Uruguay, Guinea-Bissau and other Third World nations keep the monster constantly in pain.

The women in each of these nations have fought and are fighting alongside of the men. Without the struggle for national liberation there could exist no struggle for the liberation of women in those countries. The struggle for women's equality is inextricably entwined with the struggle of Third World people for liberation from the oppressive forces which seek to keep them under economic and political domination. Third World women understand this. For this reason the struggle for the equality of women is called the revolution within the revolution.

In this country Third World people have realized that there can be no liberation of one segment of the society without the liberation of all peoples within the society. For African American, Indian, Puerto Rican, Chicano and Asian people the movement for economic and political liberation of all peoples is the primary concern.

Women's Movement

Why aren't more Third World women actively participating in the women's movement?

The question is one which the Women's Movement has not been able to answer. We would like to take this opportunity to state our position on this question both realistically and honestly. The answer is really simple. The political goals of each group are different, and the goals of the American Women's Movement, once achieved would have very little effect on the conditions of life for Third World people. This is the Third World women's primary concern.

Economics and Class

Better job positions and more governmental slots for women as ideals, are admirable. But as a strategy for the liberation of a people, no matter who the people are, they are disfunctional. Integration into the economic and political structures of America on a job level will not accomplish liberation. Black people in this country are a testimony to that. We would not hesitate to say that there is now at least one "High-Ranking Black High Middle-management Official" in the majority of the diversified corps structures of America. But the only change that has been brought about for our people is that now we can say we've got them. But what else? The same is true for our "High-Ranking Gov't Aides", and our representatives throughout the nation's capitals.

The most that the American Women's Movement can hope to acquire in this society, without the power created by economic strength, which only the large corporations and holding companies possess, are these high middle-management positions. We see no need to struggle for that, we've already got that. What Third World people need, the further integration of Third World people and/or women into the middle-management sector of America, can't give us.

Middle-management people are consumers of "High Quality" commodities, but they are consumers nonetheless, and as such their ultimate power is buying power. Consumer power has never, and will never, have the power to see and/or control land and its resources, or the power to pay, or not to pay, wages. You will not have the power to launch an invasion, or halt the occupation of world, or even neighborhood, communities by the armed forces. The goals you seek will not secure you the power to decide that two of your middle-management people are not expendible, therefore you will pay the ransom. The power you seek will not allow you to protect yourselves, much less the Third World's people.

Women's Role

On the question of the women's role, we Third World women have our problems without men, but we realize that those problems are microscopic when viewed against the larger problems our men face in securing the most minimal gains this country has to offer. When we leave our men, or our men are forced to split from us, that is when our problems INCREASE, not DECREASE. Our homes and families are the focal point of our lives, not careers. We will not become engrossed in the myth of "individual careers" as the zenith of a woman's life. To do so would only threaten those things our men have worked so hard to secure, not only for themselves, but for us as well. We have a life-long, positive bondage with our men, which if broken, can destroy us as a people. Our role is the maintenance of the family, around which our lives are centered. Our role is clear. And the clarification of the role of Third World Women illuminates very clearly the contradictions between our role, and how the American Women's Movement perceives its role (as it relates to men and the family).

Political Approach

Then there is the question of tactics, which are a direct reflection of political posture. Third World Women, in viewing the goals of the American Women's Movement, analytically, cannot help but see the movement as acting from a position which can give them no strength, not even in numbers, a position in which we cannot, for the sake of our survival, tie up our energies. The Women's Movement is primarily a movement, the concerns of which are motivated by social conditions. Consequently, the thrust of the women's organizations has been of a social nature.

While our problems do reflect their image on a social level, for Third World people the problems themselves are manifested on a poltical/economic level, a level that the American Women's Movement has not, as of this writing (March 7, 1973) dealt with, or even addressed itself to seriously.

Birth Control-Abortion

And last but not least, Birth Control/Abortion. Third World Women, more than most, know the need for each very well. But we also know and feel the need to continue to recreate that which we know to be FOR REAL HUMAN LIFE.

We understand that it is not large families that prevent us from fairing well in America, but America. We also find it very frightening that if we go to the hospital for some cold cures, we have to pay. But they'll take you in, keep you overnight, and feed you even, to stop the life of your child from beginning, FOR FREE. Now that's mindblower. A for real mindblower. And we don't want any.

We don't want the things you find it necessary to have, therefore we cannot struggle under the same banner.

This is not to say that there will not be issues on which we will agree-there will be, and there are. And as those tasks are laid before us we are confident we will be able to deal with both effectively, and harmoniously. But we Third World Women, together with our men, must pursue our own course of action.

I pay tribute to the Cuban Woman of today and yesterday

For standing up fighting side by side with men for the liberation of humanity

For taking a rightful place in society

For that is the socialist society

For giving birth to a child

For every little girl that is born

For then a new nation is born

Que viva la mujer

What You Always Wanted To Know About Phones

Sometimes the charge may be only $10 but it does not legally have to be reduced to that.

The tow company is not responsible for the correctness of the decision to have the car towed or not and is entitled to be paid before releasing the car. It is usually wiser to argue about the validity of the tow with the authority or party who called for it than with the tow operator.

TELEPHONE CRIMES

Massachusetts law provides that:

Whoever, with intent to defraud, obtains, or attempts to obtain or aids or abets another in attaining, any telecommunications service by any false representation, false statement, or stratagem, by unauthorized charging to the account of another, by installing or tampering with any facilities or equipment of by any other means, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $100 and/or by imprisonment for not more than 30 days. Ch. 166, Sec. 42A)

This statute covers a wide variety of attempts to defraud the telephone company.

A person convicted of violating this law may find in the future that it is impossible for him to have a phone installed or that he can have one installed only by paying a large deposit.

It is a crime to use the telephone to harrass a person. Typically, the offense is characterized as an "obscene" phone call and can result in a $500 fine, and three (3) months in jail. It includes calling without speaking, "breathing," calling at odd hours, and other uses of the phone that are offensive to the person being called. Such calls are easily traced at the request of the offended person and can result in serious consequences to the caller. If you have a complaint or debt use the appropriate procedures and not the telephone to effect collection or vindication.

Use of the telephone to communicate a threat against a person or a building, such as a "bomb scare" is a felony which can net the caller a ten year prison sentence and heavy fine. (Ch. 269, Sec. 14)

SOUND IDEAS NUMBER ONE SYSTEM

NIKKO 7070

PHILLIPS GA 308

How can we say it? Because until this month, there had never been a receiver like the NIKKO 7070 for anywhere near the price. We've matched this incredible receiver with two of the outstanding performers we've come across in the last year the EPI 50's and the Philips GA-308, to offer you a system that gives the best sound per dollar anywhere!

The NIKKO 7070 features 34 watts RMS/channel, both channels driven from 20Hz. to 20kHz. at under 0.5% THD. This is the most conservative possible rating, and yet even compared to less conservatively rated receivers in the price range it offers up to 50% more power for you dollar. And features! Consider — two tape monitors with full dubbing facilities, high and low filters, stepped tone controls, FM muting, two phono and auxiliary inputs, full facilities for switching two pairs of speakers, 4 channel FM output for future conversion, and more! And it comes complete with walnut wood cabinet and full two year parts and labor warranty. All for $200.95 retail list!

To match this receiver we choose the equally incredible EPI 50 loudspeakers. Extremely compact in size, they nevertheless provide full bodied sound due to the unique EPI woofer and tweeter. The woofer is a slightly scaled down version of their full sized model used in all their speakers in multiple combinations, and is capable of fundamental bass response down to 45 Hz. The tweeter is the same unique acoustic suspension model found on every speaker EPI makes, with clear extended highs and remarkable dispersion.

With the power and response to reproduce such low bass, it is very important to make sure the turntable doesn't contribute any audible rumble to this system, so we choose the belt driver Philips GA-308 to round out this system. With a totally suspended turntable and arm system, rumble is filtered out before it reaches the needle. The table also features viscous damped cueing, pop filter, anti-skating and automatic shut-off and lift at the end of a record. It comes with an ADC 250X/E eliptical magnetic cartridge, dust cover and base.

This system has a retail list of $540 — you save 25% at its system price of $399

SOUND IDEAS SYSTEM NO. 2

THE BEGINNER SYSTEM —

BSR 310X NIKKO 2010 CREATIVE 22's

The idea here is to create the least expensive component system that represents no compromise with the basic necessities of a complete hi-fi, that for economic reasons can't be included in system #1. Such features as a magnetic phono cartridge, cueing, speaker switching, loudness control, acoustic suspension, two-way speakers and much more are included at this low price.

The heart of this system is the Nikko 2010 FM-Stereo Receiver with 24 watts (IHF) of power, featuring full facilities for two pairs of speakers, tape monitor, loudness, double protected output and power supply circuitry and modern blackout dial. An excellent FM section with 3.0 UV sensitivity rounds out this fine unit. Comes complete with beautiful walnut cabinet and full two years parts and labor guarantee.

Complementing the Nikko 2010 is the BSR 310X turntable, with Shure M75C magnetic cartridge. This record changer features cueing, anti-skating, and variable tracking force dial, and is equipped with a heavy-duty four-pole induction motor, its dependability is assured by the manufacturer's full parts and labor warrantee of one year, and comes complete with operating dust cover.

Rounding out the "Beginner System" is the incomparable Creative 22 loudspeaker. No other speaker we've encountered anywhere can match it in value for sound, size and price. A compact unit, it nevertheless delivers a big sound rivaling others twice its size, due to its 6 1/2" acoustic suspension woofer and cone type 3 1/2" tweeter. Enclosed in a heavy walnut cabinet, a five year parts and labor guarantee assures its long term quality and dependability.

Everywoman's Workshops To Begin Next Week

A series of Project Self workshops which will examine ways in which woman has been portrayed and/or stereotyped through our culture will be offered March 12-May 7 by Everywoman's Center at Munson Hall this semester. Some of the workshops in the series include:

Messages from Out There: Writers on Women will consider the range of myths about women and how they affect us, our self-concepts and goals. The participants will read and discuss short stories and novels by both men and women.

In Sexual Institutions of Patriarchy the group will read about and discuss patriarchy and its relationship to the institutions of rape, prostitution, homosexuality, chastity and others.

Sex Role Stereotyping in the Elementary School is planned to help parents and teachers with information and an opportunity to talk about why and how schools perpetuate sex-stereotyping. The work will include looking at textbooks, sharing experiences, and discussions of what can be done to begin change.

A workshop on Lesbianism will examine attitudes, social and personal, that affect the lesbian's self-image and society's view of her. Readings and discussion will be concerned with the problems of the lesbian as a minority.

In Catholicism and Women, participants will consider how being raised Catholic affects their lives as women. They will examine the Church-dictated roles for women, and discuss how realistic they are today.

Prostitution will take a new look at the traditional role of the prostitute from a feminist perspective.

A workshop on Women in Art will look at women as seen in art and women as artists, with reading and discussion on the traditional, and the evolution of new images reflecting the changing consciousness of women.

Participants will view films in and out of class in Film: Sex Roles and Self Image and discuss the roles played by women and men in films, and whether those roles reinforce societal sex role stereotyping.

Our Bodies, Ourselves offers women an opportunity to learn about, and thus feel comfortable with, their bodies. There will be readings and discussions on body functions, reproduction, contraception, childbirth, abortion, and female sexuality.

In Temple Restoration: Reclaiming your Physical Fitness, each participant will set herself a goal of fitness and learn to achieve it through a variety of individual and group movement activities.

Freeing our Bodies will explore movement as a means of individual self-expression, while in Movement Together, the group will experiment with movement as a way of sharing and communicating.

Attaining inner peace through harmony of mind and body will be the subject of Hatha Yoga and Meditation. Participants will learn and practice a variety of meditational techniques with Hatha Yoga.

Through Tai Kwan Do, a Korean form of karate, women will be able to discover their physical strength. This workshop may also include discussion of self defense and related topics.

In Getting in Touch through Creative Dramatics, participants will use voice, movement, mime, improvisation, role-playing and theatre games to explore and expand their self-images. No previous experience is required.

Wood and linoleum blocks will be used in Introduction to Relief Printmaking to make one and two color prints. Techniques of basic design and printing of fabrics and cards will be practiced.

The Poet in You will provide a supportive atmosphere in which to share writing and ideas.

Each participant will construct her own simple frame loom in Introduction to Weaving, and then explore at least one weaving feminism technique.

Women will have an opportunity to study basic composition, color theory and perspective through still life and landscape and/or portraiture in Introduction to Oil Painting.

In Introduction to Silkscreening, each woman will build screens and learn to make paper stencils.

Materials will be required for several of these workshops. Details will be available at registration, which is today from 1 to 8 p.m. at Everywoman's Center, Munson Hall. Mail registrations, with tuition payment enclosed, should also be received by this date.

Workshops begin the week of March 12 and will run through the week of May 7. Most will meet for two hours once a week for eight weeks. The tuition fee will be reduced for women on welfare.

For a catalog of workshops and further information, call or stop by Everywoman's Center, open Monday through Friday, 9 to 5.

Here's a personal calculator that's different. It's got what students need ...square roots, scientific notation, and more... at a price you can afford. $149.95.

ACTUAL SIZE

The new Texas Instruments SR-10 makes studying faster and easier. Saves time, eliminates errors.

Instant, accurate answers. Anywhere. Anytime.

That's power. Power you can use to make your study hours more efficient. Learn more in less time...free from the numbers drudgery.

And now there's a calculator that's ideal for college students—the Texas Instruments SR-10. It's got the functions you need, at a price you can afford. It's one of the best investments you can make in your education.

Check these features:

- Square roots, squares, reciprocals—at the touch of a key—as well as addition, subtraction, multiplication, division.
- Scientific notation, numbers from $1.0000000 \times 10^{-98}$ to 9.9999999×10^{99}.
- Full-floating decimal—you place it in the problem, it's automatic in the answer.
- Fast-recharge, long-life NiCad batteries—and you can use the SR-10 while it recharges from wall outlet.
- Reliable operation. Made by Texas Instruments, the world's largest manufacturer of solid-state components and integrated circuits.
- Guaranteed for one-year, including parts and labor.

Easy to use

From simple arithmetic to complex equations, the SR-10 is easy to use—even if you've never used a calculator or slide rule before. Just press the keys the same way you say the problem.

Order direct from Texas Instruments

Order yours now. Don't settle for less, and don't pay more. No other calculator offers you more for your money than the SR-10—and it's built to last, by the leader in solid-state electronics.

Get yourself an SR-10 and get the most out of your studies. Then use it the way you'll use your other educational investments—in your career. An SR-10 will serve you well for a long time.

Sex Talk Shows Bring Controversy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Communications Commission says it has been flooded for several months with mail demanding that the FCC halt the spreading sex talk radio shows.

These are programs with such names as "Feminine Forum" and "Girls", on which the interviewer, usually a man, chats with unidentified women who telephone in and discuss intimate details of their sex lives.

There are a few shows for men callers, usually moderated by women.

"We're really in the middle of this," said a member of the FCC's Complaints and Compliance Division.

A basic issue arising most complaints notes that the Communications Act prohibits the commission from censoring what is broadcast, but it says the commission can rule a station or revoke its license upon eventual conviction of offering obscene, indecent or profane language.

It promises that the FCC will look into complaints for a possible repository use now in the courts.

Meanwhile, the letter urges concerned persons to express their views to the stations and networks.

The complaining letters, not hidden as rule or two-line at some stations, these contain petitions with several pages of signatures, a large number are apparently form-type letters prompted by church and other groups. The FCC officials said the letters have dropped off in volume a bit recently.

Some of the letter writers stand up for the broadcasts, but mostly after a station has taken the program off the air in response to local outcries.

The dominant theme of the protests is that children can tune in, particularly since some stations carry the programs during the day. Some writers say they shouldn't be heard by adults, much less children.

The letters use such descriptives as "vile," "degenerate," "indecent," "poor taste," and one said, "Our country is fast sinking into a moral cesspool."

This type of program was started over a year ago by Bill Ballance of Los Angeles station KGBS. He has been syndicated since on several other stations under the title "Feminine Forum". The FCC officials said they do not know how many stations now carry such shows for local call-ins.

The format is to have a different subject on each broadcast with such questions as: "How many times a week do you make love?"

Extension Of No-Fault Hits Industry Opposition

BOSTON (AP)-An extension of the no-fault auto insurance law which Insurance Commissioner John Ryan says could save Massachusetts consumers $10 million a year ran into industry opposition at a State House hearing Tuesday.

Ryan urged the Joint Committee on Insurance to report favorably a bill designed to eliminate duplicate medical benefits in auto accident cases.

Ryan called the bill "no gap coverage." He said the bill would prevent persons from recovering on both accident insurance and health insurance for the same injuries.

He said the plan should lower auto insurance rates for bodily injury coverage by 10 per cent.

While consumers can now elect an auto insurance option that eliminates duplicate health coverage, Ryan said, few persons are aware of it.

So long as it is a matter of choice, Ryan said, the insurance sale system will work against the elimination of duplicate coverage.

Ryan's proposal was supported by Henry B. Tyson, president of Massachusetts Blue Cross. Tyson said the plan would not increase Blue Cross rates but would not reduce auto premiums such rate factor by the commission.

Representatives of the auto insurance industry are opposed to the proposal as offered by Ryan but in favor of a similar bill which would make auto insurers the "prime insurer" for medical benefits under the policies.

Ryan's bill would make health insurers the "prime insurers."

Joseph Duggan Jr., representing the American Mutual Insurance Alliance, spoke a study claiming "people want a duplication of benefits. Your Massachusetts consumers have responded by not opting for single coverage. They've made fully aware of that option by all companies.

High School Counselors To Meet Here

The College of Arts and Sciences Information and Advising Center (CASIAC) and the Undergraduate Advising Office of the School of Education are sponsoring a two-day conference for a selected group of high school counselors from Massachusetts, Thursday and Friday, March 8th and 9th.

As part of the Conference work, there will be an opportunity for the high school counselors to meet with former students from their high schools who are presently attending UMass. This part of the program will be from 3:30 to 4:45, Thursday afternoon in Room 163 of the Campus Center. Students from the following Massachusetts high schools who would like to meet with their former high school counselors to discuss what problems or pleasures they have had while at UMass are urged to attend this session of the conference.

Specifically, former students of the following high schools are welcome: Chatham High School, Chelsea, Duxbury, Groton, Hampshire Regional, Holbrook, Millbury, Monument Mountain Regional, Pioneer Valley, North Attleboro, North Reading, Norwell, Norwood, Plymouth-Carver, Scituate, Shrewsbury, Springfield (Classical), Springfield (Technical), Stoneham, Tantasqua Regional, Wellesley, Weston and Westwood.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

The Gemini sense of humor can be contagious. Teachers know that the Gemini child is restless, requires challenge and is capable of creating an atmosphere of trivolity. The Gemini woman is flirtatious and the Gemini man is dashing and unique. In 1973, many born under this intriguing zodiacal sign will develop a personal philosphy which encompasses a wide range of human experience. The Gemini who is single will have opportunity for marriage. Married or single, a significant number of those born under this sign will change residence.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Money and friendship do not now make a good combination. Separate fact from fancy. Make changes which could involve travel, special relationship. Be analytical. Put together puzzle pieces. You will obtain answers.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Cycle is high and your judgment is on target. One who appears to be blocking your path may actually be making room for you. Know it and keep open mind. Sagittarian could play important role. Set sights on ultimate goal.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be selective. There are many choices: key is to choose the best, the quality. Correspondence can be exciting. Good news comes from afar. Pisces is apt to be in picture. Shake off fears, doubts.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Money situation improves. You get wind of financial opportunity. Be receptive to voice of experience. Older individual does have your best interests at heart. Respond accordingly. Capricorn could be involved.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are able to reach more persons as distribution problem is resolved. You draw many to you with their problems. Be sympathetic but don't become inextricably involved. A good contract is offered. Study it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Ideas can be developed into workable concepts. Leo is in picture. Be independent without being arrogant. Problem with member of opposite sex is resolved. Accent is on utilization of creative resources.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Relationships are intensified. Nothing occurs halfway. Don't promise more than you can deliver. Take inventory. Aquarian plays prominent role. Learn by teaching. Means share knowledge, exchange ideas.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Leave details for another time. View projects as a whole. Social contact can lead to meaningful relationship. Be receptive and versatile. Sense of humor becomes ally. Be willing to laugh at your own foibles.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Check fine points. Basic issues dominate. Relative conveys good news. Celebrate without going to extremes. Remember diet, health resolutions. Avoid extravagance. Your frankness, honesty will be rewarded.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Gain shown through relationship with opposite sex. Personal magnetism soars. Persons you respect are drawn to you. Profit results from special transaction. Gemini, Virgo persons figure prominently.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Aid is received from surprise source. One you may have thought to be ultraconservative bends backward to see your point of view. Accept conciliatory gesture. Be grateful without being simpering.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Light touch should be advocated. You get what you need if you tread softly. Some relatives are supersensitive. Avoid complications. Go slowly: see situation as it actually exists. Clandestine meeting is on agenda.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you know how to make money but you are not as skillful when it comes to saving. You give of yourself in affairs of heart and you attract many only too willing to take without giving in return. Many Capricorns seem to gravitate to you. April could be one of your most significant months of 1973.

Gymnasts Enter Easterns Tied For 2nd

1972 Championships, could get a chance in the finals.

Next in the official order of the events is parallel bars, another event which will most likely be dominated by Penn State gymnasts. Temple's Musy might look good (he scored well at UMass last Friday) and UMass could see excellent results from Gene Whelan and Junior Co-captain Steve Scuderi. Both should be instrumental in boosting UMass' chances to keep the second place spot they now hold.

Anyone who has seen a UMass men's gymnastics meet will testify to the importance of the horizontal bar. This is the event which could see three Minutemen in the finals. Spier and Whelan are experts on the event while Steve Scuderi could hit one of the top three spots if he executes three good routines. Navy's Jacobson could be right up there on top but, again, Penn State is expected to dominate.

About the Easterns, and his team, twenty-three year old rookie Coach Tom Dunn had this to say: "We've been training fairly hard since school began in September, straight through intersession and a 12 meet schedule. I feel we peaked both physically and mentally for the Temple meet last Friday, after six months of hard work, so we've taken it easy these last few days in hopes of riding our peak through the weekend and clinching 2nd place in a very tough League. Win, lose, or draw, I'll be satisfied with the season. I feel the guys have given me their best effort, and I'm sure they will again this weekend; I can't ask for more."

All-in-all, Championships are usually the high point of any gymnast's career and if any of you are in Philly this weekend, Temple's the place. 7:00 p.m. Friday and 2:00 p.m. Saturday.

Captain Tom McLaughlin
A Transfer Who Made It

By BOB ESTELLE

"If I could write a script to highlight Tommy McLaughlin's basketball career, it would be playing Notre Dame in the NIT on St. Patrick's Day, as his brother, Frank, is Digger Phelps' assistant there." Those are the words of Jack Leaman as he speaks about the ballplayer whom he feels is most responsible for the great success the cagers have had this season. "He's been the best captain I've ever had. More than anyone else, he is most responsible for this team being 19-6 after being 7-6 in the middle of the season. His overall attitude towards success, his desire to be a winner and his ability to unite the sophomores and the upperclassmen at a time when things looked dark, created a positive attitude and enabled us to go on a long win streak."

Tom hails from the Bronx and came to UMass via the University of Tennessee. Circumstances made him decide to transfer here and since then, he has come to love the campus, the people here, the New England atmosphere, and he has been able to form close relationships with his teammates, past and present.

"The guys are really tremendous. For a transfer, trying to break into the lineup, it's a really difficult thing to do because you didn't come here originally and it can be difficult to be accepted. But it's probably one of the good things about the guys. They accepted me as though I originally came here."

"This team has been the closest I've ever been on. The sophomores, the seniors and the juniors get along great. Our personalities really blend together but it allows us to keep our individuality. The same goes for off the court as well. We hang around together and we try to help each other out. I feel that there's no real prejudice on the team at all between blacks and whites and as far as I'm concerned, I look at the individual and not his color. There's no race problem on the team and color makes no difference to any of us."

"I really have enjoyed being the team captain, especially since we're winning. Last year we were 14-12, the year before 23-4 and it's nice to go out on a winning note. As far as being elected captain, it's a real honor since I am a transfer student and didn't come here as a freshman. They could have chosen Charlie Peters, Tom Austin or even Chuck Olsen and it wouldn't have made any difference. But it shows what kind of character the team has by choosing somebody that transferred."

Tom is a political science major who takes academics very seriously. "As far as myself goes, academics are important because I feel that if you don't develop your mind, you're not going to become a complete person. UMass is a fine academic institution and I've really used the University to become aware. I feel that a college degree is more important than playing basketball. It's experiencing things outside of athletics that help you grow as an individual."

As a senior, Tom is starting to plan for the future. Tom would like to coach on the college level. "I want to go into coaching because I feel it's an exciting life but I don't know exactly what I'm going to do yet. I'll have to wait until May or June when coaches start looking for assistants. I recently talked to Coach Leaman about the possibility of going to several different schools as a graduate assistant. I really want to coach and I don't want to get stuck on the high school level. I'd like to start in at the college level."

Tom also has the following reflections about his career here at UMass. "Some of the best times I've ever had have been playing basketball here at UMass. The fans are really great. They're the best in New England and one of the best in the country. You have to admit that the Cage has an atmosphere all its own when it's filled to capacity, but the students deserve much better. For three years now, I've just heard talk and haven't seen any real steps taken to get the students a new facility. Not just for sports but for concerts and visiting speakers. This University should have a hockey rink and an indoor arena--not built for now, but for the future. As for moving to the Civic Center in Springfield, it's a beautiful place but the students shouldn't have a home game taken from their campus because of the lack of a large facility. The students here are not so athletically-inclined that they would travel 25 to 30 miles to see a college basketball or hockey game unless it's like the NIT. The UMass community is pro-UMass sports but they shouldn't have to travel to see a home game. This University needs an athletic complex that can serve all 22,000 students and not just serve the varsity athlete."

The big question going around campus, now that it's definite that UMass has an NIT berth, is just how well can they do this time. Tom has the following comments on the trip and what it means to the team: "The NIT will give us a chance to play against top-notch teams from all over the country and prove that we're just as good as they are. It's a good opportunity for UMass to get much needed publicity for academics and athletics. The two times we went down there before, the team was kinda scared about playing the likes of Marquette and North Carolina. Now, we feel we can do down there and beat anybody."

But the best thing that anyone can say about Tom McLaughlin comes from his coach, Jack Leaman. "The nicest thing I can say about him is that he's a gentleman in every sense of the word and a tremendous credit to his family, his school and himself. I feel fortunate that I've had the opportunity to work with such an outstanding young man."

Gymnasts "B" Team Takes N.E. Second

While the men's varsity gymnastics team was busy recovering from their great win over Temple University and preparing themselves for this weekend's Eastern Championships, the "B" team traveled to Lowell, Mass. Saturday to represent UMass in the New England Championships. With the likes of standouts Aronstein, Spier, Seikunas, Thomsen, Berner, Whelan and Scuderi still in Amherst it was up to the J.V. team led by sophomore all-around man Bill Brouillet to challenge the Varsity Teams of Springfield College, Boston State College, Dartmouth, Lowell Tech, University of New Hampshire, and the University of Vermont in the battle for New England supremacy. Coach Dunn decided to save his top men for the more competitive "Easterns", since his best team had easily defeated all those entered in the New Englands. The meet, instead, would be the toughest of the season for his undefeated "B" team.

Phil Aubrey, Jack Fabbricante, and Bill Brouillet started the team off with a very respectable 25.4 in Free Exercise. In the second event of the morning, Pommel Horse, the Minutemen again looked like a Varsity team with top performances from Brian Hassig, Steve Nelson, and Roy Johnson. On Still Rings UMass almost edged out the powerful Springfield Varsity with great routines from Captain Jim Battista, Bruce Mawhinney and Brouillet. At the halfway point the team was just off a 150 team score pace and had Springfield College on the edge of their seats.

In the remaining three events they continued in top form, but just didn't have the talent to stay with Springfield's Varsity. With top performances by Fabbricante, Johnson, Jon Brandon and Brouillet in Vaulting; Johnson, Earl Roy and Brouillet on Horizontal Bar; and Mike Myers, Tim Beasley and Brouillet on Parallel Bars the Minutemen finished a strong second to Springfield, defeating Boston State, who took third by more than 4 full points.

UMass was well represented in the individual finals Saturday night, but could not come up with any champions. Bill Brouillet, however, did take the runner-up spot on the Parallel Bars, thirds in the All-Around and Still Rings, and a fifth in Free Exercise. Junior Brian Hassig took a fourth in the stiff competition on the Pommel Horse. Jim Battista came up with a fifth on the Still Rings, and Jack Fabbricante rounded out the UMass collection of medals with a sixth in Long Horse Vaulting. Under the circumstances, UMass' second place finish in the New England Championships must be considered a superior team effort, and a promise for a great future for the sport of gymnastics at UMass.

Bowdoin Stomps Minutemen, 9-3

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

"Goodbye UMass, goodbye UMass," chanted the exuberant Bowdoin College hockey fans at Orr Rink last night, after watching their Polar Bears totally humiliate the UMass hockey team on their way to a 9-3 rout. The Bowdoin fans will now usher their team up to Burlington, Vermont, and a clash with the Catamounts of Vermont in a game which will decide the ECAC Division II championship.

For the UMass hockey squad, the game marks the end of a long season, filled with ups and downs, good and bad performances, finishing with a game which in no way they deserved to win.

You couldn't fault any single individual or group of individuals for the horrendous UMass performance. It was a team effort as they were thoroughly manhandled by a well-drilled Bowdoin sextet.

The Polar Bears caught the Minutemen out of position time and time again, coming down the ice with man-advantage breakaways. On the other hand, the Polar Bears were set defensively for anything the Minutemen could fire at them, as they quickly got back on defense and were awaiting the Minutemen when they infiltrated the Bowdoin end of the rink. Illustrating this pattern of play, the Polar Bears were able to capitalize on a large percentage of their scoring opportunities while the Minutemen were not.

The stars for Bowdoin were numerous but Fred Green and Rich Donovan stood out among a large group.

The sophomore Green was masterful in the Bowdoin net, stifling the Minutemen attack early, giving the offense a chance to build up an early lead. Once the lead was mounted, Green didn't let up. Watching Green brought back memories of the way Chicky Rheault played net for UMass before his motorcycle mishap.

Donovan, the captain and team leader, had three assists to go along with his hat-trick for a good, honest night's work.

For all intents and purposes, the game was decided in the first period, when the Minutemen offense was alive but couldn't beat Green while falling behind 3-0.

The offense was alive for half of the second period, but if there was any doubt as to the outcome at this time, Donovan opened the envelope with the decision as he scored two goals within a three minute span. The Minutemen finally responded as Jimmy Coleman tipped home a Don Lowe slapshot at 17:04 and UMass was down 5-1.

A rash of penalties in the first half of the third period hurt the home team as the frustration began to show. Bowdoin capitalized well; tallying four goals, two within nine seconds of each other, to run the tab to 9-1.

Chico Shea culminated a good playoff series for him with a late goal. Lonnie Avery also scored for UMass to close out the scoring. Bowdoin 9, UMass 3.

The Minutemen close out their season with a 12-5-2 mark in Division II and an overall record of 12-11-2.

Next year we won't be seeing the magic of Pat Keenan, the rough checking of Don Riley and sturdy defensive work of Bob "Yogi" Shilalie and Don Lowe, nor the likes of Lonnie Avery, Chico Shea, or John Kiah. They will go into UMass hockey history, all members of that Division II championship team of 1972.

Gymnasts Off To Easterns

The Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics finals are being held this weekend at Temple University in Philadelphia. UMass Coach Tom Dunn and his twelve varsity men left yesterday in hopes of retaining the second place standing they now share with Temple and Navy. Penn State will win the championship, as in years past. But it's a toss-up who will take second. In addition to these teams, Cornell, Springfield College, Army, Syracuse and Pittsburgh will also compete this weekend.

In terms of individual competition, too, Penn State should do well, having men favored in all events. But, there will be surprises. On the floor, Temple has several fine competitors and should give Penn State's Marshall Avener a tough time. Tumbling is probably UMass' worst event and Jay Thompson, UMass' best floor man all year, would have to do exceptionally well to get into the finals.

Side-horse promises to be an excellent event. The caliber of competition here has improved substantially in the East this year. Eric Swanson of Navy is highly favored as he won the event last year and placed second in the nation. UMass hit quite well against Temple last week on the horse and this could help their standings.

UMass can be expected to end up on top on the still rings event. Senior Co-captain Jay Aronstein, who was third last year, should come up with the title this year. He has been the most consistent competitor in the East and has high national ratings. Jay's toughest competitors will probably be Penn State's Jim Kruest and Marshall Avener. UMass will most likely have Senior Dan Spier in the finals, too. Spier was sixth last year in the event. The top three men in the East on each event will travel to the Nationals in Eugene, Oregon.

Another extremely high quality event will be vaulting. The long horse is typically a piece where high scores can often be earned and the Minutemen have two men consistently in the nines. The biggest UMass threat is young Jack Fabbricante who could easily make the finals. Jay Thomsen also, who won a sixth place medal at the

Amato, Ireland Enter Wrestling National

By JOHN BOCK

About the only thing that can be said before the start of the 1973 NCAA National Collegiate Wrestling Championships is that the guy who beats Iowa State's defending Heavyweight Champ, Chris Taylor, will be the biggest newsmaker in the sports world.

Would you believe that person might be UMass heavyweight New England Champ George Ireland? Well, maybe not, but Ireland at a solid 225 pounds stands about as good a chance as anyone against the 420 pound Taylor.

Ireland has been joined by the other Minutemen NEUWA Champ, 118 pounder Dave Amato in a trip that will take them to the University of Washington's Edmund Pavilion as the Washington Huskies host 350 of the best wrestlers in the nation for the national title.

Wrestling starts this afternoon at 1:00 on eight mats (4:00 Amherst time) and sees three other national champs in the battle to defend their title. Tom Milkovich, Michigan State's defending 142 pound champ and four time Big 10 titlist will be seeking his second and last championship. Milkovich was undefeated this year and is the top seed. Washington manages to have one of its own sons going for his second title at 177 in Bill Murdock. Murdock is a lot less than undefeated this year as he has been beat several times by Oregon State's Jim Crumly. Small College Champ Wade Schalles, from Clarion State of Pa., will be seeking his second straight University title. Last year Schalles was the Outstanding Wrestler in the National Championships and was also the winner of the NCAA Small College National, at 150 lbs., plus being the Pennsylvania State College Champ at 158. He was undefeated in every effort this season and scored more falls than any of the other defending titlists except Taylor.

Amato will have his work cut out for him if he meets any of, who this writer calls, the Big 5. These include Arizona's third place finisher in '72 Dale Brumit, Oregon State's Tom Phillips, Iowa State's sixth place man Dan Sherman, and the National Runnerup from Oklahoma U., Gary Breece. These guys all wrestle the toughest schedule in the nation and that gives them an advantage over Amato. Dave will have to depend on his super single leg and exceptional riding ability if he meets one of these boys. He definitely will give everyone a full eight minute match and may catch a few kids on conditioning.

Ireland doesn't have it easy either, with or without Taylor. Tom Hazell of Michigan State has shown a lot this year as a Frosh. Dave Graves of Washington is also a tough customer. One would be amiss if they left out the guy who has probably wrestled Taylor more in the last two years than anyone and that is Hofstra's Joel Kislin. George's best assets are a good defense and a good drag to a double leg takedown. His other asset is the fact that he has the best heavyweight coach in the nation in Homer Barr. If George meets Big Chris what will he do? "Well for the one thing I sure won't try to go under him and then I hope to get the top position in the second period. But I ain't afraid of him. I have as good a chance as anyone."

Minutewomen Tourney Bound

By DIANE BISSONNETTE

Co-captains Marilyn Ritz and Beth Fay will be leading the UMass Women's Basketball team into tournament play against Ithaca this afternoon at Northeastern University.

The Northeast Women's Intercollegiate Basketball Tournament consists of teams from the whole of New England and New York. The top two teams who will last until Saturday will qualify for the Nationals.

Although UMass is ranked fifth, Coach Jane Farr looked optimistic yesterday anticipating the upcoming game. "If we can get by Ithaca, I think we'll beat the winner of the Worcester State-Plymouth game and go on to give Queen's (top seed in the tournament) a good game. The first problem is not to look too far ahead to Queen's, but first beat Ithaca."

High scorers on the team are senior co-captain Beth Fay, averaging 8 points and Jenny Edminster, a freshman, shooting 13 points per game. Pat Glispin, top rebounder, has been averaging 7 points.

With only three returning players from last year's team and a good number of freshmen, the Women's basketball team has upped its season record to 8-3, a great improvement over last year's 1-9 campaign.

Coach Farr's starting line for today's 5:30 tap-off will be forwards Beth Fay and Jenny Edminster; at guard, Marilyn Ritz and freshman Joanne Smith. Starting center for the game is Pat Glispin.

If the Minutewomen come off of today's match victorious, they will face either Worcester or Plymouth Friday morning at 11:00 in Boston.

Fac.-Sen. Approves Practicums

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD

The Faculty Senate last night approved a one to 15 credit "practicum" course under which students could earn inter-departmental credit for educational experience outside the University.

In the meeting, the senate also discussed faculty parking problems and the fire hazards of campus high-rise buildings.

Concerning parking, requests to remove meters and change present 'no parking' zones were made by Senators Mario S. Depillis and Donald F. St. Mary, in two separate motions.

Senator Depillis' motion called attention to the parking area around Haigis Mall and the abolishment of former parking spaces by the installation of two zone signs. It was alleged that now a serious parking shortage resulted from these acts.

Several amendments were offered to this motion including changing the present system a lot assignment to one of "first come, first served" on selected central campus lots. Such a move, according to Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert W. Gage, would result in chaos.

Another amendment to refer this motion to the Transportation and Parking Council was defeated. The Council is made up of faculty, student, and staff representatives who present proposals to the administration.

After a hand count vote, Senator Depillis' motion was defeated.

Parking around Arnold House was the concern of Senator St. Mary's motion, which resulted from grievances voiced by the Math Department. The whole matter of faculty parking was then referred to the Rules Committee, whose chairman said that a change in the status of the Transportation and Parking Council was pending in his committee's revision of the Fac.-Sen. Constitution and by-laws.

University Health Services next presented their study of fire hazards in the high-rise buildings on the UMass campus. All these buildings were declared to meet the minimum standards for safety and fire resistant construction, with special protective measures being incorporated in the newer buildings.

However, to improve the 'life safety systems' in some buildings, suggestions were offered by Health Services which included upgrading communications systems in Southwest and Orchard Hill dorms, installing communications systems in the Sylvan area, and studying the feasibility of sprinkler systems in selected buildings.

Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery added that funds in the proposed 1974 fiscal budget would allow for the construction of a new Amherst fire station equipped with high-rise fire fighting apparatus. This would insure increased building safety for the campus.

No motions were presented with the Health Services report, so no vote was taken on the matter at this time.

With the passage of the Academic Matters proposal for a one to 15 credit 'practicum,' students may soon be able to earn inter-departmental credit for educational experiences outside of the University.

Such credit would be awarded on a pass-fail basis and students would be required to petition for the opportunity to participate in the program.

As the last matter of business, a Rules Committee motion was passed to endorse the principle of certain recommendations of the Health Council for re-constituting itself.

The meeting was adjourned and is scheduled to reconvene on March 15.

Cease-fire Violated

Indian Talks Continue

By F. RICHARD CICCONE
Associated Press Writer

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (AP) — Negotiations between militant Indians and government officials resumed Thursday night and a cease-fire has been declared, the Justice Department announced.

Methodist Bishop James A. Armstrong of Aberdeen, S.D., one of the mediators, said, however, that gunfire had occurred in the Wounded Knee area after the cease-fire took effect at 7 p.m. EST. He gave no further details.

Government officials would not comment on the reported gunshots, although about a dozen FBI agents wearing flak jackets and carrying automatic weapons were seen rushing from a command post at nearby Pine Ridge soon after the cease-fire began.

Federal spokesman here and in Washington declined further comment on he talks, which were being held after passage of a deadline for the Indians to abandon their 10-day siege of this historic hamlet without facing arrest.

The resumption of negotiations came as the Justice Department pledged to seek an end to the confrontation without violence and as lawyers representing the protesters exressed optimism that progress was being made.

In a statement earlier in the evening, a Justice Department official said the demonstrators would be prosecuted but indicated the government would not try to retake the hamlet by force.

Ralph E. Erickson, special assistant to the attorney general who represented the Justice Department at Wounded Knee, said in Washington that with the passage of the 8 p.m. EST deadline, non-residents of the village became subject to arrest should they attempt to leave.

"We must enforce the law, and that we will do," Erickson said.

"This does not mean we will move into Wounded Knee tonight," he added. He urged the militant Indians who took over the historic community 10 days ago to "lay down their arms and come out during daylight hours. They will be arrested, but no one will be hurt."

The protestors, led by the American Indian Movement, had charged that imposition of the Thursday night deadline amounted to a threat that the village would be attacked.

Erickson said the government wants "to terminate the tense and dangerous situation without violence," but would not agree to the Indians' demand that the president of the tribal council at Pine Ridge Reservation be removed.

He said that with expiration of the deadline, "those who have committed violations of law at Wounded Knee are now subject to arrest and arraignment."

The government had said that anyone who chose to leave the village before 8 p.m. would be required only to surrender weapons and to identify himself. It emphasized, however, that criminal charges stemming from the protest might be filed by a special grand jury called to consider the case.

Erickson's comments came after clergymen and lawyers mediating the confrontation offered new peace proposals to both sides, and there were indications that progress was being made.

One 15-point peace plan was offered by clergymen from the National Council of Churches and was favored by the Indians.

The proposal included a cease-fire at 7 p.m. EST, one hour before the time set by the Justice Department for the Indians to leave the village unarmed or face mass arrests.

The spokesman for the clergymen, Bishop James Armstrong of the Dakotas United Methodist church, said AIM leaders were willing to accept the proposal and government officials had reacted positively.

Russell Means, an AIM leader, said the Indians are in favor of the proposal from the clergymen. "This puts the burden of renewing the negotiations back where it belongs, on the government," he said.

Armstrong said the plan included supervision by the clergymen of the cease-fire and provision of food and supplies for the Indians who remain in the village, plus food and housing for those who leave.

He said the proposal calls for the disarming of the Indian leaders in the camp if the federal government agrees to top-level investigations of their grievances.

As the deadline approached, the situation at this Sioux village of 200 residents remained tense. An estimated 40 Indians slipped past government lines into the village late Wednesday and early Thursday.

An FBI agent, one of an estimated 300 federal lawmen with automatic rifles posted on a perimeter a few miles from Wounded Knee, said it was impossible to stop the passage of Indians to and from the village during darkness. "We can't stop them all," he said.

Boyden Buys More Than Sneakers

By DON GLICKSTEIN

The following is the fourth in a series of articles on the Athletic Department and athletics at UMass.)

The Athletic Department takes care of its own, and it uses student money.

Other University departments pass the hat to buy coffee for employees; workers in the Provost's Office, for example, must pay $3.00 a month.

The Athletic Department uses student athletic fees to finance its coffee interludes. This kind of practice, "generally speaking", is illegal, according to Stanley Stanwick of the State Auditor's Office.

Flowers

Last fiscal year, more than $283 was spent from the Athletic Trust Fund for flowers from Jeffrey Florists in Amherst.

The flowers were sent, according to Athletic Department Financial Manager Aloysius Rufe, to sick employees of the department. This policy, he said, has been eliminated "to some extent" this year.

Chewing Gum

Employees are not the only beneficiaries of student athletic fees.

Athletes, for example, get free chewing gum and oranges, beyond what is given out at their meals. In the 1971-72 season, for example, $128 worth of chewing gum was ordered, and on 6 separate days alone, $180 of oranges were purchased from Louis Foods in Amherst.

Chewing gum and orange eating is a practice not limited to UMass, according to Financial Manager Rufe. "It's done in most sports", he said, during half-times and after the game. He noted that it was a reciprocal practice, that UMass shares its refreshments with opposing teams, and that the opposition does the same for UMass.

Blue Ribbons

If a UMass varsity athlete does well, as evidenced by playing minutes, performance, or the coach's discretion, he is rewarded with gifts purchased from student athletic fees.

Beginning this past fall, UMass lettermen had a choice of a letter sweater, a "hip-length lined jacket", or, according to Athletic Council minutes, a "polished pewter mug", each costing an average of $15. By the end of this school year, if figures for past years remain constant, 240 athletes will receive these gifts.

For baseball, basketball, football, and hockey alone, awards cost over $2000 last year.

Assistant Athletic Director Robert O'Connell said that in an effort to reduce costs, awards are given to lettermen only on the first and third times they are eligible.

All lettermen from UMass Yankee championship teams of the 1968-69 season received, in addition to sweaters, watches. The Athletic Council halted this practice the next year because of the expense.

Barbers

More than $215,000 was distributed from the Barber Athletic Scholarship Fund last school year. "Barbers", as the scholarships are called, are financed chiefly through ticket sales and dormitory vending machine receipts.

This aid was not distributed on the basis of need, but on the basis of potential athletic performance.

Although Yankee Conference university presidents, including UMass President Robert Wood, voted last year in favor of the principle of granting scholarships solely on the basis of need, the Jan. 1973 National Collegiate Athletic Association convention voted against the principle.

UMass will abide by the NCAA ruling according to Athletic Department officials.

"To go need in advance of national action", Athletic Council minutes state, "will make it impossible to continue to compete with the Ivies and other non-conference teams . . ."

Half of all non-athletic scholarship applicants—those students in financial need—were denied aid this year, according to Lynn Santner of the Financial Aid Office, and almost half of those who received aid got half of what they were eligible for.

Women's Day Gets It On

By BILL BALLOU

It apparently was a helluva good time.

"It" was yesterday's Women's International Day celebration, and according to several participants and women involved in the campus women's movement, a good time was what it was all about.

Gail Sullivan, who participated in almost all the day's events, called the day "a big success" and said that "everything went off well."

Ms. Sullivan added that "enjoyment" was what the day was all about. "I think everyone had a great time," she said. "At least everybody that I saw did."

"And I guess, that's how you judge its success. After all, it was supposed to be a celebration."

The noisiest part of the day had to be Deadly Nightshade, a three-woman band that played in the Campus Center Auditorium at intervals from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m.

Ms. Sullivan estimated that at various times about 1000 people wandered in and out of the Auditorium. Early in the afternoon, she said, there were up to 400 people in the Auditorium.

This reporter wandered in around 2 p.m. to listen to Dealy Nightshade, and at that time there were around 200 people there.

A crowd of 40 people was right in front of the stage, with people dancing singly, in pairs, and in large groups. The rest of the crowd was dispersed throughout the Auditorium, with a good number standing around by the walls just listening.

About one-third of those present in the afternoon activities consisted of various speeches by Women's Movement activists. The speakers included Ruth Getz, Kathleen Reardon, Zoe Best, and Cathy Corbett.

Mary Smith spoke at the Women's International Day Rally in the Campus Center Auditorium. The program was considered a huge success by all. (MDC Photo by Kevin Mack)

At 6 p.m. in the Webster House lounge there was a communal supper which was followed by a talk-slide show presented by Marnie Resner. Her topic was "Women in China."

Ms. Sullivan was ennusiastic about possibilities for future Women's Day celebrations.

"Why not," she said. "That'd be great. A party every March 8th."

Contaminated Foods Recalled By FDA

WASHINGTON (AP)—A nationwide recall of 6,000 cases of canned mushrooms contaminated with bacteria was announced Thursday by the Food and Drug Administration.

Only about 500 cases, each containing 24 4-ounce cans of Fred's Fresh Grown Sliced Whole Mushrooms, were believed to remain in wholesale and retail channels when the recall began Feb. 22, the FDA said.

The recall involves all lots shipped since last July by Fred Mushroom Products Co., South Lebanon, Ohio.

An FDA inspector discovered swollen cans on retail shelves, an indication of bacterial action. The FDA emphasized that there was no evidence of deadly botulism.

Last month, about 8,000 cases of mushrooms packed by the United Canning Corp., East Palestine, Ohio, were recalled because of botulism.

TM Lecture For Vets

Edward Deyesso, teacher of Transcendental Meditation (TM), has offered to give an introductory lecture to the veterans, on Wednesday from 8:00-9:00 p.m., at the Colonial Lounge, Student Union.

He will emphasize TM as a means of "relief from intense experience of the past which have continued to disrupt both body and mind."

This should not imply that only those with combat experience can benefit by TM. They may have a greater necessity for it, "but all of us have accumulated a fair amount of stress in our private lives as well."

Aside from that there is "the 85% of the brain which in the average man does not develop unless he is engaged in some practice of mind expansion."

This practice, he says, offers "not only unfoldment of full mental potential, but eliminates stresses accumulated in the past, greater charity of mind, improves ability to concentrate, increases stability, and calmness."

"TM is a simple but profound technique which expands mind and heart in a natural spontaneous way," he says. "It is practiced regularly, for twenty minutes daily. To learn one must only be able to think a thought."

So put aside any misgivings, and sit in. It could be what you're looking for.

Women's Symposium At Orchard Hill

In the hope of furthering women's understanding of their sisters throughout the world, the Orchard Hill Women's Center will sponsor a symposium on "Women in the World". This event will be held March 17, at Field Dormitory. Workshops will be conducted from 10:30 A.M. to 4:30 P.M. These will include women from countries in revolution, Pan-African countries, Eastern countries, and western countries. Everyone is invited to attend. Further details, including specific times will be announced shortly.

Navy Settles Contracts

By FRED S. HOFFMAN
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Navy announced Thursday night a compromise settlement of its contract with the Grumman Aerospace Corp. under which the firm will produce 48 more new F14 fighter planes without a price increase.

However, the agreement opens the way for future price increases if additional F14s are built.

The Navy and the company have been at loggerheads for months over the Navy's insistance that Grumman must abide by the terms of the 1969 contract without a price increase, and the company's insistance that it could not build any more F14s without suffering financial losses.

Bus Drivers Training

The Student Senate Transit Service will be training students for Class II Drivers Licenses, so that they may qualify to drive in the Fall '73 semester. Qualifications are:

1. A member of class year 74, 75, 76 only.
2. Hold a Class II Learners Permit.
3. Should have experience on buses, trucks or standard-shift vehicles.

All qualified personnel are asked to attend a meeting in Room 424-426 Student Union on Wed., March 14, 1973 at 6:30 p.m.

A ten-speed Raleigh Grand Prix was awarded Tuesday night to Leo H. Pinard, a UMass student, in a raffle sponsored by the Recreational Society of the Dept. of Leisure Services and Studies. The bike was donated by Bike Broker, Inc. of Northampton. (MDC Photo by John Jarosz)

Food Services Board

Students, Yes; Stoneham, No

By MARK B. CITRON

A plan providing for a board of directors to control University Food Services was the topic of an early morning meeting by the Senate Rents and Fees Committee and the University Food Services. The plan provides for direct control of Food Services through a board of directors appointed by the President of the Student Government Association.

Joel Stoneham, Director of University Food Services, said, "I see no need for the board. We are experts, and you (students) are not." Stoneham clarified his position by saying "...with responsibility goes liability. Students should not have libility of $6-1/2 million business," and "if I make a mistake, then I'll get fired. I've got a hell of a lot more at stake...than 9 students."

Steve VonLichtenberg of Rents and Fees debated Stoneham about the purpose of the board. VonLichtenberg said the board will provide "valid student input" which "should be done right now." VonLichtenberg felt that "amateur status" should not be used as an argument against student control. "The U.S. government has a $283 billion budget and is essentially run by amateurs," VonLichtenberg told Stoneham.

A member of the Rents and Fees Committee felt that they were hitting a "brick wall". Joe Smith, a member of Rents and Fees, said, "Stoneham is setting the atmosphere for its (student food services board) own failure."

Mike Gregory, Chairperson of the Rents and Fees Committee said Stoneham "...wants to be responsible for credit or blame. As a professional, he does have that right."

The provisions of the bill provide the Board with power to:

---determine policy;
---interpret complaints of students and formulate solutions;
---review of Food Services operation budget.

Art Warren, assistant to Stoneham said, the new Board will make "too many bosses. No one wants to work for a 9 member student council," said Warren.

Members of Rents and Fees felt the absence of "student feedback" was a "major problem in the present system."

The present "food services is a total farce...it is worthless," said a past member of the Food Services Committee and present member of Rents and Fees.

World's Fair Scheduled

Arts and crafts exhibits, national foods, and clothing will be on sale at the Second Annual International Fair, scheduled in the Student Union Ballroom, today and Saturday, from 1 p.m. until midnight. Countries to be represented at the fair include India, Pakistan, China, Japan, Greece, and Western European, Latin American and Arab nations.

In addition to continuous entertainment, information on travel and study abroad will be available and several films and slide shows will be shown. A cash bar will be selling beer, wine and soft drinks.

Admission to the fair is free, but contributions for an emergency fund for foreign students and for scholarships will be accepted. Donors eligible for door prizes.

The American booth will run a thrift shop, a "Gay 90's" display and will participate in the Friday evening fashion show. The Center for International Education will organize games for non-formal education concerning cross-cultural communications.

Here is an entertainment schedule for the two-day period:

FRIDAY

1:00 Dr. Frederick Tillis: University Jazz Workshop
2:00 Rhythmic Scandinavian Gymnastics

4:00 Five College Folk Dancers
5:00 Arab Students' Dance "Debke"
7:30 International Folk Dancing; Mr. George Young, an employee of the School for International Training, Brattleboro, Vt., will be the caller.

Johnston Favors Armed Police

By BILL DENSMORE

The head of the UMass Department of Public Safety doesn't feel that the carrying of firearms presents a danger on this campus.

David L. Johnston, director of the Department of Public Safety, which includes university police, says that there are other universities whose police don't carry firearms, "but that does not relieve the situation," because in a violent situation authorities will simply call on officers who do have guns. In Amherst, the Amherst town police would be called.

In an unpublished MDC interview last October, shortly after the issue of gun-carrying by University police was raised in a supplementary section of The Collegian, Johnston continued that the State University of New York at Albany doesn't have armed police but, "That does not relieve the situation simply because they call on the Albany police department who do carry guns when there is the possible need for someone with firearms.

"So the student there is not relieved of the possibility of talking to a police officer who's carrying a gun."

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert L. Gage, in a similar MDC interview, said that to his knowledge affairs such as Kent State and Jacksonville were caused when outside police entered campuses.

Johnston commented further on minority fears that they are being systematically harassed by UMass police.

"I'm quite concerned about their perceptions of the situation," he said, "and of course their perceptions are important."

Johnston suggested in October that minority paranoia about police, "Could stem from unsatisfactory contacts with their home town police departments. That then is projected on us."

Johnston said that he is concerned that such perceptions be brought to his attention, but said that in the past, they had not been.

"I don't think that our department has had all of the channels of communication open as it should be, which is one reason why last spring I began work on a police advisory group," Johnston said.

That was in the spring of 1972. Yet there is still no functioning police advisory group, despite Johnston's desire to have one.

"I think it's going to take time to actually prove to everyone in the community that we are a service organization, and that our interest is to provide high quality service," he continued.

Why there is not yet any police advisory group, despite the support of Johnston, Vice Chancellor Gage and Student Senate, will be examined in a future Collegian article.

Readings Wind Up Poetry Fest

By JOAN FASSNACHT

Poetry readings by Chinua Achebe of Biafra and Nicanor Parra of Chile held last night in the Engineering East Auditorium wound up this week's International Poetry Festival.

Sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program, the Festival began Monday night with a lecture on Poetry of the Caribbean by Robert Marquez. Marquez is Assistant Professor of Hispanic-American literature at Hampshire College. Before an audience of 80 people, Seamus Heaney of Northern Ireland performed a reading of his works, including "The Forge" and "Girls Bathing, Galway 1965".

Tuesday afternoon, an informal gathering surrounded American country poet Max Ellison for a lesson on how to teach poetry. That night, Ellison read some of his latest works of poetry. His poems are said to "reflect insight into man's natural heritage and those emotions that constantly give man a haunting memory of the past."

Tuesday afternoon, an informal gathering surrounded American country poet Max Ellison for a lesson on how to teach poetry. That night, Ellison read some of his latest works of poetry. His poems are said to "reflect insight into man's natural heritage and those emotions that constantly give man a haunting memory of the past." Luigi Ballerini, formerly of Milan, Italy, and now an Assistant Professor at CCNY, followed Ellison with a lecture on Visual Poetry. Ballerini is currently preparing an exhibit on Visual Poetry to be presented to the Finch Museum in New York.

An informal gathering for discussion and exchange of ideas between Werner Heider, Iosif Brodsky, Luigi Ballerini, and Max Ellison took place Wednesday afternoon before a full audience in the Colonial Lounge. At 7:30 that night, before an audience of 250 people in the Student Union Ballroom, Heider read his poems, among them, "After Rain in September", and "Password". Brodsky, currently Poet in Residence at the University of Michigan, read his "Verses on the Death of T.S. Eliot". He read in Russian, and a translation was read by Mr. Charay of Smith College. Last night, the final night of the Festival, Chinua Achebe gave an excellent reading of his poems "Refugee Mother and Child" and "Public Execution in Pictures". Professor Achebe is presently a Visiting Professor at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. He is also editor of Okike, a journal of new African writing and criticism. Nicanor Parra, a Professor at Columbia Univerity, noted for his understated and relaxed poetry, performed readings of his poems, "I Fulfill My Patriotic Duty" and "Everything Seemed Fine Before".

Blacks Tricked Into V.D. Experiment

By MARGARET SCHERF
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two black men from rural Alabama told a Senate subcommittee Thursday how the U.S. Public Health Service enticed them into participating in a syphilis study which left their disease untreated.

"I was going to school in 1932 when they came around and gave me a blood test. They said I had bad blood," Charlie Pollard, 66, of Tuskegee, Ala., told the subcommittee on health.

After 25 years of what he thought was treatment for so-called bad blood, Pollard said, federal sponsors of the study gave him $25 and a certificate of merit.

At no time was Pollard told he had syphilis, Fred Gray, a lawyer for Pollard, told the committee.

In the Tuskegee Study, more than 430 black men in Macon County, Ala., were not given treatment for syphilis so U.S. Public Health Service doctors could study through eventual autopsies what damage untreated syphilis does to the human body.

At least 28 of the men, and possibly as many as 107, died as a direct result of the untreated syphilis.

Lester Scott, 71, also of Tuskegee, told the subcommittee sponsors of the study came to his farm in 1932 and recruited him.

Correction

In Wednesday's story, it was stated that no one receives credit at this time for being in the Student Senate. This is incorrect. Credit can be received for working in the Senate if a senator takes an independent study course with the Student Government President.

C47 Crash Kills 14 Parachutists

By ROBERT B. CULLEN
Associated Press Writer

SILK HOPE: N.C. (AP)—At least 14 persons died Thursday when an Army transport plane carrying members of the Golden Knights precision parachute team crashed in a muddy cornfield near this rural crossroads.

An Army spokesman at the scene said 14 bodies had been recovered, but rescue workers said they had counted 15. An Army spokesman at Ft. Bragg, N.C., where the flight originated, said it was possible a 15th person was on board.

There was no word on a possible cause of the crash, which occurred near Greensboro in foggy weather.

The victims included 11 members of the elite team, which was on a recruiting tour. Also on board were two pilots and a crew chief.

The Army withheld identifications pending notification of next of kin. A spokesman at Ft. Bragg did say the victims were members of the Gold Team, one of three teams in the unit.

The bodies were scattered as far as 200 yards from the wreckage of the twin-engine, propeller-driven craft.

The C47 transport, which the Army said was en route from Ft. Bragg to Overland Park, Kan., crashed shortly before 9 a.m., according to Hadley Harris, a farmer who lives about a half-mile from the site of the wreck.

Nine Victims Identified

SILK HOPE, N.C. (AP)—Nine of the 14 members of the Army's Golden Knights stunt parachute team who were killed in the crash of a transport plane Thursday have been tentatively identified.

An Army spokesman said it was possible that a 15th person was aboard the plane.

The names of the identified victims, and their next of kin, included:

—Sgt. Francis Patrick Welch, 33; husband of Mrs. Wanda J. Welch, Fayetteville; son of Mr. and Mrs. James F. Welch, Boston, Mass.

Prices Up 1.9%

By NEIL GILBRIDE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Wholesale prices of farm products, foods and industrial goods posted the sharpest rise in 22 years last month, and President Nixon's chief economic adviser warned Thursday against "an inflationary boom."

Wholesale food price hikes usually move swiftly into retail prices, putting a further dent in the consumer's supermarket dollar.

The rise of 1.9 per cent in the Wholesale Price Index, steepest monthly hike since the early Korean War year of 1951, indicated continued trouble for Nixon's Phase 3 wage-price controls.

Herbert Stein, chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, said the big increase "emphasizes the need to keep the very strong economic expansion now under way from turning into an inflationary boom."

The February price jump included the third straight large monthly increase for farm products and processed foods. Wholesale prices of these items would increase

The February price jump included the third straight large monthly increase for farm products and processed foods. Wholesale prices of these items would increase by more than half if the rise continued at the same rate another nine months, the report indicated.

In the last six months their seasonally adjusted annual rate of increase was 30.8 per cent and in the past three months 56 per cent, the Bureau of Labor Statistics report said.

In a related development, the Senate Banking Committee Thursday approved a one-year extension of the President's power to control wages and prices. The committee, however, defeated on tie votes proposals requiring a return to the involuntary wage-price controls which were dropped Jan. 11.

In the monthly wholesale index report, prices of industrial commodities, including raw materials and finished manufactured goods, rose 1.1 per cent in February, also the sharpest rise since early 1951. Livestock prices were up 11.5 per cent and meats, poultry and fish climbed 5.4 per cent.

Walpole Guards Want Security

WALPOLE (AP)—The daily fight for control of Walpole state prison continued Thursday with inmates locked up and guards staging a brief walkout.

A new warden—the fourth to assume Walpole's top job in little more than a year—negotiated with inmates and guards at the prison while state correction officials held closed sessions in Boston.

In other developments, eight Walpole guards sought a meeting with Gov. Francis W. Sargent to press their concerns about security at the maximum security prison and a newspaper called for the resignation of Corrections Commissioner John Boone.

Kenneth Bishop, the acting superintendent at Walpole, ordered all inmates into a lockup Thursday morning after guards reporting for work on the day shift refused to enter the prison.

The overnight shift of guards was held on duty for three hours until Bishop could convince the day shift to go to work. Eight guards on the day shift decided against working, and went to the State House in Boston to meet with Sargent.

At the State House, a group of 11 Walpole guards, some of them demanding the ouster of Boone, met with Sargent for an hour.

"We asked him if he can do anything at all to restore order at Walpole," said George P. Madden, acting president of the Walpole guards union. "We don't have order. We have chaos."

June 27th Is The Winner

Being No. 1 Doesn't Always Pay

By JERRY T. BAULCH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Selective Service held a standby draft lottery Thursday to assign callup numbers to the two million men born in 1954, but they won't be drafted short of a national emergency.

However, Byron V. Pepitone, nominated by Nixon as draft director, said men with Numbers 95 and lower will be given classifications to provide a ready pool that can be processed quickly if necessary.

He said these men will be able to receive full consideration for deferments and requests.

Those with numbers above 95 will be kept in the same holding classification in which they were placed when they registered for the draft last year. No. 1 in the two-hour lottery was assigned to those with June 27th birthdays. It came on the 225th draw of 365 yellow capsules containing birthdates and 365 purplish capsules containing numbers.

No. 2 was assigned to those born Aug. 5, No. 3 to March 29, No. 4 to Oct. 25, No. 5 to April 4, No. 6 to Nov. 11, No. 7 to Jan. 29, No. 8 to Dec. 7, No. 9 to Oct. 26 and No. 10 to March 28. The highest, No. 365, went to Oct. 19.

Pepitone said that if the batch of men drawing numbers this year are not needed next year they will drop into a lower category of vulnerability.

"And their place will be taken by men who are one year younger who also will be primarily vulnerable for the calendar year of the 20th birthday, or 1975," he said, "Although men can be inducted after the year of their 20th birthday, the possibilities of this occurring are extremely remote."

North Viet Troop Movements Spotted

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — Increased movement of North Vietnamese troops and war materials southward through Laos into South Vietnam was reported Thursday by a South Vietnamese officer who conceded that the Communist command's intent was not immediately clear.

Coincidentally, Vice President Tran Van Huong told the South Vietnamese nation in a radio and television address that the cease-fire does not guarantee "a real and lasting peace." He said the truce "does not mean that the Communist invaders have ended their drive to invade and take control of us."

The Saigon government, at the same time, released 499 captured soldiers in northernmost Quang Tri Province to open the second phase of Vietnamese prisoner exchanges. During the next several days, plans call for the release of 6,300 military prisoners by the Saigon government, which will get 1,250 of its soldiers back.

The United States has made it known that it expects the other side to release about half of the 286 American prisoners it still holds around the middle of next week, although there have been no firm commitment.

Maj. Gen. Nguyen Van Toan, commander of South Vietnam's 2nd Military Region which encompasses the central highlands bordering Laos and Cambodia, said the North Vietnamese have moved fresh troops and large numbers of anti-aircraft weapons and other war materials into the region since the cease-fire went into effect Jan. 28.

Toan added that South Vietnamese observer planes flying over the area have been hit by anti-aircraft fire on several occasions but none has been shot down.

Phase III Gets Partial Support

By JOHN LENGEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate Banking Committee Thursday approved a one-year extension of President Nixon's power to control wages and prices but rejected moves to make Phase 3 tougher.

The committee defeated on tie votes amendments to impose rent controls in metropolitan areas and to return to the kind of mandatory wage-price control system Nixon abandoned on Jan. 11.

But Sen. William Proxmire, D-Wis., and Sen. Harrison Williams, D-N.J., plan to push these two amendments when the bill to extend the Economic Stabilization Act to April 30, 1974 is up for floor action.

The committee voted to give the President power to ration petroleum products. Earlier in the week, the Nixon administration reimposed mandatory controls on the nation's largest oil companies.

The committee first considered a proposal to give the President authority to allocate and ration any scare commodities. However, several senators said the authority was too broad. Sen. Thomas J. McIntyre, D-N.H., offered the proposal for petroleum products, which was adopted 8 to 4. McIntyre said it would be "standby power."

In addition, the committee approved an amendment that would require corporations to make public the same information on price increases that they submit to the Cost of Living Council.

N. Ireland Violence Hits London

By FRED COLEMAN
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP)—The car bomb terror of Northern Ireland struck the heart of London Thursday with shattering explosions outside Old Bailey court and in the area of Whitehall. More than 100 persons were wounded in blasts that left the worst scenes of destruction since the blitz of World War II.

One man in his 60s died of wounds.

In addition to the scores brought into hospitals many others were treated at the scenes or elsewhere for shock, cuts and bruises. Estimates of the total number of casualties varied up to 200.

Scotland Yard itself and the Westminster area near the headquarters of the Conservative and Labor parties also were targets, but security men found the bombs before they could go off.

Police expressed belief the bombs were planted by the Provisional wing of the Irish Republican Army to coincide with a referendum in Northern Ireland on whether that British province should remain in the United Kingdom or unite with the Irish republic in the south.

Eight men and two women were picked up for questioning at Heathrow Airport, Scotland Yard reported. Informants said they were about to board planes for Ireland.

The British capital's reputation as one of the safest cities in the world went up in clouds of thick black smoke as bombs went off, shattering glass down on school children, office workers and other bystanders.

There were many stretcher cases and seriously wounded among the first 125 victims admitted to emergency wards.

The worst explosion, which took the most casualties, hit the Old Bailey criminal court, sending a pillar of smoke up to its dome. Every window of a 20-story office block nearby splintered and crashed down. Other windows were broken two blocks away.

A separate blast at the same time was aimed at the central army recruiting office in the Whitehall area, adjoining government offices. It damaged a pub.

All four cars bombs had been timed to explode at about 3 p.m., police said.

A frenzy of other bomb scares hit London landmarks including Parliament, the stock exchange, the Foreign Office, the Times newspaper, and the royal residence at nearby Windsor Castle. Many key government buildings were evacuated for bomb searches.

Scotland Yard had been tipped in advance to expect IRA car bomb attacks against government buildings here Thursday.

Scotland Yard sent out a special task force to check. By mid-morning it found one literally on its own doorstep, and issued a public warning that more could follow. But finding the bombs was another matter.

Nixon Proposes Realignment Of Funds

By FRANK CORMIER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon Thursday proposed a major realignment of aid programs for community development and the use of highway funds for mass transit.

In a special message on community development, Nixon recommended that state and local governments be allowed over the next three years to use $3.65 billion of federal highway funds "for urban transportation needs, including capital improvements for bus and rapid rail systems."

Nixon also proposed that federal funding for mass transit be increased by $3 billion to bring total spending authority to $6.1 billion.

To replace seven community development programs, such as urban renewal and model cities, that are being scrapped, Nixon called for passage of a Better Communities Act.

Starting July 1, 1974, it would provide state and local governments with $2.3 billion a year "to be spent as they desire to meet their community development needs."

James T. Lynn, secretary of Housing and Urban Development, was asked at a White House news conference if he had any contingency plans should Congress reject the special revenue sharing scheme, inasmuch as existing programs are headed for the ash can.

"I'm so optimistic," he said, "I don't even want to think about a fail-safe system."

In his message, Nixon said $7.4 billion already is available and will be used "to maintain and support community development" between now and mid-1974.

Nixon said that under special revenue sharing, "funds would be used to assure that no city receives less money for community development than it has received" under the programs being discarded.

Lynn estimated that the $2.3 billion price tag on revenue sharing for community development would exceed the current level of funding by about $200 million.

Butz: Grain Deal Clean

By CARL C. CRAFT
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Justice Department found no criminal wrongdoing by past or present government workers and no criminal fraud by firms involved in last year's $1-billion U.S.-Soviet grain deal, Agriculture Secretary Earl L. Butz said Thursday.

The Butz announcement was from Chicago, in an Agriculture Department release obtained here and called to the attention of the Senate Agriculture Committee by Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan. Butz said he had been told by Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst that the Justice Department had finished its probe and evaluation of allegations of impropriety. The department reported, Butz added, "that it has found no criminal wrongdoing on the part of any present or former government employee, and no criminal fraud on the part of the grain companies involved."

Butz said he had high praise for the FBI probe which "had reached the same conclusions" as the Agriculture Department's Commodity Exchange Authority and inspector general.

Control Commission Split On Duties

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)—The split that seemed inevitable has developed in the International Commission of Control and Supervision, a watchdog for the Vietnam cease-fire.

An informant familiar with commission procedures gave this outline Thursday:

—Polish and Hungarian delegates are operating on the theory that the Communists won the war—and the winner can claim "the fruits of victory."

—Canadians and Indonesians are operating on the theory that there were no winners or losers in the 10-year conflict—and therefore nobody has any claim to spoils.

The result has been an East-West standoff on virtually all crucial issues. The commission operates on the rule of unanimity. If there is no agreement, a delegation may submit a minority report.

By this account, the ICCS has developed "some symptoms of the same disease" that killed the effectiveness of its predecessor—the old International Control Commission which has tentatively suspended operations in Vietnam after 18 years.

But one source said it's still too early to tell if the symptoms in the new ICCS will destroy the effectiveness of the older group, but the prognosis appears guarded.

"We have no problems when there are no issues," said an ICCS source. "Usually there are no arguments on the standard of living we should have here and the rights, immunities and privileges."

The Indonesians and Canadians are particularly unhappy about the commission's refusal to investigate a U.S. and South Vietnamese complaint that the North Vietnamese installed three new missile sites at Khe Sanh after the cease-fire. Two votes on the issue split on East-West lines.

They are also unhappy about Polish and Hungarian attempts to shelve a unanimous report on fighting at the coastal port of Sa Huynh last month.

The only ICCS investigation which has been unanimously approved and sent to the four-party Joint Military Commission involved a rock-throwing demonstration at Hue which injured North Vietnamese representatives to the military commission.

Several hundred persons attacked the North Vietnamese compound in Hue on Feb. 25. A similar rock-throwing incident took place the same day in Da Nang.

The North Vietnamese temporarily withdrew their delegations from both cities last Friday, claiming they had inadequate security and poor accommodations.

In its unanimous report, the ICCS said every member of the commission is responsible for the security of every other member.

Western sources say the Communist members of the ICCS appear to be using a double standard-approving investigations which will make their cause look good and disapproving those that might make the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong look bad.

U.S.-N. Viet Aid Conference in Paris

By KENNETH J. FREED
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The joint U.S.-North Vietnam economic commission will hold its first meeting next Thursday in Paris to discuss American aid for the war-torn Communist nation.

Announcement of the meeting came Thursday in simultaneous statements by Washington and Hanoi.

The American delegation will be headed by Maurice Williams, deputy director of the Agency for International Development. His Hanoi counterpart will be finance minister Dan Viet Chau.

Their initial task will be to define the requirements needed to rebuild the North Vietnamese economy, the type of aid necessary and the form it will take.

Following announcement of the meeting, administration officials stressed that the negotiations at the outset will not involve a money total. They said also the commission will not be used to settle political problems or deal with such matters as cease-fire violations.

The question of the amount of aid for North Vietnam, as well as for the rest of Indochina , is a very touchy matter in Congress and the administration has promised to make no commitments without prior approval from Capitol Hill.

U.S. officials also have been reluctant to discuss details of their thinking on the air situation because nothing has been settled with Hanoi.

State Department sources said there is no time frame for completing the negotiations, noting that the U.S. delegation is setting up offices in the international conference center in Paris in anticipation of possibly extended discussions.

Sedretary of State William P. Rogers indicated this week the American program might be ready for Congress within 60 days.

Hughes Hoax Gets Mrs. Irving 2 Years

By HANNS NEUERBOURG
Associated Press Writer

ZURICH, Switzerland, (AP)-Mrs. Clifford Irving, the "Helga R. Hughes" in the $650,000-Howard Hughes autobiography hoax, was given a two-year prison sentence by a Swiss court today that is likely to leave her in jail longer than her writer-husband.

The three-judge Zurich Superior Court sentenced her on charges of multiple fraud and forgery. Mrs. Irving, a Swiss national, pleaded guilty to all counts and asked the court to give her "a chance."

She said her only motive in helping her husband was to save her marriage threatened by his affair with Danish singer Nina Van Pallandt.

The sentence shocked the 37-year-old blonde into tears and came as a surprise to most of those in the courtroom.

The prosecutor had asked for a suspended term of 18 months, as had the presiding judge, but the two other judges called for an unconditional two-year term, citing what they argued was "her cold-bloodedness" in cashing three checks totaling $650,000 at a Zurich bank as Helga R. Hughes.

The checks had been given her husband by McGraw-Hill, the New York publishers for a purported autobiography of Hughes.

The court ordered that two months she served of a two-year U.S. sentence last fall be deducted from the Swiss term. Her lawyer said her husband, sentenced to 2-1/2 years in the United States could hope to be paroled in June.

He said he would appeal Mrs. Irving's sentence.

The lawyer, Peter Widmer, said Mrs. Irving was convinced that her husband would break with the Danish singer "if she did something Nina was not able to do" and a "crazy but honest attempt" to save her marriage "ended in near-tragedy."

Dance Marathon

On Your Mark, Get Set...

A 52-hour dance marathon to raise money for muscular dystrophy will be sponsored by UMass Fraternity Phi Mu Delta in the Student Union Ballroom on March 16. Beginning at 6 p.m. Friday, about 15 couples will compete for first prize until 10 p.m. Sunday. A first prize of $300 and a four-foot trophy will go to one couple entered by Phi Mu Delta, and to one other couple outside of the fraternity. Both winners will fly to Illinois, all expenses paid, for a chance to win $2,500 in a dance marathon there. The couple that stays on the floor for the time limit, and whose sponsoring organization raises the most money for muscular dystrophy will win.

Couples from campus participating on a volunteer basis include: Ed Cutshall, Phi Mu Delta; Katy Gill, Chi Omega; Charles Sadoski, Baker; Laurie Cowley, Mary Lyons; Norman Deibe, Cashin; Sherman Lajner, Pi Delta Phi; Lee Tringoli, Alpha Chi Omega; Dianne Goff, Sigma Kappa; and Bob Rock, Delta Chi.

Phi Mu Delta, a national fraternity, will also be sending contestants from its other chapters in the country. The participants will be allowed a half-hour break every four hours, and a break between 3 and 7 a.m. both Saturday and Sunday. During these rest periods, they will be given a chance to sleep and eat. Both slow and fast dancing is permitted throughout the marathon.

Continuous dance music will be provided by the following groups: Pendrift; Mack Snafu and his Pomeranian All Star Five; Clean Living; Big Screaming McGrew; Maelstrom; Peazda; Stillwater; Rush; and Steve—the oldies D. J. The national secretary of Phi Mu Delta, George La Tour, will be present at the marathon, along with muscular dystrophy representatives Don Blais and Lee Ann Petruskiewicz. Some celebrities are expected to attend, but no definite announcements have been made. There will be no admission charge in hopes that a large crowd will attend.

The first dance marathon of this kind was sponsored by Zeta Beta Tau fraternity of Maryland in 1970. It raised $15,000. In 1972 it set a record by raising $50,000 for muscular dystrophy. "If we are successful, this could become an annual event," said Paul Cook, president of the UMass Phi Mu Delta.

The UMass chapter was selected because it has the best facilities to hold the marathon and because the Springfield area is most promising for business support. Also, it is one of the largest and most active chapters. The unit will have representatives canvassing the campus and the local area for additional support all next week.

Minerology?

NEW YORK (AP) — Understanding "rock culture" can help educators reach their students, according to the man who devised a graduate course on rock music for Teachers College at Columbia University.

"Rock is young people," says Alan Raph, a professional bass trombonist and composer.

"Like them it is energetic, electric, vibrant, involved, emphatic. But for young people rock is more than just music; it is a way of life, a culture which is affecting us all," he said in an interview.

Raph said the fact that many members of the over-30 generation don't understand rock may make it all the more appealing to young people.

"The understanding and use of rock vocabulary can break down barriers and close gaps," he said. Educators should know that rock may be the best index available of what young people are thinking

"The understanding and use of rock vocabulary can break down barriers and close gaps," he said. "Educators should know that rock may be the best index available of what young people are thinking today."

When Raph first taught his course on rock music at the summer session last year, it was believed to be the first ever offered by a graduate echool of education.

The course begins with an historical survey of rock, covering the 1950s rock 'n' roll from Bill Haley and the Comets to Elvis Presley; the early 1960s when the "roll" was dropped; the 1967-69 period of the drug culture's "freaky head rock," and current modes.

Oven Claim Burns FDA

WASHINGTON (AP) — While admitting that certain mechanical factors of microwave ovens could be improved, the Federal Food and Drug Administration said Thursday the magazine Consumer Reports exaggerated the dangers to human health.

"I was very disappointed by the position taken by Consumers Union," said John Villforth, director of the FDA's Bureau of Radiological Health.

He was questioned at a Senate Commerce Committee hearing on proposed legislation to tighten controls on the use of radiation devices.

Consumers Union, a nonprofit testing organization, warned the public Wednesday against buying any model of microwave oven.

Red Hat, Busy Day

VATICAN CITY (AP)-Pope Paul VI received newly elevated Humberto Cardinal Medeiros of Boston in audience Thursday.

Hours later the cardinal took possession of his titular church in Rome in a glittering ceremony.

With the cardinal were a group of 60 persons from the Boston area who attended Monday's consistory in which he was elevated to the purple.

"We are very pleased to welcome you and those who have come with you to share in the joy and happiness of the consistory," the Pope said. "We take this occasion to express the hope that you will always have that precious gift which Jesus Christ offers us: His peace.

"We are confident that the events of the past few days have reconfirmed you in that further peace which comes from the unity of the church: the unity of bishops with the See of Peter and among themselves, and their unity with their priests, religious and people."

In the afternoon, Cardinal Medeiros took possession of the Church of St. Susanna in downtown Rome near the fashionable Via Veneto. It is the traditional parish church of American Catholics in Rome.

The Cardinal was greeted by U.S. Ambassador John Volpe and by hundreds of members of the American colony, who filled the church.

By taking possession of the church assigned him by the pontiff in Rome's archdiocese, Cardinal Medeiros became eligible to vote for the election of a Pope.

The cardinal, wearing his mitre and carrying a crozier, walked through the church, then received a notice officially assigning the church to him.

After concelebrating Mass with dozens of American bishops and prelates, Cardinal Medeiros left the church, cheered by the crowd of 800.

Arnie 'Woo Woo' Ginsberg, one of the original D.J.'s from the 'Old' WMEX in Boston, will be at a 1950's record hop in the HATCH Friday, 8:30 p.m. to 1 a.m.

The hop is sponsored by VITA (Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program). The Program has helped over 500 college students on this campus and in the area, by filling out their federal and state income tax forms and by answering questions about these forms.

VITA was organized two years ago to help low income families with their income tax forms. VITA is now assisting over 400 people in the low income areas of Springfield, Holyoke, Chicopee, Belchertown, Ware, and the Hamptons. Student volunteers will continue to be available on campus through April 16. VITA has three offices in Springfield.

The money made from the hop will go to reimburse those volunteers for gas. Come greased!

For T-5 Project: Success

T-5 (far left) has been proclaimed a success by many of its residents.
The dorm is now student-run as opposed to being run by heads of residence. (MDC Photo by Lee Fabizewski)

A new system of dormitory government that allows for greater student participation has been operating in John Adams Tower since September, 1971, and is known as the T-5 Project.

The middle and lower sections of John Adams Tower are functioning as one dormitory under the T-5 system of government, which provides the opportunity for students to be directly and democratically involved in the governmental proceedings of their dorm.

In the past, John Adams was functioning in the traditional fashion, which had each of the three sections of the tower, upper, middle, and lower, governmentally separated into three dormitories. Each of the section dorms had six floors in their governmental jurisdiction. Each dorm had one resident director, usually a graduate student, who was paid $3,400 yearly and each floor had one counselor for the thirty-two residents on the floor.

The T-5 Project was originally initiated to get students concerned with what was going on within the dorm. The basic changes were able to be affected as a result of the combining of the middle and lower sections, the lower fifteen floors, into one dormitory government. As a result, one of the positions of resident director was eliminated. With the money saved, members of the dorm were able to hire a resident from each floor as a representative in dorm assembly meetings.

The idea for the incorporation of the T-5 Project into John Adams came from many of the dorm counselors, who thought it best if residents could elect their dorm authority figures. A proposal for the project was okayed by John Hunt, the headmaster of Southwest. The upper dorm of the tower decided not to get involved as a result of some misunderstandings that had developed due to a lack of communications with the lower floors. For example, a rumor was spread to upper residents that they would lose the use of a lounge floor to the lower floors with no apparent gain in sight for them. Bill Laramy, one of the counselors that had worked to get the project into the dorm, became the head of residence for the year. This past fall, Mark Cavanaugh and Hank Vaillancourt, both floor representatives, were elected co-resident directors of the dorm.

The co-resident directors are the governmental heads of the dormitory but do not act without the support of the residents. Meetings of the floor representatives and counselors are held weekly for the discussion of ideas and problems, and for the voting of various proposals. The floor counselors each have areas in which they are specialized, including the area of drugs, academic problems, and peer conflicts, to provide residents with good, informative advice.

Some of the actions taken by the dorm since the incorporation of the T-5 project, include the organizing of a library on the fifth floor and a natural food store on the twelfth. The tenth floor has become coed, in the otherwise male dorm, and the eleventh floor is only for black students.

According to one of the co-resident directors, Mark Cavanaugh, the project is successful and plans are being made to add more structure to the system, so persons in positions of authority will know exactly what their jobs are. He said, the project "provides a democratic setup and through that, a distribution of power to the people."

School of Education Offering Internships

The Undergraduate Internship Program, an accredited and stipended program through the special programs office and the Center for Leadership and Administration, has applications available for next year's program.

The program, a nine-month intensive learning experience, places interested and qualified students in administrative offices on campus under close supervision of an administration supervisor.

A six-credit seminar offering a theoretical complement to the practical day to day experience of an office internship is also offered.

Some full positions of $1,250, as well as partial stipends and accredited positions are available.

This year the program included offices like: East Area and Southwest Business, Student Affairs, Associate Provosts, Orchard Hill, International Programs, Admissions, and more.

If you are interested contact Bob Brick (546-4572) or pick up an application. Applications are due on March 23.

700 Jobs Available

Riverside Park, largest amusement park in New England, has 700 openings for summer work.

Many of these jobs begin as part-time weekend work, starting the weekend of March 24th, and then become full-time jobs, beginning the weekend of June 21st.

There are openings for game, ride, and parking lot attendants, for maintenance, and for food services.

Those interested should be at the Campus Center Concourse March 21 between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m.

Dates Set For Food Sem.

A seven-session seminar for food service people on "Management of Personnel in Food Service Operations" will be offered by the University department of hotel, restaurant and travel administration in cooperation with the Hampden County Extension Service at West Springfield.

The two-hour evening sessions will be at the Hampden County Improvement League Building, 1499 Memorial Ave., West Springfield, from 7 to 9 p.m. on Tuesdays, starting March 27, and continuing on April 3, 17, 24, and May 1, 8, and 15. The seminar is a program of the Cooperative Extension Service of the UMass College of Food and Natural Resources.

Prof. Charles E. Eshbach of the department of Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration, who will direct the seminar, said the meetings will focus on personnel problems and measures which food service people may take to prevent many of these problems. Attention will also be directed to the changing views of food service personnel and their functions. There will be a $25 registration fee for the seven-meeting series and advance registration is necessary.

Further information on the seminar may be obtained from Prof. Eshbach at 215 Chenoweth Laboratory.

Discussion On Contraception

The Belchertown State School Friends Association will sponsor discussion on contraception for Sunday evening at 5 at the state school building.

Students and citizens of the community are invited to attend. Open house has been scheduled from 2 to 4 in E Building.

The speakers will include Ms. Mary Geiger of the Massachusetts Department of Mental Health, Roman Catholic Chaplain John Leonardo of Rome State School, Rome, N.Y., and Atty. Oliver Fowlkes of Northampton.

The topics to be covered include cohesion with parents, sexuality from a legal point, and religious ramifications.

Athletic Fee

Frank McInerney, Director of Athletics, told the Student Senate Wednesday night that the athletic fee students pay each semester was necessary to expand the athletic program.

"I don't see how we could survive without the fee," he said.

The Senate, at the same time, endorsed a motion which would reduce the athletic fee by 75%, in an attempt to "phase out the financing by the student athletic fee of all University intercollegiate sports programs, other than those on a club or intramural level."

Meanwhile, the Collegian discovered a few of the many ways in which the student athletic fee was being used: to finance business luncheons, recruitment expenses, complimentary tickets, conferences, flowers, chewing gum, oranges, cigars, coffee, and gifts to various athletes—all in the name of "public relations".

Other University departments employ more ethical means of raising money for such causes, notably "passing the hat".

In light of the Collegian's probe into the Athletic Department expense account, and the deplorable means by which money is used at the students' expense, we support the Student Senate in their effort to phase out the student athletic fee.

Conspiracy Of Silence

A big lie has been spread by the "liberal" mass media during the past nine months about the attempted assassination of George Wallace. The true facts were first brought out by a two-month long investigation conducted by AMERICAN OPINION contributing editor Alan Stang and Timothy Heinan, a former undercover agent for the Milwaukee Police Department who infiltrated the SDS during his days as a student at Marquette University. They showed that, without a doubt, Arthur Bremer was part of a conspiracy and WAS AND NEVER HAS BEEN A LONER.

It all started on May 15, 1972, when Tim Heinan identified Arthur Bremer as a person who, back in November, 1969, was showing up at SDS meetings in Milwaukee expressing a strong desire to become involved. He teamed up with Mr. Stang and they came up with some interesting facts:

Fact 1: Arthur Bremer's diary was manufactured for the purpose of letting him play his game of being insane whenever he was in trouble.

Fact 2: No witness was allowed to appear at Bremer's trial that would have shown that Bremer was indeed a part of a master conspiracy. Instead, "liberal" psychiatrists testified to try and establish Bremer's insanity using his phoney diary. Fortunately, the jury didn't buy it. Bremer is now in jail but he will be eligible for parole in thirteen years--eligible to kill again.

There are many more of these facts that I could mention but time does not permit this. If anyone is really interested in finding out the truth, for $1.50 the Timothy Heinan packet may be obtained from any AMERICAN OPINION bookstore or from AMERICAN OPINION, Belmont, Mass. 02178.

The reason that such publications as AMERICAN OPINION and such groups as The John Birch Society are the only groups putting this information out is because there is a conspiracy of silence. Since September, Tim Heinan has been touring across the country telling people what he knows. The people trying to silence him first tried to kill him. Two attempts were made on his life and attempts were made on the lives of his wife and two children. It got so bad that at one point, Heinan had to make his tour under police protection. His family is still under police protection.

Since the conspirators found that they can't kill Heinan, they are now trying to smear him. A good example of this occurred right here in this area. On February 17, Tim Heinan made two speeches in Northampton. I attended both of these speeches and found Mr. Heinan knew what he was talking about. Then, during the week, I happened to read the COLLEGIAN about some fleamale reporter from Chicago who spoke on campus and who was obviously speaking just to try and discredit what Tim Heinan had said. She didn't succeed very well. She based her speech on the so-called diary of Arthur Bremer to prove Heinan wrong. As I stated before, Bremer's diary was nothing but a farce. Mr. Heinan also stated that during his investigation he met no one who called Arthur Bremer a loner but newspaper reporters. The woman who tried to discredit him is a newspaper reporter. Timothy Heinan also has signed notarized statements declaring that what he has said is true. It is interesting to note that none of the people who oppose him have signed such statements that none of the people who oppose him have signed such statements nor will they sign such statements. It is also interesting to note that the results of the Heinan-Stang investigation were entered into the Congressional Record on September 14, 1972 by Congressman John G. Schmitz. Certainly the members of Congress would not allow false statements to be entered in the Congressional Record.

Yes, there is a conspiracy of silence by the news media. Don't you think that if something is important enough to be entered into the Congressional Record that it is important enough for the American People to hear about it?-There must be some kind of conspiracy trying to cover up its own actions, and its tentacles must be reaching deep into the mass media. It doesn't begin or end with Arthur Bremer either. It probably started when the mass media set out to deliberately smear Senator Joseph McCarthy back in 1956 when he found out that our State Department was loaded with Communists and their cohorts. It continued with pro-communist Supreme Court Justice Earl Warren being hired to prove that the obvious was untrue in the Kennedy assassination case of 1963. It further continued with the assassinations of Martin Luther King and Bobby Kennedy in 1968. And now it has continued with the attempted assassination of George Wallace. There is a definite need, now more than ever, for a Congressional investigation to gather all the facts and to tell the truth about what really happened in these cases.

The only way that this is only going to come about is if you, the American People, force it to come about. I urge you to obtain the Heinan Packet from American Opinion, and read it. Arm yourself with facts so that you know what is the truth and then act on it. Write your congressman, senator and the President and urge them to demand that Congress investigate these assassinations. For this is the only way you'll ever get the mass media's conspiracy of silence stopped. And don't try to pass the buck and let someone else do it. For, in this case, the buck stops with you.

One Hundred Dollars

NEWS ITEM: WORLD POPULATION TO DOUBLE IN 30 YEARS

Every student living on campus pays a $100 room reservation fee which he is supposed to get back when he leaves campus. No interest is paid on this fee directly to the student even though the University deprives him of the use of this money for four years. Many students fail to recover their $100 because they do not meet the requirements for a refund, either because they are now aware of the regulations or because they violate them.

The rationale behind the room reservation deposit is tied to the annual fall overcrowding of the dorms. It seems that a few years back, the University had a critical housing shortage that was compounded by students failure to notify the Housing Office of their intention to move off campus. Because the Housing Office was not notified that a student did not intend to return to his room, the room remained reserved for him.

This forced the Housing Office to place new students in less desirable housing, like triples, instead of being able to move them into the empty room. Sometimes triples were not used, people lived in dorms like Hamlin last semester that were not supposed to be occupied. With the institution of the Room Reservation Deposit, the Housing Office hoped that they would be able to determine who wasn't coming back well before the beginning of the semester. This would aid in the placement of new students.

One hundred dollars is a lot of money to most students. The University deprives us of the use of it for up to four years, why not pay interest on that money to the individual student? The University puts the room reservation fees in a trust fund where they earn considerable interest. By an agreement with the Student Senate, that money is sent back to the residence halls and used solely for refurnishings and refurbishings. Last year almost forty thousand dollars was returned to the residence halls.

About 500 students forfeited their reservation deposits last year, because they either violated a regulation regarding a refund or because they were not aware of the rules. Money that is forfeited is credited to the house to which the student was assigned. The fee must be paid before one can occupy a room and can be refunded under a variety of circumstances. If you live on campus when you graduate the fee is returned. If you do not graduate but do not return to school or move off campus you must notify the Registrar 45 days before the registration date of the next semester.

The University attempts to inform everyone of these rules through notices in the Collegian and floor counselors. There is supposed to be a notice on every floor in every dorm before the end of each semester, but there isn't. The reservation fee is not a security deposit; no money can be deducted for messing up your room. The fee will also be returned if you are drafted or dismissed from the University.

The room reservation deposit is clumsy, time-consuming and adds to the University's red tape. It creates unnecessary work for the Housing Office, more forms for you to fill out, and one more thing to worry about. A system to assure that people will occupy the rooms they sign up for is very necessary. Perhaps a fine system where, if you fail to live in the room you sign up for by not returning to school or moving off campus, your marks or class registration is withheld until you pay a fine. This would mean a loss of $39,000 for room refurnishing but it would mean that we could use our money as we please for four years. Invested at five percent that $100 would pay a little over twenty dollars in interest. The solution to the whole mess basically lies in people being more responsible and notifying the University of their intentions not to reside in a dormitory. If everyone who signed up for a room occupied it, or notified the Registrar that they were going to live off campus, there would be no need for a reservation deposit.

Sweet Pie plays the Bare-Bottom Rag.

Sex And Love In The Bluewall

By Nathan Gerenstein

Goddamn! I can see his balls.

The Bluewall is shoulder to shoulder people. One hundred extra chairs brought in that afternoon are filled by 9:00 p.m., half an hour before showtime.

At 9:30 a small man moves onto the floor, clothed it seems, in only a sheepskin jacket. With no stage, he is hardly visible from the back of the hall. Smiling to himself he removes his jacket.

A scream echoes from the crowd.

The audience sits in stunned silence, plastic beer mugs grasped in their hands, nervously glancing sideways at their dates.

Born Paul Winer 29 years ago in Hawaii, Sweet Pie, as he calls himself, comes to UMass from the Vermont hills. Those old and rugged hills, clad in brown and green, have had their effect on Sweet Pie.

Thin and rangy, wild black hair streaked in places with grey; his beard is like an ancient patriarch's, descending in a fork, surrounding a mouth formed to an everlasting grin, blessed with the insanity of those who know what they are, and knowing so well, care not what others think.

The audience laughs, and gulping its beer, pretends not to see.

Two weeks ago Sweet Pie played the Bluewall, filling it to capacity three nights in a row, an accomplishment not unknown with a good local rock group, certainly commonplace since the first of this month.

But Sweet Pie is no rock group, and when he was here the folks under 21 weren't legal. What brought the crowds was his act.

He performs in a loincloth.

And tells dirty stories about your parents, your morals, your president and you.

It was a show: it titillated the audience to bring their dates and see a guy up there who showed his balls and sang dirty tales. He was a high equal to the house, he was someone to come and laugh at, a man making, so the audience

Hot And Heavy

By Frazier DiPalma

The Oscar race, dear hearts, is getting hot and heavy with the nominees pulling the Dr. Faustus routine all over prime time and late night talk shows. This past week Jack Paar has been the most flagrant purveyor of this manic quest for Academy votes having featured Diana Ross this past Monday and Liza Minnelli Wednesday with Cicily Tyson waiting in the Green room tonight. Diana Ross has graduated from the Supremes to the supreme position of believing that Diana Ross is Billie Holiday. Diana came out like Lady Day reincarnated, puffy cheeks and a sullen expression; but she was, of course, a doll. For the past twenty-five years Paar appears to have been locked away in some suburban study somewhere immune to any female singer but Mary Martin. He acted like Billie Holiday spent her entire career touring truck stops in the Midwest. Paar went through the benefits of the film's anti-drug stand with Diana before showing a clip from Lady Sings The Blues where Diana Ross was lost in drug withdrawal and looked like Willard. But it was her medley that will win her votes with the Academy members. Her affected Holiday style makes you think that Diana wants to be possessed by the great jazz songstress. Paar, of course, always one for a tacky touch, interrupted her numbers by presenting a box of gardenias which Diana discreetly hid at her side while singing "My Man," then chucked into the audience and scurried off—stage.

If Diana was fine at impersonation, Liza Minnelli was heavy on the nostalgia. Unfortunately Paar wouldn't leave poor Judy Garland at rest. He dragged out all Judy's dirty linen for his audience to see, as if all this rank sensationalism would give a rise to his sagging ratings. It was obvious that the embarrassed Liza wanted to sing her number and leave Paar's nasty reverie behind. Liza, of course, was lovely and her singing of "Shine On Harvest Moon" was flawless. Liza, who has a good chance of winning the Oscar, will probably take an Emmy for her special Liza With A Z to be aired for a second time this evening on CBS. Directed by Bob Fosse, who also directed Cabaret, the special has a gleen and spontaneity not seen in a special since Barbra Streisand's three phenominal ones years ago. Liza is incredible performing before socially invited audience at New York's Lyceum Theater.

Television is suddenly brimming with specials and programs worth staying home for. Saturday night ABC presents a three hour version of the British National Theatre production of Eugene O'Neill's Long Days Journey Into Night. The play is O'Neill's finest, a work of great personal sorrow and reflection. This highly acclaimed production features Sir Laurence Olivier, Constance Cummings, Denis Quilley, and Ronald Pickup. From the sublime to the ridiculous is the Zero Mostel special Monday night, also on ABC. Mostel plays a singing park ranger at Yellowstone National Park (he must look like a hairless Yogi Bear) and he has the worst talent line-up we've seen in years: Joey Heatherton, Bobby Sherman, Jason Robards, Jill St. John, Burgess Meredith, and a cameo performance by Sammy Davis Jr. (who else?)

Thursday of next week will bring the long-awaited video version of Lauren Bacall's smash Broadway musical Applause. The musical is adapted from the classic film All About Eve and concerns the backstage maneuverings of a scheming young woman who is befriended by a Broadway star and attempts a quick and successful rise to stardom. The book, by Betty Codmen and Adolph Green, captures much of the film delightfully nasty wit and the music by Charles Strouse and Lee Adams is pleasant and specially suited to the throaty talents of Ms. Bacall. She won a Tony Award for her performance. She is supported by Larry Hagman, Harvey Evans, and Penny Fuller who recreates her critically acclaimed Broadway role of Eve Harrington.

But the best for last, and although this isn't for another week, you probably need a week's notice. Ed Sullivan is returning to television in a ninety minute special tribute to Broadway. The special features Marilyn Michaels doing Fanny Brice, Bobby Van singing "Tea For Two", Gwen Verdon, Michele Lee, Jack Cassidy, Melvin Van Peeples doing a number from his Ain't Supposed To Die A Natural Death, Julie Harris, a Hal Prince Salute, and the immortal Ethel Merman. Ethel Merman, the name pops a blood vessel. Ever since she belted that high C in George Gershwin's "I've Got Rhythm" back in 1932, she's been one of the theatrical wonders of this century. Cole Porter said "I'd rather write for Ethel Merman than anybody else" and he did center some of his most glittering scores in the Thirties and Forties around her superb talent. In the Forties and Fifties she also sang some of Irving Berlin's best songs in his two finest shows, Annie Get Your Gun and Call Me Madam. In the late Fifties she played her greatest role, that of Mama Rose in Gypsy. On the special she will sing a song from each stage of her career; one Porter, one Berlin, and one from Gypsy. Ethel Merman, by the way, has recently released a culmitative album of her career superbly recorded by the London Phase Four engineers and featuring all the great songs of her fabulous career.

Institutionalized Waste

The High Priests Of Waste is the story of the Pentagon Deputy for Management Systems in the Air Force who lost his job for exposing colossal waste in weapons procurement. He tells the story of an America arming with inferior weapons at shockingly high prices while supporting mismanaged corporations at the expense of the well-managed. The book is reviewed on page thirteen.

Would You Believe?

Here's a ranting review about a lot of things to write a review about. It gradually narrows down though after pulling together themes from the latest hit movies to one about a movie called Deep Throat. This largely pornographic adventure explores explores the possibilities and ways of seeking "true" love. The language in this story really caused a commotion up at the office. We wouldn't allow its editing, though. If there were stars next to the best stories, this one would have one as the pick of the week. Real hot stuff.

And What Else Is New

What else? A short glance on what's up on television at our left. Inside is a true story of departmental sexism which is ingrained into the structure of our academy. Carly Simon's latest album is reviewed, amongst others, on our music pages. In addition to Deep Thorat, one of the year's most discussed films Sounder is also reviewed. What's happening this weekend: See page twenty-two for the details but we can tell you that one of the best film festivals to appear in this state outside of Cambridge is now happening at the Amherst Cinema and continues through next week. These films, and others, are given an extensive going-over in Weekend.

The Politics Of Violence

Terrorism In The U.S.

By Howard Bloom
Steve Ferber

Last week in the Sudan two American diplomats were shot and killed by members of a terrorist organization called Black September. The incident was the most recent in a series of terrorist acts in the Middle East.

Last summer this same group shook the world with the capture and killing of Israeli athletes at the Munich Olympics. At about the same time Japanese mercenaries hired by Arab dissidents stormed Israel's Lod International Airport, and massacred innocent men, women and children waiting in the airport terminal.

Next, mail-a-bomb became the rage late in 1972 as Israeli officials in various countries received death in the mail in the form of letter bombs.

Other countries have had their troubles, too. In West Germany the "Red Army" is the terrorist organization while acts of sabotage occur day and night in Northern Ireland.

Terrorism. When one hears it mentioned, he thinks of violence occuring across the ocean, far away. With overwhelming publicity given the international outrages, terrorism in our own country has been glossed over.

In the summer of '69 the New York City bombing incidents began. July saw an explosion at the United Fruit Co. Pier. In August a blast at Marine Midland Grace Trust Co. on lower Broadway injured 19 people.

September saw the Federal Office Building hit, while in October the Army Induction Center was badly battered. Then came the night in November, when dynamite bombs in three skyscapers; the Chase Manhattan Building, the General Motors Building and the office of Standard Oil in the RCA building went off.

One night later four suspects were apprehended by the FBI. Said one officer, "It was real movie stuff. You know. 'This is the FBI, put your hands up,' with guns drawn and everything."

The Weathermen led off what they liked to call "the violent '70's" making explosive charges. Down in Greenwich Village, New York, three Weathermen blew themselves up. Later that year, 13 men were indicted for plotting to blow up police stations and school buildings in New York, Detroit, Chicago and Berkeley and to "kill and injure people therein."

One of more than two dozen bombs to hit the University of Wisconsin in 1970 killed Robert Fassnacht, (his wife's name is Joan) a post-doctoral student, while injuring three others. The explosion, which took place in the Army Math Research Center on campus ruined the life's work of 30 scientists and five graduate students.

The summer of '70 was less than calm in the Bay Area out on the West Coast. Three policemen were shot in a region more plagued by bullets than bombs.

While New York and California suffered, Middle America was getting its fair share. A blast in Minneapolis damaged the old Federal Office Building, home of the Army Induction Center.

An artist's conception of what a nuclear blackmail note might look like. As of yet terrorists have not resorted to nuclear bombing but as dissidents become more sophisticated the nuclear theft must be viewed as a real one.

In Des Moines, Iowa 285 sticks of dynamite were used to blow up a city police station and the Greater Des Moines Chamber of Commerce. It led to $300,000 in damages.

Chicago policemen spent a good deal of 1970 dodging bullets from self-styled cop killers. In all of 1970 seven policement were killed in the windy city, while in Omaha one cop was put to rest by a bomb. His head was blown off.

Houston, Texas was having its own civil war in '71. The highlights featured the buring of a movie theater that was showing "I am Curious (Yellow)," and the bombing of leftist radio stations. Head shops and hippie hangouts were burned and riddled with bullets. "They kill Communists overseas and they should kill Communists over here. I don't see any difference," remarked one right-wing Houstonite. Houston was less than a step away from full-scale violence and the police were doing little to quell the disturbances.

Far more visible, publicity-wise was the March 1, 1971 bombing of the U.S. capital building. Tied in with this bombing were 32 explosions throughout the city of Seattle in an 18 month period. Leslie Bacon was said to be both in Seattle and Washington D.C. at the appropriate times.

1972 ushered in a group called Movement in Amerika, whose members planted bombs in safe-deposit boxes. Their sophisticated 7 month fuse bombs led many detectives to believe that Weathermen were involved. Thus far the movement has made only idle threats (to kidnap property, hotels, office buildings, and take over a superhighway), but their high class operation has the FBI worried.

Most recently, in October of last year, Rochester, New York had 5 dynamite blasts damage parts of 4 buildings. Fortunately, there were no injuries reported.

What incidents like the Rochester bombings indicate is that no one, at any time, is safe from terrorist attack. But most of the attacks have had specific direction. Their main thrust has been toward the police and other members and institutions of "the Establishment."

The New York City bombings of 1969 are a prime example. One of the members of the group that was responsible for the bombing of the three skyscrapers wrote, "Spiro Agnew may be a household word but it (the public) has rarely seen men like David Rockefeller of Chase Manhatten, James Roche of General Electric, and Michael Haider of Standard Oil, who run the system behind the scene.

The latest in a rash of cop killings came earlier this year when a New Orleans man shot three policemen from his perch atop a downtown motel. His last words before he succumbed to machine gun fire from the police were, "power to the people."

Whether or not the frequency of the terrorist attacks is increasing is still a question, but the severity and means for attack has definitely changed. Whereas rocks were once the major means the dissidents used to get their point across, bombs are now the weapon of destruction. One reason for this lies in the Vietnam War. One-third of the members of "Red Sun" were Vietnam veterans. Many were trained in demolition techniques and have passed their knowledge on to others. In 1969 541 blasts ripped the U.S. Just two years later that figure jumped to 1,660. Is there a let-up in sight?

Considering the fact that only 10% of the extortionists and bomb blasters are apprehended, the outlook for a quick end to U.S. terrorism appears dim. Compound this problem with the following two facts and solutions appear even further out of reach. First, we face the reality that no motives have been identified for a majority of these crimes, making it all the tougher to set up deterrents against bombings. Secondly, the fact that most groups are unrelated poses a problem. Hope of attacking one man or one organization and ending terrorism is thus an impossibility.

When a goal of one revolutionary is for, "more than democracy. We're looking past capitalism, for a time when everyone gets whatever he wants," what can one think about the prospects for peace in America, or Amerika?

Six months after being born, his family moved back to the states. When he turned 11, Sweet Pie took up the piano; in 1961 he went to Goddard College in Vermont, graduating after four and a half semesters--"I gained a semester for not progressing." He's lived in Vermont since then, usually in the Mt. Snow area. "It's easy to be 'loose' in a resort area," he says.

But loose Sweet Pie uses humorously, because when said it leaves an impression of evil in the mouth of the sayer, and Sweet Pie isn't evil.

And don't think he doesn't know you're laughing at him.

"I know people laugh at me, but I don't believe they are laughing at anything bad. That's why the jester never minded...because he feels good doing what it is he's about. I don't really come from anything more than that."

"The nature of my performance is a theatrical encounter. It involves a lot of motions, a lot of antics, a lot of gymnastics, a lot of bizarre, contorted movements, not necessarily sexual, often asexual, basically it is speech related conduct.

"These people have to be provoked into laughing at themselves. Most noticeably at young, confused women's liberation champions. Liberation is to put out a vide that does create the manner in which people deal with you. Nobody can call us chauvinist because we are treating men and women exactly alike. When someone gets pissed off and sees his friends digging it, they may blame me, but what they are saying is I feel uncomfortable, how come I can't be like you? That provokes the confrontation. Some people will say, well, shit, man, why should I get so serious about this and laugh, others will just get so upset and go the route my father does and get ulcers."

Sweet Pie had an album released by EPC last June, the same company that released Pearls before Swine, the Fugs and Charlie Manson. It was recorded in Fat City, a bar that's more or less Sweet Pie's home base.

Vigilantes ran him out of the Mt. Snow area about a year ago because he didn't wear pants, Sweet Pie says. Sweet Pie is a nudist, been that way since '64 or '65. Fat City, a "peculiar place" Sweet Pie says, didn't take to his bare legs. One day while out thumbing a car tried to run him and his wife down, and when the driver failed, stopped his car and went after them with a rifle Sweet Pie says. He went to the police, who told him they could not guarantee his safety if he continued to dress the way he did.

Sweet Pie has a simple explanation for such reaction. "There is no law where, at any zenith point in civilization, that regards the sudden appearance of the savage."

He's had a number of run-ins with the law because of his show: Clark University banned him from campus because he played a show in the nude and he has fought the Vermont State Liquor Bureau for 15 months and won.

"We just won a court case in Vermont. We were outlawed by the Vermont Liquor Bureau as an obscene, lewd and indecent act...They didn't deal with me but my employer, the licensee, they had no control over me...they declared me in Vermont an obscene, lewd and indecent act, and Sweet Pie an obscene, lewd and indecent individual. Not only would I immediately jeopardize the license of any place I play, but should I walk into a licensed establishment in Vermont as Sweet Pie I have jeopardized the license...the question of whether I am obscene or not was irrelevant...I sued the Liquor Bureau for 15 months for continuing to conspire with state and local officials to violate my constitutional rights, particularly the guarantee to speech."

Sweet Pie started playing gigs three and a half years ago in Montreal. He has been playing steadily for the last year and a half, averaging, he says, 40 weeks a year, with his sideman on mouth harp, Bill Maloney.

Bill joined Sweet Pie in Vermont, where he was laying sewer pipe for a ski resort. One night, Sweet Pie says, Bill showed up and started jamming with him. At the beginning it was only one night a week, then two, then three, and soon he was an integral part of the act.

"He began to assume the music leads, prodding me into the discovery of backup piano riffs. We've never had a rehearsal, we did a jam last night. He takes whatever it is I do and waits for a signal he can trust, just out of familiarity with me he takes my music, which is fundamentally a rhythm music, and he makes music out of it. The fact that people can sit there and get off on us as musicians is Willie. It's a mutual response to each other, a very organic king of thing.

"We have a couple of hundred tunes, 40 or 50 special stories and raps we have down just like songs. They are theatrical outbursts, anything else is off the top of our heads.

"How much the audience influences their act depends on the night, and the condition of the crowd. Some nights 100%, some nights 10%, because of the way the audience reacts. Sometimes we know if we do this, this, this and this in a certain order--we know what it will do to a tight audience, other audiences, that come in loose, become as much a show for us as we are to them.

"I feel the show loosens people, it's the show that teaches people immediately how to use you. We are not a band, people are confused with us, they are not sure that they can dance. They don't respond to their impulses because of their confusion over how to use them. We obliterate their confusion. Some people eventually get up and dance because they couldn't sit any more. Once some dance, others might. Others sit there and get so involved in the show that they don't even consider any more whether they wanted to dance; but if you obliterate their confusion you blow through their cool. You start getting them responding and response is also the release of energy, and that's when we get renewed, that's when our show suddenly zips up."

He came on at 9:30, took off his coat and blew his nose two or three times in a roll of toilet of paper, clad only in his leather loincloth. Cracking jokes with the audience, a smile on his face, he raised his loincloth once to show his balls, putting to rest the more vocal members of the crowd.

He played two sets, the first from 9:30 to 10:45, the second from 11:00 to 1:00 a.m. The crowd was attentive. As one Bluewall bartender said, "When the Bluewall almost closes down during an act, and fills again during an intermission, you know the audience is listening."

His show is wild; when he sings he leans back from the piano, eyes wide, mouth yelling, one leg thumping the floor, screaming sometimes. The audience follows, puzzled and delighted as he sings about sex, love and his troubles with the Vermont police.

Catch-22 In The Pentagon

By Carl Greenberg

The High Priests of Waste
by A. Ernest Fitzgerald
398 pages, illustrated; $8.95

Another title for this book might well have been "Catch-22 in the Pentagon". The author, A.E. Fitzgerald, was the "Pentagon Deputy for Management Systems in the Air Force", according to the book jacket, and was dismissed from that position in early 1970. Mr. Fitzgerald says that he was canned because he tried to hard to save federal money. Of course, he is dealing with highly complex economic systems and it would be difficult to judge just how accurately he paints the portrait of Air Force big weapons procurement. However, the story has the definite ring of truth and is almost certainly accurate in its reconstruction of the Pentagon mentality if not in all its details.

Mr. Fitzgerald's biggest single complaint concerns the Air Force contract with Lockheed for the C-5A cargo plane. It seems that the Air Force ended up paying about $6,000,000,000 for what turned out to be a piece of junk. The original contracts called for a total expenditure of about $2,500,000,000 (or 2,500 megabucks as Mr. Fitzgerald reports the Pentagon slang.).

The author has several major grievances about this program and others that he worked on or knew of. First of all, it is not "Air Force money" per se, but taxpayer's money. The Pentagon has the duty, therefore, to be very careful about what it does with that money. In the second place, Mr. Fitzgerald says that the Air Force could very easily keep tighter control over government money, it just is pigheadedly reluctant to do so. A major portion of High Priests of Waste deals with the various economic systems of control which the pentagon use, or fails to use, and which results in such boondoggles as the C-5A.

The last chapter or two deal partially with a third concern that Mr. Fitzgerald has about military spending. He says that the reason the military has been able to get away with such wasteful programs as he describes, is that it has fear on its side. Fear, specifically, of the Communists.

Whether the communist threat is that powerful in the American psyche today, it is undeniable that it still existed in 1965 when the C-5A program was started and has always been popular in the military mind.

One never hears the Pentagon side in such matters, unless one is willing to accept the usual public relations material from them as being accurate truth. Indeed, that seems to have been one of Mr. Fitzgerald's big problems. When he first took his job at the Pentagon, McNamara was taking over as Secretary of Defense and had issued strong statements about economizing in the military.

Mr. Fitzgerald reports on what he ran up against when he began getting into hot water for porposing steps towards economy. The Pentagon attitude was, probably still is, that huge government spending is good for the economy since it increases employment. It's indeed a tricky issue. The cliche about war being good for the economy is an old one and very often the first people to be affected by military spending cutbacks are those laid off from the factories, Mr. Fitzgerald points out that it takes around five dollars input at the top in the form of military budget allocations for one dollar to trickle out to the man on the assembly line.

Of course, all that is a whole new field, and the author makes no pretense of knowing just where to draw the line or how to better channel the money. He even goes so far as to say that such departments as HEW and HUD probably have very similar problems to those of the Department of Defense. The most basic answer is less spending and less taxes.

Making the basic assumption, though, that more efficient spending of funds is better, Mr. Fitzgerald then reports on what he found wrong with the way the Pentagon was doing things, how he tried to help correct things and then he offers some analysis of the situation including some advice on what the average American can do.

One major flaw that he consistently tried to correct, was the method the Air Force uses to estimate contract costs. Simply, it appears that the Air Force bases its estimates for future contracts on what current contracts are costing. And most of the reporting of costs id sone by the contractor with little influence by the government. Also, the government's contracts usually provide for paying the contractor's overhead costs in such vague ways that a contracor's total overhead costs get applied to the government contract. An example of this, says Mr. Fitzgerald, is the Lockheed contract for the C-5A. Lockheed was also building the L-1011 for Great Britain. Great Britain, however, was not paying for the overhead (office and factory expenses, etc.), the U.S. Air Force was by way of its C-5A contract. Our government was so intertwined with Lockheed, that had we pulled out of the C-5A contract, we would have not only bankrupted Lockheed (which actually happened on paper), but we would have stirred up a minor fiscal catastrophy for Great Britain.

The only solution was to water down the contract so that Lockheed didn't have to build so good a plane and to pour money into Lockheed until it recovered.

The C-5A came off the line in such bad condition that one blew up just sitting on the runway and one, while it was revving up its engines, had an engine take off without the rest of the plane. The entire fleet operates at absurdly low efficiency. They can not carry nearly the weight they were originally designed for and they need the best of runways to land.

Another complaint Mr. Fitzgerald has is that it is almost official policy in the Pentagon that all money allocated to the military by t Congress must be spent by the end of the fiscal year. If, somehow, the amazing cost overruns on such projects as the C-5A don't deplete the Pentagon's finances, there is a mad rush in early summer to assign the money to programs so that in the next battle with the congress, it will be easier to claim that all the money asked for is needed.

Some of the solutions that Mr. Fitzgerald suggests are things like the implementation of should cost studies to allow the government to see just how much a contract should cost them and base cost estimates on that.

Another basic policy type of change he would like to see is a tighter federal control over its contractors. As it is, the government has little idea about where its money is going and how efficiently the contractors are spending government money. Mr. Fitzgerald even says that the assumption that withdrawal of government agencies from large contracts for reasons of expense would force people out of work and companies into bankruptcy is not a totally valid assumption. A company is actually nothing more than a piece of paper and if, say, Lockheed had been forced out of budiness, then another management would have taken over and maybe change the name of the company.

The Pentagon, however, is in many ways just a large rich man's club. There is little bidding for the really large contracts. The same companies are always the mainstays of the Pentagon's programs for major weapon development and there is a huge amorphous clique consisting of military and civilian men in the Pentagon and the high-ups of the military industry corporations. Very often, the men from the Pentagon retire into high-paying jobs with the same companies they were supposed to have been eagle-eyeing for the taxpayer.

The whole issue becomes one of a great deal more than just the efficiency of military contracting. Mr. Fitzgerald is dealing with a huge slice of the United States' annual budget and so it becomes an issue of social significance. Just how badly needed are the things the military is buying? How important is our national defense program and is it sufficiently developed? Who is responsible for answering these questions?

A very refreshing aspect of the book is that there are names mentioned. Mr. Fitzgerald does not hesitate to name those he is criticizing. A problem, however, is that nowhere in the book do we really get a clear idea of just where in the Pentagon hierarchy Mr. Fitzgerald was. How much responsibility rested with those he names?

The issues raised in The High Priests of Waste are of vital importance. Mr. Fitzgerald may not have the right answers (and he certainly doesn't claim to), but it is evident that the subjects he brings up deserve intense scrutiny.

Hancock At Amherst

By Tom Hick

Herbie Hancock will appear at Amherst this Wednesday, March 14 at 8:30 p.m. in the Alumni Gymnasium. He was recently named Number One Jazz Pianist on the Down Beat Readers Poll for the fourth consecutive year. His peers in the music industry voted him the 1973 Playboy All-Stars' All-Star Piano over such notables as Oscar Peterson, Bill Evans, and Leon Russell. Michaelangelo Antonioni picked him to compose the soundtrack for the MGM movie Blow-Up. Bill Cosby chose him to score the Fat Albert television special. He spent eight years playing with great trumpeters, three with Donald Byrd followed by five with Miles Davis.

A man of such distinguished accomplishments must truly be renowned in his field and when it comes to jazz, Herbie Hancock is all of that and more.

Herbie's present group includes Eddie Henderson on trumpet and flugelhorn; Benny Maupin, alto flute, soprano and tenor saxes, and bass clarinet; Julian Priester, trombone; Charles "Buster" Williams, bass; and Billy Hart, drums and percussion.

Date: Wednesday, March 14, 1973
Time: 8:30 p.m.
Place: Alumni Gymnasium, Amherst College
Tickets: $3.00 available at Sound Ideas, Amherst, Del Padre, Northampton, Campus Center, UMass, and at the door.

Fighting Sexism On Campus

By Ann Ferguson Brentlinger

The Affirmative Action program of the University is currently seeking ways to eliminate discrimination against women and minorities at the University. One of their main strategies is to recruit more women and minority faculty. I don't believe either institutional racism or sexism can be eliminated simply by hiring more women and minority people, as the Affirmative Action plan now assumes. In the American Southern slave economy almost all the working positions were held by Blacks and yet the system was racist because the workers had no freedom, power or control over their work, with white foremen and white masters.

Similarly at the University of Mass, an overwhelming number of the Department Heads and administrators are white males. With the ratio of faculty members about 10 men to 1 woman it is difficult to see how women could have any power even if their numbers in the faculty and in the staff (now 13.5%) increased 300 or 400%. This is even more true for minorities. Furthermore, if women and minorities are the last hired, first fired, their independence if staff and faculty positions is severely limited. Most Departments on campus have their intellectual orthodoxies; and women or minority people who step out of line are removed even faster than white male rebels. (Witness the Paul Chandler–School of Education controversy last spring.)

In the past three years I have had a continuing struggle with my Department. I was almost denied tenure, denied promotion until I requested a reconsideration, and am currently being denied the right to teach graduate seminars, although I am a graduate faculty member and the Department has a policy that every faculty member be allowed to teach a seminar every three years. (The last time I taught a graduate seminar was Spring 1970) The only other full time woman professor in the Department also has not been assigned graduate seminars by the while male Head of the Department. In addition I am constantly harassed in petty ways by the Head. He denies me the right to duplicate reading material for my courses with secretarial time and department funds, refuses to approve change of grade forms for my students who receive mistaken grades–both services other department members receive as a matter of course. He has refused to obtain money already approved by the Department to pay resource people helping with an experimental course of supports the interests of faculty (which is research and colleagues doing similar research) agaimst the interests of students (which is dedicated teachers, something I think I have been).

The situation at the Philosophy Department is similar to other Departments who have Heads with veto power over Departmental decisions, as well as those with small dominant method of the Department) threw into question my superior teaching record (on the false maxim "A bad scholar, a bad teacher"); and my extensive record of service to the University (particularly at Orchard Hill) wasn't enough to justify my tenure. In fact this argument really just mine.

The reasons for these repressive actions against me are not hard to find. I am a woman, a political radical, and an intellectual dissenter from the dominant orthodoxy of the Department. I'm interested in Marxism, which is not considered in the domain of professional philosophy at all by most of my colleagues, many of whom know extremely little about it. I am married to a fellow philosopher in the Department and members have sentiments against nepotism. Furthermore the faculty feel I do not spend enough time on research on too much time teaching students and relating to non-philosophy faculty on Orchard Hill.

The Head's argument in vetoing both my tenure and promotion decision was that the bad quality of my research work (namely, a paper using a method critical of the Personnel Committees made up of members of a certain intellectual persuasion. These Departments are really oligarchies, where the forms of democracy mean very little if the Head or Personnel Committee can veto the rest of the Department and represent a certain clique at the expense of others.

Women and minority faculty can easily be fired, denied promotions or the teaching of desired courses in this sort of institutional structure, because sexism and racism on the part of the Head or Personnel Committee can't be overruled even by getting a majority support of the Department. In my case the Department unanimously (except for the Head) voted a policy calculated to allow me to teach a graduate course in the fall, and the Head simply vetoed it. The Department is not likely to protest this decision to the administration, because it does not serve their vested interests in a bureaucracy to have the Head opposed to them as individuals, nor does it serve the Department as a whole to let the administration know it is divided.

Hence I am left in my case to fight my battles by myself, which shows that liberals follow their principles only to the point where it conflicts with their vested interests--and fighting racism or sexism is simply not in their vested interests. I notified the administrators in charge of the Affirmative Action of the repressive measures against me and got no response. My conclusion is that concerned people who want to fight institutional racism and sexism have got to start seriously challenging the bureaucratic structure of the University, and exploring how the vested interests of faculty and administration (dominantly white male) tie in with the maintenance of the status quo.

Theater

From Stage To Screen

By Jim Holdsworth

The stage version of Frankenstein closed February the 24th amid soda cups, billows of artificial fog, applause and a healthy pile of receipts. The monster however, was not dead. The play has been adapted to television by Coleman Blodgett and Bill Menezes, and was taped, Monday through Thursday of last week. The program was put together, as the cliche goes, because it was there. With a ready-made set and experienced actors, it was an opportunity not to be missed.

The translation of a stage production to television is not as simple as setting up a camera at fourth row center, and grinding away. While the action could be recorded, it would be incredibly boring.

The first thing that must be changed is blocking. On stage the actors spread out to fill the set, for the camera they have to be brought closer together. With a few cuts, the dialogue remained the same, but the players had to relearn the positions were each action was to take place. Dr. Waldman could no longer pace about as he argued with Frankenstein, but had to remain fixed on his tape mark and let the director cut from one camera to another, giving the scene motion.

Gestures and action had to be toned down. On stage, Fritz hobbles around, hunched and quivering. What was effective as the portrayal of a slightly demented cripple, looks like St. Vitus's Dance on the screen. The camera is close and immediate, every motion is magnified. The actors had to rework much of the play so that it wouldn't look silly on tape. Fritz had to stop waving his arms, letting face and voice carry the part.

A similar change was needed in the "Teaching Scene", where the monster shakes Frankenstein's head like a spastic bartender with his first whiskey sour. This is too violent for a close camera, and a few gentle wiggles give the same effect for video.

Here's one for McLuhan. In translation, some of the original meanings have been changed. On stage, Fritz confronts the monster with a flame. The monster aggressively reacts by crushing Fritz with both arms and choking him. Seen through a camera, the broad motions are nearly comical, and the players keep jumping out of the frame. When the action is reblocked, Fritz charges the monster, who backs into a stairway and strikes Fritz with just one arm, in a desperate defense. Once the flame is knocked away, the monster then moves forward and chokes Fritz. The viedo version of the monster is slower to anger and not as brave. His character has been modified by camera angles.

A taping session is a queer mixture of excitement and boredom. Extremes of both are reached, sometimes there can be an odd mixture of both. Bartlett Auditorium seems to be changed, the seats are dark as the stage glows under work lights. When watching the actors or the monitors in the hall, it's very easy for an outsider to develop a romantic aura about it all. There seems to be a gut thrill at the moment of electronic creation. That however isn't the way it works. There is pride involved for the cast and crew, but they've done it all before. The whole process is approached as a job that must be done. After a take, when the tape is replayed and the decision is made whether to scrap it or reshoot, the crew doesn't sit around like they're waiting for the word of el Exellente. After each scene was put in the can, I had expected them to jump around like they had just scored the winning goal over arch-rival Riverdale High. No such thing ever happened, and I was most disappointed.

The sessions started at about 7:00 PM each night. They would begin slowly, blocking out the scenes to be shot that night. Players not involved in the current action would sip Jungle Juice, get into costume or try to sleep. No final takes were taped before 9:00, most took even more practice. The opening Prologue with credits, only lasts about five minutes on the screen, but it took two and a half hours to get it all together. 10:00 was usually snack time. Drake coffeecakes and bananas were imported from the Hatch. Around 11:00 they were often about to start on the third take, and I left. Every night the session lasted to about 2:00 AM. Fables have sprung up about the time they had to stay until 4:00.

A number of problems crop up when using a set designed for a play, rather than television. A raised wooden platform issues many noises that sound suspiciously unlike those of a stone watchtower. Also, shooting in a theater dampens the dialogue, as voices are swallowed by the empty seats. With careful recording and light feet, both have been avoided.

Camera placement is another problem, because a theater offers a few vantage points. Most of the shots were taken from one of three cameras set along the apron of the stage. Long shots had to be taken from a small platform rolled over the seats. There was a fourth "trump" camera that could be hidden in the set or mounted on a ladder for aerial shots, but this was often too shaky or picked up too many tape marks.

Opposed to film, video must be carefully co-ordinated and unfold right on schedule. While in film, the director can splice together many different pieces of celluloid and later lay over a musical soundtrack, video is nearly impossible to edit or add to. Everything that is to be recorded on the tape must happen live and simultaneously.

Almost anything can happen to spoil a take. Squeeks from a coffin, a cut finger on set, punching the wrong button, a jiggled camera or not enough hot water for the fog machine, can all stop production.

The quick cutting makes the whole process seem very spontaneous. Unfortunately, it is no such thing. Every gesture is carefully timed, every camera angle was practiced long ago, and the cuts arsall painstakingly mapped in advance. The only spontaneity comes when something goes wrong, and a frantic director tries to salvage the take.

Watching the off camera antics is an odd contrast to the taped illusion. Frankenstein who was just kicking Fritz, begins to dance with him singing, "Me, and, my, hunch, back," changing the word "shadow." Between Take Boredom is a severe disease which seems to strike cameramen the hardest. During a fit, one stood facing the few gathered to watch the session and proclaimed, "Kill, maime and smoke dope!" then lay down on the monsters couch and pretended to be pulsing with 50,000 volts. Later, two staged a fight from Gunga Din. Another night three played football with a crushed milk carton. Refusing to punt on fourth down, they scored a TD on a long bomb.

The atmosphere created by the television version of Frankenstein is perhaps superior to the stages'. In the play, the "Creation Scene" is technically very good, but it seems to go on for a long time. As the eye wanders over the set, it comes to look more and more like some grotesque, noveau riche Christmas display. On black and white tape, the viewer is allowed to choose his own colors, and the whole picture is far more evil. With the quick cuts, the dialogue becomes more exciting. The entire program is shot on the set, giving a weird feeling of claustophobia, which heightens the suspense.

The immediacy of video allows it to bring characters out further than the stage. Before, Frankenstein boarders on being a whining, self righteous creep. He has to wave his arms, take advantage of cripples and steal brains to look evil. When the camera moves in, we see Steve Driscoll giving a very controlled performance as the mad scientist. With eyebrows raised, head cocked and quiet intonation, the video version of Frankenstein oozes with evil. On stage the actor must generate broad emotions and fling them to the audience. On video, we are drawn individually to the actor. Up close we see how wonderfully evil and mad Frankenstein really is.

Elizabeth (Eileen Daly) also does well in the conversion. On stage she looks like a bad impersonation of Olive Oil weeping after Popeye. On video she is far more intense. We can see her deep concern for Frankenstein without back-of-hand-on-forehead type gestures. In tight with the camera, we see the terrified woman.

Fritz (Floyd Bailey) and Dr. Waldman (Ned Daly) were both quite good in the stage show, and made the transition to TV very well. Both were able to rely mainly on voice and facial expression, which comes off effectively on the screen.

The music for this program is the same tape used for the play. A member of the crew said that it sounded like fourty-three chimps on timpani. It does almost, but blends nicely with the visual images to create the proper feeling. One scene especially couldn't work without the accompaniment. In the "Teaching Scene," the monster reaches out to an open skylight, the only natural light he ever sees. Without music it would look like some odd fellow waving his hands in the air, but with soft dissolves and melancholy violins, it is a tender sequence. But nothing lasts forever in Frankenstein, especially gentle scenes. The next action is Fritz running in and confronting the monster with the flame.

The cameramen are at different levels of experience, but all proved very capable. It isn't as easy a job as it might seem, viewing the final product. While the director has the final choice on each shot's composition, it is the cameramen who must find it for him. Also, they must be fast, repeat; fast. If they cannot take directions off the headset and follow them instantly, he has no business behind a camera. In a tight scene with fast cutting, the cameramen were often called upon to swing to another angle, zoom in and focus, in a couple seconds. If the picture is not sharp on the monitor fast enough, it can throw off the tempo of the whole take.

Positive and negative reinforcement for the cameramen is swift, and deals in extremes. "Bad Camera 3, Great! Shit! Dynamite! Good camera work pal, You guys are slow tonight. Beautiful Camera 3!"

As Producer, it was up to Bill Menezes to keep the whole show rolling and co-ordinate communications. When shooting bogged down and scenes had to be retaped, Bill was the one who ended up giving the "pep talk." Climbing to the stage with his beard and classic New England features, he looked like a young Capt. Ahab jumping to the Quarter Deck. I really hoped that he would nail a gold coin to the set. He explained the snags and the revised shooting schedule. "Thank-you all for your patience, and all we can say is that we ask you for more of it." That summed up alot, because cast and crew were coming each night, and putting in the long hours only out of their good graces. The crew may have enjoyed playing with the lights and fog machine, but the novelty had left them long ago.

Coleman Blodgett as the Director, worked mostly on the blocking. He was the one backstage who talked to the cameramen and selected the sequences off the monitors. Both Coleman and Bill knew what they were after, and with help of cast and crew, they got it.

The tape is soon to be played on WTOY, probably Cable TV Channel 8 and perhaps PBS-57. If you saw the stage show, you'll be pleased at the conversion. For those who missed it, Frankenstein is a fine television program.

Several times between takes, the monster was heard to yell, "Lets go! I have a heavy date!" Perhaps they are planning a musical sequel. It was however, Elizabeth, who asked the ultimate question, "Will this get me into soap operas?"

Good Old-Fashioned Pornography

By Don Glickstein

In Northampton, on Bridge Street, there was a virgin whose legs were smashed with varicose veins and hardened arteries even in the Twenties. She rarely left her house those days, because once a week, she paid a taxi to drive her to the A & P, and there wasn't much money left after that. When the snow fell, the old virgin often sat before her street-side window with a mildewed mink around her shoulders, and she shivered. Not that she was actually cold; winter was just a sensation she didn't want to forget.

The cunts and cocks of Deep Throat bear strong resemblance to the virgin's stew, as well as to the New Deal of Franklin Roosevelt.

As the New Deal programs legitimized abject, Depression penury formerly reserved only for the poor and the lazy, so Deep Throat articulates an isolation in us all which previously belonged only to the varicose-veined lonely.

This pornographic legitimization is very hip now.

Pornography is an art. Horny, frustrated people are "pornophiles", connoisseurs. Last Tango is sold out for a month at 5 bucks a head because we all want to see if Brando doesn't feel what we don't feel. To the An American Family's Louds, it's all alright, Bill's outside women, Lance's confused sexuality, the noise of Grant's amps, it's all alright.

Watch your mouth, too, there are no more "fags", and the ogling of stacked broads are sexist, demeaning, and verboten.

Relationships are on the wane. Chicks'll hop into bed with every guy they like physically, and screw him who falls in love. Involvement is to be avoided 'cause we're just not going to be sticking around much longer. Yeah, the double-standard is sunk. Truth is in.

Dear John,

I met a couple of wonderful guys on my way to Amsterdam. I miss you. Love,
Mary

"Fifty-two percent of all 13-to-19-year-olds in the United States have had sexual intercourse," reports the Boston Globe. That's half the population. Half the population has made love before they were 20.

Every new film seems to hit the screen with the same message: something's happening and it ain't the Nineteen Sixties, but it's o.k. to do it.

Judy Garland's daughter stars in a movie:

"Screw him," her boy friend shouts about another.

"I do," says Sally Bowles.

"Well," he replies, "So do I.

The staid nephew in Travels With My Aunt feels up a teenage wanderer. The Heartbreak Kid makes it and unmakes it on the honeymoon. Rape is in and fun with Clockwork.

And it is fun. And it is healthy.

Perhaps we're finally on our way to producing a generation that isn't frustrated, a generation that, as Shirley MacLaine observed, doesn't bomb innocent people because it didn't make the first string of the Whittier College football team.

Love, after all, is an affluent concept, peculiar to the last 2 hundred years, if that, peculiar to the West, to the rich.

Maybe, at last we're realizing that this love jazz is an outdated concept. Alvin Toffler has pointed out that we don't have time to love anymore. We only have time for cursory relationships, and anything goes.

And why not?

Deep Throat stars Linda Lovelace as herself.

It isn't a movie with great symbolism and meaning.

It is a skin flick, pure and pern, with excellent editing, a cute plot, passable acting, and a self-deprecating soundtrack.

But Deep Throat is the first skin flick to achieve legitimacy not only in the pages of Screw magazine, but in the New Yorker and Time as well.

As such, its very existence is a work of art which reflects more than a limited audience and which, like all great art works, eventually alters the perceptions of that audience it reflects.

The movie is the story of Ms. Lovelace's initial sexual frustration, her discovery that her clitoris is located at the base of her throat, her subsequent joys, and finally, her engagement to the first man who proposes marriage to her – provided that he undergo an operation which will lengthen his cock from 5 inches to 9 inches.

It is a liberated woman's movie. Not only are Ms. Lovelace's patients (she is a sexual therapist) in need of fulfillment, but the ultimate happiness of Ms. Lovelace–the woman–is at stake, too.

Men become sexual objects in Deep Throat, and significantly, they have their failings. Ms. Lovelace doesn't seem to care that Dr. Young's cock is tired, sore, and bandaged; she wants some pleasure, and she gets it. The cock of one very timid man does not erect long enough for Ms. Lovelace's deep throat. Another is impotent. Another is perverted, preferring to sip Cola Cola out of a vaginal shot glass.

From the opening sex scene, when Ms. Lovelace's roommate is being sucked by a friend ("Do you mind if I smoke while you eat?" she asks him. Music accompaniment is "Blowing Bubbles".), to the end of the picture when Ms. Lovelace's future husband agrees to an operation, the men in Deep Throat care about women.

Not their love, of course, not their mental health, but their sexual health. In our society, after all, we don't have time for anything else. Besides, which is more important? Certainly, we won't have any mental health if our sexual life is not healthy.

This analysis may be a bit over-blown.

But Deep Throat is reflecting and then reinforcing new sexual behavior. As a movie that latently frustrated people see – it's a fashionable film –it is a prophet and a link, a substitute for those too old or hung up or unsure.

"Security is yours!" Deep Throat seems to shout. "Security is yours if you don't love, but if you fuck! Security is yours if you refuse to juxtapose and create, if you listen to Fifties revivals without the Fifties guilt."

Now is time for fucking, pure, unadulterated screw, for fun, for health. The varicose-veined virgins who sneak into the World 49th Street Theater off Times Square to see Deep Throat will soon be dead, and the world will be healthy. Abortion is o.k., bi- and homosexuality are accepted, and someday prostitution will be legalized and male birth control pills invented. The Lee Harvey Oswalds and Sirhan Sirhans, the Westmorelands and Calleys will be no more.

And more power to sex and Deep Throats and corridor orgies.

But what will happen to love? Romantic love.

Brando ripped more off than Maria Schneider's panties in the opening sex scene of Last Tango.

Traditional concepts of love, peculiar to our parents and grandparents generations, "true" love, may be destroyed in the same way as their pernicious sexual morality.

We some will miss it. We some will suffer, waiting for it, searching for it, in vain. Quietly, patiently Frustrated. Hopefully.

But most of us will react to its disappearance the same way Linda Lovelace reacted upon learning where her clitoris was:

"Well, I'll be damned."

An Interview With Bonnie Raitt

By Kevin Pelletier

I arrived at Worcester Dining Commons around 7 p.m., expecting to talk to Bonnie before the first show. But Bonnie and Freebo, her bass player, were stuck somewhere with a broken fan belt, not to mention the fact that Chris Smither was nowhere to be found. At 7:20 a down-trodden-looking Bonnie and towering Freebo trudged in, so I postponed the interview until the break between first and second show.

There was still no word on Smither, so it was up to Bonnie to kick things off. She took the stage promptly at 7:30, expecting to have to play the entire three hour show if Smithers never showed. She sailed into her first song, "Love Me Like A Man" (written by Smithers, by the way). Never having seen Bonnie perform before, I expected a thin, empty sound because the bass is the only accompaniment for her vocals and guitar. Quite the opposite, the overall sound was full-bodied and tasteful, Freebo's bass filling in all the right spots. But there weren't many, as Bonnie's hard-nosed yet very feminine vocalizing and shimmering acoustic guitar work made each number a personal statement. That's one area she's extremely gifted in - taking someone else's song and making it her own.

Most of her selections came from her two Warner Bros. albums Bonnie Raitt and Give It Up, and several of these were excellent songs by little-known writers the likes of Eric Kaz and Libby Titus and Paul Geremia. In her between-song raps as well as in her songs, she spoke to the audience as a close friend. Surely this affection was more than returned in the warm applause and joyful remarks accorded her throughout the performance. Bonnie closed out the first part of her set to let the just-arrived Chris Smither take the spotlight for his set. Smither maintained the high spirits by starting with a comically revised version "of Johnny B. Goode", and by treating us to some excellent folk and blues, some original some not. Smither is much the same type of performer as Ms. Raitt; that is, they both exude such joy and facility in what they're doing, and they both do it well.

Bonnie and Freebo came back for a short set, and the high point of the night arrived as Bonnie did an original, "Blender", some country blues with some invitingly suggestive lyrics. A standing ovation brought her back to do a superb "Love Has No Pride". Now it was time to talk with the lady in the hopes of getting to understand her and her music all the better.

After hassling with the ushers for a few minutes I managed to get backstage, or, more appropriately, into the kitchen area that Bonnie and troupe were confined to. After standing around like a total outcast for half an hour I was introduced and we isolated ourselves from the rest of the people for an informal talk. Right off Bonnie made sure to emphasize the fact that Entropy Productions was running the whole concert. Entropy takes all money after costs and puts it back into the community that the concert takes place in. As such this money will benefit any day care centers, busing programs, etc., in the Amherst area. Bonnie and Freebo themselves made only enough to cover costs, nothing else. Chris Smither did the show for zip, absorbing any costs himself. Such selfishness is certainly to be admired in the midst of the moneygrubbing, corrupt world of popular music.

Bonnie and I had a very informal talk, no notes or tape recorders to obstruct the free flow of words and ideas. The first thing that strikes you as you speak to her is her extreme physical beauty. Bonnie is a shapely redheaded who doesn't just use those assets for her own benefit; rather, she is a very sincere, concerned humanitarian who just happens to be quite attractive. As the conversation progressed Bonnie stressed her conviction that the music world is too centralized on the monetary aggrandizement of an elite few. She would like to see performers lower their prices more often and do more public benefit gigs to keep money in the public's power and out of the hands of greedy promoters and record executives. In the past Bonnie herself has done several such benefits, and her agreement or "contract" as such with Warner Bros. reflects this selfless attitude. Ms. Raitt can record where, when and with whom she chooses, an agreement all too rare in the feudalistic control of promoters and executives over recording artists. Bonnie's manager likewise is not a despot but rather a business partner, if you will. He handles the business angle of performing and recording. She tells him where she would like to play and it is his job to arrange it. One comes away from the matter realizing that Bonnie Raitt doesn't care much for personal fame and wealth. In fact, she'll be the first to tell you that. As she told me, she wants no huge home in the Colorado Rockies, no expensive limousines. She lives with three graduate students from Radcliffe (where she also spent two years) in a duplex in Cambridge, and drives an old half-ton Chevy pickup truck that she says "goes like hell". "Cambridge used to be my home," she told me, "but now it's a nightmare. "People come up to me on the street and say "Listen, I write songs, I want you to hear them", man. "As I said before, Bonnie is quite reluctant to be famous, but it's hard to fight that glamourous public image the promo men work so hard to create.

Integrity shines through in her actions and words, and it comes through clearly in her songs. Her own compositions are usually very personal cries of loneliness, pleading for true emotion in the world of cruelty and greed around her. Politics and music are kept separate, however. She sings because she enjoys it, because "it's better than being a secretary". More than once she noted that she didn't think she was really that good; it's just that, as she explained it, "At the time I was the only chick around singing country blues, and people started telling me that I could make a living doing it." Her music is her joy, and the money and other benefits that her music brings about is used for her beliefs and convictions. I'm not a blues singer," she complains. Rather, she sings anything that suits her tastes, which she describes as "funky." I then asked her if she ever planned to perform with a regular three or four-piece band, and she felt that it was rough for her to keep the show going sometimes, since she is the vocalist, rhythm and lead guitar player all in one. She'd like to add "maybe a really good piano player" to play rhythm while she concentrates on vocals and lead work. "I'd like to get into bottleneck, but that's something else entirely." Bonnie also is dissatisfied with her voice; it's too "pristine", as she puts it. She'd like to be able to sing with a grittier feel and intonation, because her tastes run in that direction.

All the while that we talked, Bernie's tiny dog Prune was chewing at my fingers and consuming my wine. Bonnie sees Prune as a sort of cosmic stabilizer. "She sort of keeps it all together. Like sometimes I'm at home all alone, wondering why the hell I'm in this business, and there's Prune nibbling away at my toe or some crazy thing, and suddenly it's all a joke."

As I left Bonnie I flashed on the thought that she's trying so hard to keep from becoming a pawn for some fat richman. She's performing because she truly loves the world and wants to do whatever she can to make it better for everybody. She's not performing for herself, rather for you, me, everybody. God bless Bonnie Raitt.

Alice Cooper

George Burns and Jack Benny were the first recipients of the "Alice Cooper Living Legend Award". The presentation ceremony took place at the party for Burns, held at Shepherd's at the Drake Hotel in New York City, Sunday, February 18th, following Burns' historic, sold-out Philharmonic Hall Concert.

Carly Simon

By Steve Pidd
Hot Favorite — Carly Simon (Elektra 1084)

Watch out, there is comes again. That glittering hair line creeping up in the dark like a snake creeping down its prey. Then comes that deceptively impatient whisper in between the serpent's strides, dripping with the venom of vengeance. "Son of a gun" is what she was behind her pert, inscription facade but don't fall yourself; this tender facade is not for the kill and there's a word much more apropos than "gun". The guitar chords are furnishing and well, effectively turning anxious. Anxious while the piano tarts in the background, at first with high pitched notes of warning, then heavy pounding chords that join in accompliceship to what previous total premeditated character assassination. And all the while that moment every here has to be getting closer and closer until it spoils its victim, rolls, and strikes.

"You walked into the party like you were walking onto a yacht,
Your hair accusingly dipped below one eye.
Your scarf it was captured, — And so am I. The lyrics are the forge of that beauty, gorgeous wound. Carly Simon, who plays the hunter, first attacks in awakening as she saves the haunting date for the chorus:

"You're so vain.
You probably think this song is about you.
You're so vain.
I'll bet you think this song is about you.
Don't you? Don't you? Don't you?"

She isn't given credit on the cover, but that's Mick Jagger contributing his as the chorus ends, his most unmistaking and restrained vocal since "Sweet Virginia Harper". But he disguises from Carly, but Mick's "performance" is memorable and his harmonies perfect. Jagger would be the obvious target for Carly's inclinations, which makes things all the more interesting. Latest reports, however, have indeed Warren Beatty. "You're So Vain" is a smooth sound, with being requested at radio stations across the country. Being a harbinger of the album, it set my high higher than I've ever been before standards that made it doubtful that anything could match it. All things considered, the album is quite a romp. "You're So Vain" is certainly the best song on the records, but the remainder run the gamut as good to excellent.

"The Right Thing To Do", the album's opener, takes the sweetly naive vocal on the Carly's debut song, "Don't The Way I Always Thought I Would Be". Light and bouncy, it is a tasty candidate about the exact type a follow-up single. "The Garter Family" is a sentimental, swaying ballad with sometimes delightful lyrics. "The Garter family lived well, dear for almost thirteen years/With Gene and I in separate from rag-dolls through treasures." Carly, a talented female if ever there was one (the cover photo deserves definite attention), makes an spoken about her sexual prowess and her party-hopping on the singer. From "The Garter Family" again: "And now at night, I think of how you grumble when you undressed/ And I find I miss you more than I'd ever have guessed."

"Waited So Long" and "Someone Me You Child" are contrasting distant towards her parents, the former being a "I'm a big girl now" recitation has James Taylor signing backup, contrasting to his set image, that "she's so virgin, and she's obviously wasted so long," a James Taylor song, however is so happy. Jim Horn (brother) and Hall and Linda singing the chorus on "Night Owl" with some gusto.

A final tally shows the album to be without anything bad. The title song, "So Sorry", along with "When You Close Your Eyes" and "I Was So Sorry" are charming, pure soft music with practicals, yet deeply felt lyrics. It's music that has a lot going for it. Carly Simon reminds herself as a writer with plenty of good material, viable memories, and lots of dialogue.

The Move

By David Sokol
THE MOVE: SPLIT ENDS (United Artists UAS 5800)

I first heard of the Move on the hand who did the Wio are ship Action, and destroyed automobiles and television on stage. Little did I know that from this group was to emerge some of the strangest and some of the best rock music to be recorded during the later 1960's and early '70's. Though the Move has gone through a lot of changes since their beginnings in 1966, they have turned out a string of sweet-sound material, including many singles, top in England yet virtually unknown in the United States.

They are often linked as a hard-rock group. Actually, the Move defy description. Odds enough, the Move have recorded for more companies than any other group that's ever heard of. Decca, MGM, Capitol, Wizard, and now United Artists. "Brontosaurus" is heavy, "Blackberry Way" is a Johnny Cash parodist, and "Night of Fear" is based on the old tune the "Old Scarecrow". Impossible to these and many of the songs which the Move have recorded in a rock method. Roy Wood, being one of the two original guitarists for the band, Wood is musical experience includes his playing such instruments as flute, oboe, cello, sitar, and bass. His associates varied further with the formation of the Electric Light Orchestra.

Split Ends, as it is called in the U.S., is a collection of singles. Message, originally released as a single to [illegible] "Do Yo" and "Walk Through The Wall", [illegible] "Down on the Farm" [illegible] single, "Tonight" and roll [illegible] all their [illegible] and melodies.

[illegible] sounds that it took a simple rock song like "Do Yo" to get the Move the airplay they've so long deserved. Dennis probably has the main problem with the Move's getting recognition in the United States. Does the top many things with "Girl Blue", does could have made it as a straight rock and roll band, or as a wood innovation and, but not as both. Listening to Split Ends one can clearly hear a fine of demarcation between the rock and roll songs like "Do Yo" and "Down on the Farm" a commercial single which sounds almost Jerry Lee Lewisish, and the more complex classical sounding "Message From the Country" or "It Wasn't My Idea To Leave". The Move realized these musical differences and formed the Electric Light Orchestra as an outlet for their more sophisticated musical ideas. ELO originally contained the other two Move members Jeff Lynne and Bev Bevan and is a concept band, combining something like a cross between the Move and classical music.

Keeping all this in mind, I was happiest to find that ELO's recording of "Roll Over Beethoven" is currently top 5 in England. No complaints mind, here even further. Roy Wood has left ELO to give Jeff Lynne greater freedom in the orchestra. Wood's new band, Wizzard is currently working on their first album, Wizzard's Bow.

Whether or not the Move are going to do any more recording is a question even their record company doesn't seem to be able to answer. Both Wizzard and ELO are rumored to be coming to America and if they do these concerts could be well worth going out of the way for. The Move were only in the States once in a year, which because of public ignorance only saw three cities. A United Artists press release says of the Wizzard stage show "that every those who have seen it can't bring themselves to believe it." It also notes that Roy Wood has completed his first solo album, Mustbury and that "rehearsal sessions have gone so far as to produce than this album could change the face of popular music." Well, rock could certainly stand a change.

ELO finds the Move of split ends with their members branching out in different directions. It is awfully good to

Little Feat

By Mike Kanik
Dixie Chicken
Little Feat
Warners BS 2600 (List: $6.5)

Lowell George—guitars, vocals, vocals
Paul Barrere—guitars, vocals
Sam Clayton—congas
Richard Hayward—drums, vocals
Kenny Gradney—bass
Bill Payne—keyboards, vocals, synthesizer

This is a surprise. According to all reports, Little Feat was defunct. Some said Lowell and Richard were joining John Sebastian, other just gave obituary notes. All of this was hard to believe because Little Feat was such an excellent band, and it did seem unlikely that Lowell would endanger his considerable singing-writing abilities by attempt to produce work for a non-entity a mild surprise to find Bonnie Raitt in the credits.

As was noted in the credits, the band has changed considerably since last time. Lost to Captain Beefheart is Roy Estrada (now known as Orejon), a bass player of considerable talent. In its place is Kenny Gradney. Payne, Hayward and George are still present from the original band, and still form the nucleus. The big news is the studio musicians added to the persons of Paul Barrere and Sam Clayton, both of whom have served time in the Dixtons, Bonnie & Friends circle. Also along on this one is a large cast of supporting musicians, including Fearing Jim Horn, Bonnie Bramlett and Bonnie Raitt in the chorus.

The expanded Little Feat has a funky New Orleans feel to it with continued back-up musicians playing bottle, cowbell and rhythm guitar. It's a fuller sound, a heavier sound, not far from the "second line" rhythm or melodic drumming recently popularized on Dr. John's Gumbo album.

This record also marks the continuing emergence of Lowell George as a major talent. He wrote or co-wrote seven of the ten songs here, plays lead guitar on all of them and sings eight of the nine vocals. He also produced the album, and therefore deserves most of the credit for the success of the album, because more than anything else it is the industrial sounds like a New Orleans bar band and shows off the new Feat right away. Lowell's voice has gotten more, and he sings much more freely than before. He's lost that whiney vocal style he had and sounds much better here. "Dixie Chicken" has a classic rock and roll bass line, a hooking chorus, a swaggering Lowell vocal, second line drumming, fantasing guitars and various blues riffs combined in a satisfying combination.

Side one is well-paced with two funky songs, "Dixie Chicken" and "Two Trains", followed by a soft acoustic number, "Roll On Ride". Then two dark back blues, a love from minute version of Allen Toussaint's "On The Way Home" and George's "Kiss It Off".

Bill Payne's organ sets the dusky mood for the fantastic "On The Way Home." "The same people you scrimped on your way up / Are coming down on your way up / You might meet on your way down."

"Kiss It Off" is set up nicely by Payne's synthesizer (he's the spacer between the other instruments, but is spotted by George's overamplified vocal.

As side two rolls onward, a tentative decision that the production of this album is responsible for its success. There are no virtuosos, no long solos, no studio gimmickry. The songs could have been played by an innovative producer, or they are not world-beaters in themselves. There are at least six instrumentals (during at most of the cuts, and Lowell's have a wonderful job arranging them. He's managed to take a lead guitar, rhythm guitar, acoustic guitar, bass, drums, congas, bottle, cowbell, various keyboards, multitrack back-up vocals and blend them all into cohesive tracks that sound simple. The sound is full, and well mixed. Lowell's secret is having the instruments play special parts, and dark in and out, only playing together for a big blast effect.

Lowell's guitar playing now features "less flash," bits individual notes and runs of blues bending, sliding notes that have become his trademark.

"Walking All Night" is the only Bill Payne vocal, and it sounds like it's going to take off, but never does. "Fool Yourself" is written by Fred Tackett and has a nice chorus. "I'd Rather Be The Bullfrog" is a successful synthesis of old and new Little Feat. "Apolonia" is a pretty, sleepy lament. "Lafayette Railroad" is a hoot in stereo/mono based on his talent.

This is a brilliant Little Feat album. There's no rocking monster on here, no "Honkytonk Midnight's", no "Teenage Service Bowie Knife". Little Feat has laid back and taken a different route. If you find the hard only for their rocking process, you'll rather look elsewhere. If you mind them because they made good music, you'll be right at home with Dixie Chicken. I guess Lowell knows that "If you keep on singing those songs of love / You're gonna wake up and find all your friends out of town."

Albert Inglis

Orville", "Spirits", and "Hands". Herb Bemman's bass on "Witches and Devils" and "Holy Holy", Sonny "Arthur" Murray's drums.

It is with the greatest trepidation and respect that I approach reviewing this album. First of all, Albert Ayler now has years dead, was one of the most incredible musicians, in my modest opinion, to ever walk this planet. Secondly, when you are dealing with an artist of the bulk of Ayler, all critical yardsticks are invalid - they lose their meaning, unable to express the incredible beauty that was both Ayler's art and personality. His death, the world and the wonder of the man's music are unbearable, and to mentioned regret I feel when I listen to Ayler is too much to describe in a policy record review. However, I can't glide in this direction. I think I might be able to show you the route clearly.

Albert Ayler was a musician of what various critics have deemed the "second wave" of the New Black Music, along with a gentleman by the name of Archie Shepp (the first generation - if you follow the artist's lineagings - belonged to Cecil Taylor rates Ayler played with for a short period of time). John Coltrane, and Ornette Coleman, among others, and other distinguished, avant musicians. And now it seems that Ayler is influencing yet another group of musicians - those of the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians in Chicago, which spawned such universally worthy groups as the Art Ensemble of Chicago. With the exception of Sun Ra and Cecil Taylor, no other musicians even come close to the depth and range of Ayler's creativity. The Ayler style impacted upon a rich, rich, warm vibrato tone on the tenor sax, and an almost unmatchable virtuosity on that instrument.

The album, which was made in 1967 (I believe) is currently being reissued through the Freedom label of Polydor, and is only available as a British import for the time being. Still, if your hearty brin eyes should open it, - jump at it and don't let it get away.

There are only four different cuts on the album - "Witches and Devils", "Spirits", "Holy Holy", and "Hands" - and, yeah, before you leap at my throat in a cadaverous rage, albeit Ayler was strong at the spiritual life, he was and is an musician that he often had people come up to him after concerts and tell him that they heard beautiful folk melodies, hymnous, and Indian music in what he was playing, and that it got with the new suggestion lines and pull you inside out. Dennis Gruenling, available Cecil Taylor bassist, is an embodiment of the dayliness and melodic movement of which the acoustic bass is capable, while Norman Howard's wrap, clear trumpet lines provide the perfect contrast (and complement) to Ayler's (e.g.-spiral) concentration. Rashi Hardaway seems less jumpy as a bass player than does Gruenling, but he is no less effective.

"Holy Holy" is for me the stand out track on the album, mainly due to Ayler's robust sense of humour (he spoke one of his earlier compositions - "Ghosts" - and if any of you have ever heard that, you'll realize the lessons that Ayler used to throw in all the faiths, and the astounding drumming of our friend Murray. Now honey, Murray almost singlehandedly started the rhythm revolution in the music, and he shows no sign of slowing down. While he's not as overwhelming as, say, Andrew Cyrille - Cyrille's control drummer, he is extremely energetic, and certainly leads the drums as an instrument, when it is conscious effort on his part to do these things in his playing, that is just "more cool." And only the idiots said that he had to be competitive that people could hear - and indeed, on his earlier Impulse albums, this tendency toward melody was readily audible. Ayler would often just wear out the admirers who were more than just admirers into the upper registers of the sax, and then more successfully through all the registers of the horn, always soaring and making melodic, as both Collins mentioned and listeners, having through to new heights of musical experience.

On the album, the Ayler legacy is in full evidently. The paired sensitivity that come through on "Witches and Devils" are startling, and the musicians reach deep into your other sculpting parts of the composed himself to get the sound he desired. Sonny Murray's drum work would alone justify this album. "Hands" ends the album with a bizarre type of prayer quartet, and what sounds like human beings talking (or chanting), and this is an integral part of what Ayler had - fundamentally, not only a religious bias. Albert was in some the saxophone - "You really have to play your instrument to musician-from-notes his sound. You really have to play. No kidding around."

"Remember all the incredible sounds that Beatles achieved? Do you think he was kidding around? Of course, albeit Ayler did have to go to Europe to enjoy any measurable success - he didn't get much recognition here. But Albert Ayler did foresaw: he was getting there.

In December 1970, he was found floating in the river in New York City, just 10 years of age. Reserved. At the message to create a great deal of beauty while he was on this world. Hats, hats, if Coltrane was the Father and Pharoah Sanders the son, then Ayler was really, as he had once said, the Holy Ghost.

I wish you realization.

Peter Frampton

By Kevin Fullerton
PETER FRAMPTON
AM sp 4340

This is by no means a new album, but it is a very fine album by a promising new solo performer. Released this past summer, Wind of Change has continued to sell briskly and has low orchestration for my liking. As such I felt it would be quite worthwhile to review the album now before it is too late to be available.

Peter Frampton was one of the driving forces behind that ever-promising band Humble Pie. In late 1971 in time, as Steve Marriott made the band head first into the hard-rocking pure rock syndrome. Frampton was all too emotional when that band, both as writer and instrumentalist, but this release should bring his considerable talents to the fore.

"Fig Tree Bay", the opening cut, tells us much of what is to come. Peter proves to be a facile arranger and producer, weaving strings, flute and marimba into this pretty, melodic tale of a vacation in an island paradise. The lyrics are sensitively autobiographical here as in most of the other songs, and the instrumental backing is provided by some of the members of Frampton's touring band. Cornell Frampton himself sings with an effortless charity and expressiveness. He also happens to be a superb guitarist, one of the most technically perfect and emotionally profound players to be heard in quite awhile. His lines may often appear simple but they prove to be very effective within the framework of each cut, almost seeming to be integral parts of each song as so aptly. There is not one wasted moment on this cut, and the same can be heard that of the rest of the album.

The ten selections on the LP can be roughly divided into two categories, the rockers and the ballads, "acoustic" songs. Though he seems rock with the acoustical necessity of, say, Johnny Winter, Frampton does have a keen sense of what musical elements will drive his songs in the intended direction. He tends to put some well-chosen production techniques to use, but the basic defined attitude or material to rock is there in the gutsy vocals and punchy, cascading guitar lines. Check out "Autumn Arch Flash" as it has been recorded here. Who would ever think that here could be anything for this cut? Peter makes them work, though, as they pack many of the changes and still dynamic depth. This cut will stand as a brilliant, unique arrangement of a seemingly unmatchable classic. The other rockers are "It's A Plain Shame", the story of one popular's hate with a [illegible] groupie, and "Want To Be", and "Midnight", the standout here. No album would be complete without at least a few super instrumentals, and this one is no exception. Kings Billy Preston and Klaus Voormann are present to give the star more excellent backing. Frampton's guitar virtually soars through the mixture his backup into creation, and Preston's organ is particular is pure Kinetic energy as it drives on I hold to look at "All I Want To Be" as a composition apart to "Show Me", an excellent Frampton composition from the Humble pie days, the LP. Both are mellow, dancing anthems to only Peter can write them.

"Wind of Change", the title cut, is the best of the album, more subtle weight. A gorgeous melodic line and the use of dulcimer and harmonica give the cut a charming, folksy quality. "Lady Lovright" is a tasteful love ditty song to Peter's true love. The lyrics are playful, witty, and in the melody like a glass. "Shine" and "Oh For Another Day" represent the introspective aspects of Peter's writing. The former is an elegiac reflection on the difficulties of making a fulfilling life, a tasteful strong philosophical writing, the melancholy mood of which is more than lifted by the Fairy tales for yet another day of all the good factors he finds surrounding him. Two very different ideas, set to music with no loss of emotional impact.

"The Lodge" is sort of midway between anthem and explosiveness. Kings's here again, and the shouting, screaming voice slowly builds into a whirlwind of sound. Frampton's guitar cutting and cascading with the other instrument to reach some re-organizing climaxes. Again horns enter into the solution, and again they heighten the dynamic impact of the cut.

I feel as if there's plenty of other things I should say about this LP, but rather it is too time we need to get more details of Peter Frampton's songs and styles. The man has enough talent and motivated to put many supposed solo performers to shame. He never overdoes it, things are always at the height of effectiveness with just the right applications of musical technique and devices. But in the final analysis, it's all up to you. Draw your own conclusions.

A Resonant Emotional Experience

By Jeffrey Polman

Sounder
Screenplay by Lonne Elder III; produced by Robert B. Radnitz; directed by Martin Ritt; starring Paul Winfield, Cicely Tyson, Kevin Hooks

There is no need to stress the point that Sounder is an important film, because this fact is understood. I will go so far as to say that it is one of the best films to come out of America this past year, as well as being one of the most beautiful, moving, and realistic portrayals of the Black Experience.

The story deals with the Morgans, a black share-cropper family of five, living in the heart of Louisiana during the Depression. Their encounters with the racist Whites and the temporary family disruption which occurs as a result, are seen through the eyes of David Lee, the eldest boy. Immediately, we sense a touch of To Kill a Mockingbird from the Black side, and all our sympathy rests with the family and with what will happen before the film ends.

Sounder is the name of the Morgan's dog, an appropriately ironic name, considering he is the character in the film who hears no prejudice between Blacks and Whites. In this respect, he is also the Morgan's only non-colored friend, simply because he is a dog, and thus offering no persecuting feelings toward them.

The film opens with Nathan (the father) and David Lee embarking on a night racoon hunt with Sounder. Screenwriter Lonne Elder III pulls a fast one on the white audiences here by inserting a couple "coons" into the dialogue, referring to the animal which is eluding them. Right on cue, numerous little chuckles pop out of the audience, cleverly exposing the viewers' inner connotation of the word, almost as a reflex action.

The two hunters return racoonless to the delapitated but necessary homestead, and the night scene ends with Mrs. Morgan hearing her husband leave the house again to find food.

In the morning, the three children wake up and are emphatic over a pot of cooking meat, which seems to have come from nowhere. Later, however, after returning from a wonderfully nostalgic baseball game with neighboring black families, we learn that Nathan had gone out and stolen the meat the night before from a neighboring white farm. He is immediately handcuffed and shipped off to jail, an action which we automatically revolt against in our minds, because we know he only stole the meat because he was unable to afford it (on account of the Whites).

Nathan is accordingly sentenced to a year of hard labor (what??) in a prison camp which the town sherriff refuses to disclose the name of. But one of the Morgan's laundry customers, a white woman, marches into the sherriff's office and after some difficulty, personally extracts the name of the camp for David Lee, who then journeys off in a southern Charles Dickens style to find his father. The boy is driven away from the camp before he can locate him. After passing through his first look at an all-Black school on the way home, and receiving a few doses of his literary heritage to take back as souvenirs, David Lee returns to his family.

It is important to note here that Sounder had been previously wounded by White gunshot the day Nathan had been arrested, and thus David Lee had been for a time undergoing a double search. But shortly after David's homecoming, Sounder limps back himself, and now we are beginning to see the obvious parallels between Sounder and Nathan, as an example for all Blacks. Nathan had constantly reminded David that Sounder would go away to heal and then come back, and he did, complete with Lassie undertones. Therefore, how else can the film end, then with Nathan returning with a limp? He does, of course, in a scene which will no doubt be heralded as a classic tissue drencher.

Sounder without its story content is much like a peach without its pit, but the technical aspects cannot be left out either, as a major contribution to the film.

The cinematography is excellent, not only because it captures the warmth of the family in sharp summer color, but also because of the way Director Martin Ritt uses it to emphasize prejudice. For instance, whenever one of the Morgans is seen in town, he or she is literally engulfed by whiteness: in the pillars and walls of the town hall, in the border fences surrounding White estates, even in the shirts worn by the conflicting race. We are clearly being handed a stark image of what it is like to be black, similar to Arthur Penn's Indian identification used in Little Big Man.

The acting in Sounder is so good that the entire cast should be awarded a combination Oscar for realism. Paul Winfield and Cicely Tyson, as the elder Morgans, more than richly deserve their Academy Award nominations, and Kevin Hooks as David Lee gives one of the best performances by a young actor since Dominic Guard's Victorian innocence in Joseph Losey's The Go-Between. Even Sounder manages to keep his eyes away from the camera lens (probably because of an off-screen bowl of Gravy Train).

But Sounder is most important as a message for all races, summed up exquisitely by Paul Winfield in a scene where David Lee brings a chocolate cake to his father in the sherriff's jail. Before David can be admitted, the cake has to be "checked out" for nasty tools which might be inside. The sherriff pokes large holes in the frosting, and then wipes the guck off his fork by using the clean napkin which was serving as a cover for the recipe. When Nathan receives the cake from David, he says that the holes don't matter, but rather the soul which is still inside. In other words, a race can be ridiculed, wounded, and shamed, but as long as the basic heritage is still present underneath, the wounds will heal, much like those of their beloved pet dog.

Sounder is a rich, emotional evening of entertainment, as well as being a true example of the American Cinema. No Black who has concern for his people should miss it, and no White who can still chuckle at the word "coon", should dismiss it.

NIKKO 7070 EPI MODEL 50 PHILLIPS GA 308

How can we say it? Because until this month, there had never been a receiver like the NIKKO 7070 for anywhere near the price. We've matched this incredible receiver with two of the outstanding performers we've come across in the last year the EPI 50's and the Philips GA-308, to offer you a system that gives the best sound per dollar anywhere!

The NIKKO 7070 features 34 watts RMS/channel, both channels driven from 20Hz. to 20kHz. at under 0.5% THD. This is the most conservative possible rating, and yet even compared to less conservatively rated receivers in the price range it offers up to 50% more power for you dollar. And features! Consider — two tape monitors with full dubbing facilities, high and low filters, stepped tone controls, FM muting, two phono and auxiliary inputs, full facilities for switching two pairs of speakers, 4 channel FM output for future conversion, and more! And it comes complete with walnut wood cabinet and full two year parts and labor warranty. All for $200.95 retail list!

To match this receiver we choose the equally incredible EPI 50 loudspeakers. Extremely compact in size, they nevertheless provide full bodied sound due to the unique EPI woofer and tweeter. The woofer is a slightly scaled down version of their full sized model used in all their speakers in multiple combinations, and is capable of fundamental bass response down to 48 Hz. The tweeter is the same unique acoustic suspension model found on every speaker EPI makes, with clear extended highs and remarkable dispersion.

With the power and response to reproduce such low bass, it is very important to make sure the turntable doesn't contribute any audible rumble to this system, so we choose the belt driver Philips GA-308 to round out this system. With a totally suspended turntable and arm system, rumble is filtered out before it reaches the needle. The table also features viscous damped cueing, pop filter, anti-skating and automatic shut-off and lift at the end of a record. It comes with an ADC 250X/E elliptical magnetic cartridge, dust cover and base.

This system has a retail list of $540 — you save 25% at its system price of $399

The idea here is to create the least expensive component system that represents no compromise with the basic necessities of a complete hi-fi, that for economic reasons can't be included in system #1. Such features as a magnetic phono cartridge, cueing, speaker switching, loudness control, acoustic suspension, two-way speakers and much more are included at this low price.

The heart of this system is the Nikko 2010 FM-Stereo Receiver with 24 watts (IHF) of power, featuring full facilities for two pairs of speakers, tape monitor, loudness, double protected output and power supply circuitry and modern blackout dial. An excellent FM section with 3.0 UV sensitivity rounds out this fine unit. Comes complete with beautiful walnut cabinet and full two years parts and labor guarantee.

Complementing the Nikko 2010 is the BSR 310X turntable, with Shure M75C magnetic cartridge. This record changer features cueing, anti-skating, and variable tracking force dial, and is equipped with a heavy-duty four-pole induction motor. Its dependability is assured by the manufacturer's full parts and labor warrantee of one year, and comes complete with operating dust cover.

Rounding out the "Beginner System" is the incomparable Creative 22 loudspeaker. No other speaker we've encountered anywhere can match it in value for sound, size and price. A compact unit, it nevertheless delivers a big sound rivaling others twice its size, due to its 6 1/2" acoustic suspension woofer and cone type 3 1/2" tweeter. Enclosed in a heavy walnut cabinet, a five year parts and labor guarantee assures its long term quality and dependability.

Films

ALICE'S RESTAURANT (1969)
Arthur Penn's film of the Arlo Guthrie ballad. Good in parts, especially the retelling of Arlo's Thanksgiving Day arrest. The film, though, attempts to make a serious statement on the difficulties of living within the emerging counter-culture of the late Sixties, but does it with stock Hollywood ploys and far too self-conscious direction. The film becomes a melodrama in hipple dress. The acting is good, especially Pat Brock as Alice. Penn often relies upon the aesthetic beauty of an image to carry the dramatic weight of a scene, all this does is undermine its dramatic worth. Arlo Guthrie sings and plays himself; Joni Mitchell sings "Songs To Aging Children" in a beautifully photographed burial in the snow. Chapin Auditorium, Mot. Holyoke College, Saturday, 3/10, 8.

BLACK ORPHEUS (1958)
The myth of Orpheus and Eurydice pursued by Death through the slums and carnival of Rio de Janeiro. All the roles are played by Blacks. Notable sequences: the sunrise; wandering among the old records; the encounter with Death in a power plant; the carnival and the final chase. The film's brilliant, apparently spontaneous, performances by black actors (many of them nonprofessionals), its entertaining Latin-American music, its beautiful color photography by Bourgoin, and its use of Rio's exotic character and carnival led to a well merited Palme d'or at Cannes and world-wide commercial success. With The Four Hundred Blows. Friday and Saturday, 3/9 and 3/10.

BURN! (1971)
A visually powerful yet plodding film about the toil and unbelievable suffering of blacks on a 19th century Caribbean isle. The plot is both confusing and, at times, ridiculous, in which Marlon Brando portrays an oppressive British official who initiates a slave revolt and then crushes it. An attempt by Italian director Gillo Pontecorvo to revive the swashbuckling epic which isn't wholly successful because of the weakness of the script, but still manages to have a believable look to it. Academic Building, Hampshire College, Tuesday, 3/13, 7:30.

DECAMERON (1971)
Pier Paolo Pasolini's reverent and altogether satisfying interpretation of Giovanni Boccaccio's fourteenth century tales. The episodic, sporadic telling of the stories is reminiscent of Fellini's Satyricon in their earthy and bizarre quality, but Pasolini has a rich comic touch and a sense of unity that the Fellini film lacked. Pasolini deals with the Fourteenth century with an unusual realism, but manages to make each bawdy tale coherent to our present experience. One of the most ignored films of 1971, a joyous celebration of humanity. Student Union Ballroom, Monday, 3/12, 7 and 9:30.

DELIVERANCE
A superior adaptation of James Dickey's novel about four men on a canoeing trip who find themselves caught up in a whirlpool of catastrophe, murder and rape. The film was directed by John Boorman, who made the crackerjack gangster flick of the late sixties, Point Blank, and it is filled with the same ferociously tense quality of man struggling against an alien environment that enriched the earlier film. Whatsmore, while the movie stands up as a tremendously engrossing adventure story, it also has an intruigingly ambiguous viewpoint regarding its violence and the morality involved. John Voight gives a highly controlled, intelligent and precise performance in the lead role. Showcase Cinemas, Hadley.

DUCK SOUP (1933)
The Marx Brothers' most striking film is a satire on fascism and war. The director, Leo McCarey, does not seem to have had strong feelings about these so it might be assumed that the Marx Brothers themselves were responsible, with McCarey being only technically the director. The famous gags include a unanimous Parliament, dancing and singing to opera tunes and blues, including "All God's chillun got guns"; Harpo taking a blow torch from his pocket or using his scissors to cut cigars, sausages, hair, ties, coat tails, etc; Harpo doing a Paul Revere act and seducing a beautiful woman, after which one sees first, a pair of high-heeled shoes, then Harpo's boots, and, finally, a set of horseshoes; Harpo paddling in a container of lemonade; the shells flying through the window during the battle until Groucho pulls down the blinds; the motorcycle and sidecar that serve as President Groucho's transportation — at one time the motorcycle alone moves, the next only the sidecar; Groucho's call for the world to send help, which brings a runner, swimmers, rowers, elephants, giraffes, gorillas, dolphins, etc; the millionairess Margaret Dumont constantly baffled by Groucho; the scene before the false mirror in which Groucho finds first one then two reflections of "himself" in white nightgown and nightcap; the entry of the new president heralded by trumpets, girls throwing flowers, guards with raised swords, and Groucho sliding down a fire pole from upstairs and asking, "Who are we waiting for?" The first part of the film is somewhat weak but the rhythm of the film mounts to a crescendo and the battle in the finale can only be described as inspired. Mahar, Friday, 3/9, 6:30, 8:15, 10.

THE FOUR HUNDRED BLOWS (1959)
Antoine Doinel, a twelve-year-old schoolboy, lives at home in an atmosphere of indifference, falsehood, and quarrels between his father and mother and suffers ignorance and punishment from his teacher at school. The story of young adolescence is largely autobiographical, being based on director Francis Truffaut's own childhood and experiences in a reform school. This warm and personal film, made with limited finance, is the then 27-year-old Truffaut's first feature. It was shot entirely in locations and superbly captures the moods of the city that surround the boy. Its lyrically realistic and totally unsentimental portrait of adolescence has never been matched in the cinema. This film was a world-wide success, encouraging other producers to support young inexperienced directors and helping to establish the French reel wave. The young Antoine Doinel was played by Jean-Pierre Leaud, the actor who played the older Antoine some ten years later in Truffaut's Stolen Kisses and Bed And Board. Playing with Black Orpheus. Amherst Cinema, Friday and Saturday, 3/9 and 3/10.

Shot at by low-flying aircraft, Cary Grant in North by Northwest.

THE GRADUATE (1968)
Benjamin Braddock (Dustin Hoffman), an aimless, recent college graduate is seduced by Mrs. Robinson (Anne Bancroft), the wife of his father's partner, and falls in love with her daughter, Elaine (Katherine Ross).

Mike Nichols's second feature, set in Los Angeles suburbia, obviously struck a responsive note among audiences. It was an enormous commercial success, not only because of the delightful sexual scenes, but also because of the film's emotional elevation, its central character embodying innocence regained, and its romantic suggestion that true love can still triumph even in the sordid Sixties. Nichols' visual style, clearly derivative of European directors, beautifully conveys the cultural climate of the idealistic, if bumptious hero. Anne Bancroft and Dustin Hoffman give impeccable performances. Mahar, Saturday, 3/10, 7, 9, 11.

Jean Renoir's great anti-war film. Bowsley Crowther wrote in the New York Times, "In 1937, just one year before Hitler began to fan his new armies across Europe and start the ominous overture to the Second World War, there was released in France a motion picture which one can confidently say is the most telling examination of the mystery of why men submit to war ever put on the screen. It is Jean Renoir's Grand Illusion, a film which, for everything-theme, philosophy, construction, staging, performance and mood—merits the highest commendations and the monumental fame it has achieved."

The story is set against a prison escape of French aviators from a German Prisoner of War camp in World War I where the common aristocratic bond between the French officers makes them comrades with their German counterparts. Introducing his film to the American public in 1938, Renoir wrote: "I hear Hitler yelling on the radio, demanding the partition of Czechoslovakia. We are on the brink of another 'Grand Illusion'. I made this film because I am a pacifist. To me, a true pacifist is a Frenchman, a German, an American. The day will come when men of good faith will find a common meeting ground. Cynics will say that my words at this point in time are naive. But why not?" He added in 1946: "The Frenchmen in this film are good Frenchmen and the Germans good Germans, like those before the 1939 war. I found it impossible to take sides with any of the characters." Although it won an award at the Venice Film Festival, the film was banned in Germany and Italy. It was a great success elsewhere, and won an Academy Award. It was voted one of the 12 Best Films of All Time at Brussels in 1957 and enjoyed further success on its release. Playing with Wild Strawberries. Amherst Cinema, Sunday and Monday, 3/11 and 3/12.

JERIMIAH JOHNSON
Robert Redford as a nineteenth century mountaineer which makes him a legend through narrative design rather than heroic action. Sidney Pollack directs this in a grand, ponderous manner. It's a beautiful film to watch but a bit difficult to swallow. With Will Geer. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

JULES AND JIM (1960)
Certainly one of the greatest films of all times. A work rich in historical and character resonances and feelings. Pauline Kael has written: "Jules and Jim is, among other things, the best movie ever made about what I guess most of us think of as the F. Scott Fitzgerald period. This treatment of the period is a work of lyric poetry and a fable of the world as a playground, a work of art as complex and suggestive in its way as the paintings and poetry and novels and music of the period that it is based on". The story, adapted from a novel written very late in life by Henri Pierre Roche, concerns the triangular relationship between two men and a woman. Before the First World War, an Austrian, Jules and a Frenchman, Jim, become friends. They meet Catherine, who becomes Jule's girl and marries him. When the war comes, the men fight on opposite sides. After the war, Jim visits Jules and Catherine in Germany. Catherine develops a relationship with Jim that Jules encourages. The story ends tragically. The principal performances are flawless: Oscar Werner captures the brooding sorrow of Jules, Henri Serre is fine as the romantic Jim, and Jean Moreau beautifully illuminates the neurotic and extraordinary Kathe. Truffaut has said of the relationships portrayed in the film: "There are two themes," "That of the friendship between the two men, which tries to remain alive, and that of the impossibility of living a trois. a Giant Cartoon Show. Sat. March 10, 7:30 p.m. and 10 p.m. Main Lecture Hall, Hampshire. 50c. KA-POW is a giantic collection of animated films, primarily from the 30's, 40's and 50's. Here will be early Disney work: Mickey, Donald and Goofy in "The Clock Cleaners"; Pluto in "Bone Trouble", the Three Little Pigs and the Big Bad Wolf in "The Three Little Pigs". The live action films that were generated by cartoons will be; "The Return of Captain Marvel", Columbia's six chapter serial on "Batman", and an episode from the TV series of Superman.

The world's first animated film by Winsor McKay called "Gertie the Dinasoar" will be shown, as well as some new computor generated animations by Jordan Belson and the Whitney brothers.

Also seen will be early Terrytoon animations, plus a huge assortment of puppets, cats, dogs, mice, good guys, bad guys and magically talking animals and objects.

A few of the old films will sport updated soundtracks, and parts of the show will be double-screened. The whole gang of your favorite cuddly cartoon cut ups will be there. Ms. Betty Boop says she'll also come. Main Lecture Hall, Hampshire College, Saturday, 3/10, 7:30 & 9:30.

KLUTE (1971)

Jane Fonda gives the finest performance of her career as a high class call girl being terrorized by a perverted murderer. Donald Sutherland plays Klute, a midwestern detective who helps track down the murderer. The script is taut and evokes memory of the best of Hitchcock; unfortunately the direction, by Alan J. Paluka, is overly stylized and too melodramatic for the film to be exceptional. Still well worth seeing for Fonda's performance and its excellent evocation of New York's freaky milieu. Fonda won an Oscar and the New York Films Critic Award for Best Actress. Student Union Ballroom, Sunday, 3/11, 7 and 9:30.

THE LADY VANISHES (1938)

With The 39 Steps and The Man Who Knew Too Much, this film remains the finest work of Alfred Hitchcock prior to his American films. It is a film of high comedy and suspense. A girl befriends an elderly lady who inexplicably disappears from the train bringing them back from a Balkan holiday resort. Attempts are made to persuade the girl that she has had a hallucination--that the woman never existed. In spite of the menace of espionage situation, the atmosphere is essentially humorous. The gallery of characters involved are stock comic figures--a lawyer on an illicit holiday with another man's wife, for instance. The film moves with the characteristic pace of the pre-Hollywood Hitchcock. The script was the work of Sidney Gilliatt and Frank Launder, who later formed an effective production team, and the photography was by Jack Cox who had not worked with Hitchcock since the B.I.P. days. The film was released at about the time of the Munich crisis and the international tension of the time provided an appropriate climate for its reception. It was among the most successful pictures of 1938 and was the last of six fine thrillers produced by Hitchcock in four years. Now his contract with G.B. had come to an end and he was on the market. With Margaret Lockwood and Michael Redgrave. Thompson 104, Tuesday, 3/13, 7 and 9.

THE LAVENDER HILL MOB (1951)

An apparently meek, respectable, and honest Bank employee responsible for supervising deliveries of bullion, organizes a "gang" to steal the gold, which they ship out of the country as Eiffel Tower souvenir paperweights. This lighthearted satire of British middle-class values is one of the best of the postwar British comedies produced at Ealing Studios under Michael Balcon. Its pace is continually lively, the robbery sequence and the final chase incorporate a fine sense of film comedy timing, and there is an exhilarating sequence on the Eiffel Tower. Alec Guinness' brilliant performance in this and the earlier Kind Hearts and Coronets helped make him famous. Amherst Cinema, Thursday and Friday 3/15 and 3/16.

MAN OF LA MANCHA

The play enchanted many, despite a book, score, and lyrics that merged comic book Cervantes with the worst of Tin Pan Alley. The film appears to be doing well in lieu of the fatal reviews it has received. This popular bowlderization of classic themes has a popular resiliance, but isn't either a good musical or workable adaptation of Cervantes. The production seemed cursed from the start: once principals Peter O'Toole and Sophia Loren were signed to work with director Peter Glenville, United Artists took the project away from the director. He conceived the film more along Cervantes original intentions, which didn't appeal to the UA bosses who spent millions for the rights. The logic was they could have "Don Quixote" for next too nothing, but Man of La Mancha cost plenty and had road-show box-office appeal. Director Arthur Hiller (Love Story, The Hospital) was called in and everyone worked on the production with professional, but half-hearted spirit. None of the principals could sing, which didn't help matters at all. The film has a hackneyed persuasion, like being sucked in by a whirlpool of sentiment. Peter O'Toole plays Cervante/Quixote in much the same mad way he played the crazy Earl in The Ruling Class, and he's adequate. Sophia Loren as Aldonza, the spitfire Quixote converts, has a beauty few actresses can equal on the screen fiery and a temperament which makes the film worth watching. Although misconceived as a play and mismanaged as a film, it has its own peculiar charm. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

MORGAN! (1966)

Karel Riecz's manic fantasy about an intense young man who hallucinates himself as Tarzan and King Kong and attempts to win back his rich, slightly amoral wife. The film bears a casual relationship to The Graduate, especially in the portrayal of its hero's pursuit of his wife, but is set in Working class Britian and is a much deeper analysis of an unbalanced personality. Morgan's pranks are often quite funny, his hallucinations often perplexing, and the tone a bit dense. Riecz is a master of form; his films are technically perfect and lucid, even when his material is ambiguous. David Warner has an angular and funny appearance which matches his bewildering personality; Vanessa Redgrave as his wife is charming as the bored, rich girl. Certainly one of the most interesting films of the Sixties. Merril Science Center, Sunday, 3/11, 3:30 and 7:30.

MR. ARKADIN (1955)

The wealthy Mr. Arkadin, played by Orson Welles, threatened with blackmail by a young man who is courting his daughter, searches out his own past. Orson Welles has described his hero: "Arkadin is a self-made man in a corrupt world. He didn't try to make himself better than this world but, as a prisoner of it, is its best expression." Maurice Bessy has written, "It is concerned with an international tycoon who is surrounded by mystery. It required a true police investigation in order to lift the veil that cloaked the criminal origins of his immense fortune. His thirst for power shattered love, for Mr. Arkadin saw his daughter removed from him by the adventurer whom he had commissioned to remove the traces of his past. The artificial universe of the hero collapses, and his suicide is this time the only decent conclusion" (Maurice Bessy). Not only did Welles embody Arkadin, but in the English version (it was made also in Spanish) he dubbed the voices of 18 actors. The film is a return to the general theme of Citizen Kane, but in another period. It was not edited by Welles, who has consequently somewhat disowned it. But the script is very much his and carries the recognizable signature of his powerful spirit and the ideas that preoccupy him. Hampden Dining Commons, Tuesday, 3/13, 7:30.

MURMUR OF THE HEART (1972)

A fine achievement by director Louis Malle, that is a sensitive and sophisticated treatment of a very delicate and provocative theme. The film concerns a 15-year-old boy caught in the awkward process of growing pains, who has an incestual desire for his mother. The relationship finally ending up in a sexual encounter, and while the film contains fine acting and direction, it should be viewed only by those open minded enough to accept the film's controversial themes. It stars Lea Massari and Benoit Ferreaux. One of the Best Films of 1972. Sage Hall, Smith College, Saturday, 3/10, 7:30 and 9:30.

NIGHT OF THE LIVING DEAD (1968)

This film began with $6000 and a vague idea director George Romero had of transforming an allegorical story he had written into "a real blood and guts film." The results overwhelm the viewer with a series of grotesque images unequalled for their sheer audacity by any film within memory. The major distinction is that the film makes explicit the gore we've always wanted horror films to show, and without exaggeration has claims to being the most gruesome and frightening film ever made. Hitchcock's Psycho exploits our raw emotions, Night of the Living Dead does even better. It is a brilliant idea realized on film, a huge sick joke acted out in complete seriousness and executed with unusually astute cynicism. The idea is what would happen if one night the recently dead came alive and stalked the country murdering the living, not only killing their victims but eating them, sometimes both at the same time. The premise is as absurd as it is frightening, and it is pretty scary for we witness our own worst fears come true. With The Projectionist. Thompson 104, Friday, 3/9, 7 and 10.

NORTH BY NORTHWEST(1958)

The professor, a CIA agent, invents a mythical spy to force the hand of a foreign spy. An advertising executive, Thornhill, mistaken for the professor, is hunted across the USA and gets involved with a girl before the final showdown. The film is not dissimilar in its shape to The 39 Steps and Saboteur. Its fantastic chase across America, its deft wit, and its spirited style make this one of Hitchcock's best Hollywood films. It's best known sequences include the hero lured to a remote Indiana prairie and attacked by a biplane "cropdusting where there ain't no crops"; the climax on Mount Rushmore with the chase and fight on the gigantic sculptured faces of American presidents. A first rate cast including Cary Grant, James Mason, Eve Marie Saint, and Leo G. Carroll, catch the explicit sexual imagery at the final fade-out-Hampden Dining Commons, Sunday, 3/11, 7:30.

PLAY IT AGAIN, SAM

Woody Allen's stage success was brought to the screen by Herbert Ross, but the movie remains all Allen's. His brilliantly conceived story revolves around a movie reviewer who sees old movies all day and when he's not he fantasizes about his hero, "Bogey." Woody Allen plays the shy, bumbling fool who gets divorced and enters his own world of fantasies. Ross' direction is perfect in the scenes which juxtapose old footage from Casablanca with scenes of Woody and his girlfriend, Diane Keaton. At the very end of the film Woody says goodbye to Ms. Keaton at the airport in a direct which is so inspired that only Woody's ingenious mind could conceive of such a set up. The comedy is less verbal than many of Woody's previous successes (Bananas, Take the Money and Run) but his slapstick style and sympathetic nature make it just as funny. Diane Keaton, Michael's second wife in The Godfather, gives a tender comic performance as Woody's best friend's wife. Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton.

THE POSEIDON ADVENTURE

A harmless pop epic that aims to please but tends to disappoint. The film tauts an incredible roster of second-rate stars playing passengers on board a luxury liner which, on its final voyage, becomes capsized in the Mediterranean. The suspense is built on who will escape and how they'll do it. It's the latest in the series of assinine entertainments made popular in recent years, like Airport and Skyjacked. At the start the situations and relationships are contrived; the film picks up once the boat capsizes, but not much. The special effects and the capsize itself would look great on television. On the screen it has the anemic look of a production burdened with a light budget. The insides of the Poseidon are recreated from the Queen Mary and its great if you possess a fetish for the deep insides of luxury liners. The script plays off the worst sentimental responses and pretentions about life. As a hip preacher who attempts to save the day Gene Hackman appears to be a waterlogged Auntie Mame. The whole thing sounds like a wretched musical comedy -- you keep expecting Hackman to break into a rousing revival number called "Let There Be Light." Shelley Winters sparks the film with a sympathetic caricature of a Jewish grandmother travelling to Israel with her husband, Jack Albertson; but their scenes together are filled with song cues out of Fiddler on the Roof. The remaining ensemble is strikingly mediocre; Ernest Borgnine and Stella Stevens are vulgar prototypes of Wallace Beery and Jean Harlow in Dinner at Eight. The film's best moments are the obese Shelley's underwater rescue attempt, Richard Neame directed, all too methodically. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

PRIME CUT

Michael Ritchie's film which Lee Marvin plays a white slave ganster who builds a gang of societal reject to knock out the mob in charge. The opening film is a classic in gore, where a human form is sent through a slaughterhouse and comes out looking like hamburger. Ritchie's direction is pedestrian and the film itself is mediocre, although often gory. Student Union Ballroom, Thursday, 3/15, 7 and 9:30.

RECKLESS (1933)

Jean Harlow's only musical, with Clark Gable and directed William Wyler. Harlow is perfection in the musical numbers. With Twentieth Century. Thompson 104, Thursday, 3/15, 7:45.

THE RULES OF THE GAME(1939)

French critic Georges Sadoul has written: "The Rules of The Game was made under, perhaps, the most favorable of conditions, its director was in the prime of his life, master of himself and of his art, and yet it was a complete failure. The film was withdrawn from general distribution only a few days after its first showing, and was not offered to the open market until almost thirty years later. A few weeks later the war broke out, and the film was banned by the censor, and so ended its short career. This film has, however, outstanding value because it is the only French work that covers the period from the days of Munich to the early months of the war. It may be said that Jean Renoir did achieve the ambition recorded in the epitaph to his works: that a similar epoch he should give to France a work of equal magnitude as Le Mariage de Figaro which Beaumarchais presented on the eve of the revolution. Historically speaking, rules of the game was both in style and in theme absolutely the film of the moment." The moment is so perfectly portrayed in this transparent, perfect film that it was recently chosen the Second finest film of all times by the critics poll of Sight and Sound magazine. It concerns itself with two love stories, one between a brash, unconventional aviator and the wife of a rich marquis; and one between a newly hired poacher at the marquis's estate and the beautiful wife of gamekeeper. The romantic intrigues transpire at a weekend house party at a country chateau. The film's tone is flawless, it is certainly one of the greatest films of all times. With Wild Strawberries. Amherst Cinema, Monday and Tuesday, 3/12 and 3/13.

A SEPARATE PEACE

John Knowles classic story of the relationship between two boys at a New England prep school during the Second World War is filled with dialogue lifted from the book and spoken all over the lovely grounds of Philip Exeter Academy. Fine if you enjoy tours. Director Larry Peerce's attempt at naturalism eliminates the story's dramatic value. It unfolds in a series of lyrical scenes which lead nowhere. The non-professional actors do well enough. One of the year's major disappointments. Jerry Lewis Cinemas, Northampton.

SHANE (1953)

At the turn of the century, Joe Starret, his wife, Marion, and son Joey are trying to homestead with their neighbors in Wyoming despite Ryker, who wants to keep the land free for open-range farming. Shane, a mysterious stranger with a gunfighting past, arrives in the district, is befriended by the Starretts and idolized by Joey. A classic story of revenge follows. This psychological western was produced by Paramount to celebrate the 80th birthday of its founder, Zukor. Richly atmospheric, with a persuasive evocation of the period, it is structured like a modern tragedy - the symbolic hero figure only prepared to apply his powers in a righteous cause and refusing to take advantage of the unspoken love between himself and the wife of his host. Though not revolutionary, it is a superior western that enjoyed an enormous commercial success and whose appeal seems not to have lessened with the years. In retrospect, Shane seems also like an embryonic Peckinpah hero whose services are needed one more time before the settlers finally establish their civilization and take over the "open range" of the West. The "settled West" is beautifully caught by Stevens in the Starrett family scenes and in the party and burial sequences - places where Shane does not, and cannot, belong. With Alan Ladd, Van Heflin, Jean Arthur, Brandon DeWilde, and Jack Palance. Main Academic Building, Hampshire College, Sunday, 3/11, 7 and 9:30.

SOUNDER

This film is undoubtedly one of this year's ten best movies. Time Magazine has said of this film, it's "a compassionate and loving film about being black in America. Sounder has the strength of subtlety and the power of emotional commitment to its subject, though not the kind of inchoate fury that can blister and blind. It manages as no other movies has done to take the special pride and trial of being black and work it into an experience that can be shared and felt by anyone." Pauline Kael in the New Yorker said of the film "it is extraordinarily simple, yet deeply, emotionally rich. The first movie about black experiences in America that can stir people of all colors. Cicely Tyson plays the first great black heroine on the screen." The film is directed admirably by Martin Ritt, and the screen play is by Lonne Elder III which he adapted from a children's novel by William H. Armstrong. The film is concerned with a poor but hardworking southern black family in 1933. Ms. Tyson has won two major film acting awards and is nominated for an Oscar. Campus Cinemas, Hadley, Calvin Theater, Northampton.

TO SIR, WITH LOVE (1966)

Sidney Poitier's cleans up a British ghetto school (and Lulu too). Forget it. Student Union Ballroom, Saturday, 3/10, 7, 9, 11.

THE TRIP (1966)

Roger Corman's hopeless film about a drug trip in which Peter Fonda plays a bored, Southern Californian filmmaker reduced to directing television commercials who drops some acid. The film flops terrifically; Corman goes all out for effects, including a final sexual encounter which amounts to the greatest record of "goosing" ever captured on film. The special effects are manic. Written by Jack Nicholson. Campus Center Auditorium, Sunday, 3/11, 7 and 10:15.

TWENTIETH CENTURY (1934)

A famous Broadway producer, Oscar Jaffle, having discovered and married an unknown actress, Lilly Garland, who had left him to go to Hollywood, finds her again on the Twentieth Century Limited train en route to New York. He spends the whole trip trying to cajole her into appearing in his next show and finally gets her to sign a contract after feigning a fatal illness. One of the earliest of the "screwball" comedies but with dramatic, and even tragic, overtones, this film has tremendous pace and vitality deriving not only from the rapid-fire dialogue but also from the continual sense of motion of the train. John Barrymore's performance as the producer reflects something of his own image as does that of Carole Lombard, who was then a rising star and whom this film made famous. With Reckless. Thompson 104, Thursday, 3/15, 9:30.

WILD IN THE STREETS (1968)

Christopher Jones plays the pop Messiah who turns the Republic into an Orwellian nightmare. A joyous mess of a film; filled with all kinds of social and political nonsense and wretched performances. The film is good fun, nonetheless. With Hal Holbrook, Susan Strasberg, and Shelley Winters, more garish than ever. Campus Center Auditorium, Sunday, 3/11, 7 and 10:15.

THE WILD ONE (1954)

A gang of motorcyclists, clad in black leather and led by Johnny (Brando), terrorize a small town. Johnny falls for Kathie (Murphy), the sheriff's (Flippen) daughter. The population eventually rebel against the behavior of the gang and attempt to mete out rough justice to Johnny, who is saved by the sheriff. Perre Kast, in an article titled "The Martians Have Landed," described this as "a film without explanations, judgements or justifications. An absurd, brutal, awkward film; an abstruse, fascinating, animalistic Marlon Brando, who searches out and provokes distress, disquiet, and discomfort because, I imagine, Benedek and the authors find the world disquieting and uncomfortable." Though producer Stanley Kramer had a hand in this success, the contribution of director Laslo Benedek should not be ingored. Though perhaps most famous as the first film to typify and characterize the attitudes of a certain kind of delinquent, it also contains a muted antifascist polemic. The film was banned at the time by the British censors and was only recently released for public exhibition. Campus Center Auditorium, Friday, 3/9, 7, 9, 11.

WILD STRAWBERRIES (1957)

The journey of an ating professor to receive an honorary degree on route he is troubled by bickering family and friends and is haunted by memories and nightmares of his past failings. The film is constructed around dream sequences (notably the nightmare at the beginning) and flashbacks and is, in addition to a voyage through modern Sweden, a voyage through time, the past, and the unconscious. An old man approaching death (this was the last role of the great Victor Sjostrom) takes stock of his life and its failings and is confronted by those who loved him, admired him for his contributions to science, and those who detested him as an inhuman, selfcentered idiot. Sara, in the present, brings him back to the human simplicity of his youth and the time of "wild strawberries" and give him a new sense of serenity. This is the best Bergman film of the Fifties, much closer to a true philosophical tragedy

THE WORLD'S GREATEST ATHLETE

The Disney Studios may be quite amazed at the audience they have been attracting for this film about a beautiful young man who is found in the jungle and civilized in an American town. Unintentionally the Disney Studio's have managed to make the first G-rated film for gay audiences. Otherwise the film tries hard for a sympathetically liberal social consciousness, which seems once removed from situation comedies. Eastfield Mall, Cinema.

Letters To The Editor

Swallowed By The University

To The Editor:

Due to the harping conscious of this writer, it is necessary to furnish you with the following information. It all happened several weekends ago, on a Saturday evening, as the hour approached midnight. A couple, presumably a male and a female student at the University, were strolling about campus, inhaling the genuine warmth and tranquility which expounds from the cement walls of the surrounding buildings. As they passed the Old Chapel, at the toll of midnight, the female partner of the pair suddenly swallowed by a puddle which lies between the sidewalk that joins the New Library with the rest of the campus.

Quite alarmed, her mate made futile attempts at grabbing for her sinking limbs. But the puddle ate quickly and she was digested by the time he had realized what had happened.

Bewildered and with much remorse, the youth reported the incident to the UMass Police. He was met with ridicule and disbelief, and sent straight to Room To Move for recuperation. However, while at Room To Move, the lad threatened to murder the entire population of the University if someone, somewhere, did not investigate the murder. Room To Move hastily arranged a meeting between the Student Senate and the University. (It will be of interest for you to know that when I mention the University I do not mean the administration, nor the board of trustees, nor the faculty, nor the student body. I am referring to the physical structure of the University; the buildings, the land and the area on which the buildings stand.)

The furtive meeting was staged at the very top of the newly constructed, multi-story Library which, as you know, is very close to the criminal puddle. The conversation between the two parties went something like this:

"University of Massachusetts, did you or did you not, purposely and maliciously swallow a woman, at the stroke of midnight, as she and her partner were attempting to cross you?"

The University replied: "Yes I did, and furthermore, it is my present desire to become a lake. I have decided that a lake is a more productive environment than an institution. I would rather be the home of slim fish and fat frogs, than be the concrete jungle in Amherst which houses students and professors. My new aims are; (1) the promulgation of life, and (2) plant productivity. There will be no further study of anthropology, psychology, nor plant pathology. I have firmly decided, and that is my final decision."

And on that note the University has not spoken another word. Therefore, I warn you; please refrain from future wading to your classes. Instead, at all costs, avoid the giant puddles and mud on campus, for you may be next. All that remains for us is prayer and the hope that the University is again, merely pulling our legs.

Two Questions

To The Editor:

Enough with the rhetoric. Enough with the personal vendettas. Enough with the misguided emotionalism. The issue of abortion is this and this only:

1.) Is there anything special about human life that makes it worth protecting by laws?

2.) Is the fetus a different human life from the mother?

If you answer both of these with "yes", then you must conclude that there should be laws restricting abortion.

If you aren't sure how to answer either of these, then maybe it would be a good idea to do some reading on the subject. Then if you still can't decide, fine. But don't stop looking at literature with an open mind.

If you object to one or both statements, then you are against abortion laws. But now you know the basic reason why.

If you accept both and then try to argue against abortion laws, wait a minute. True, there are many valid reasons not to have abortion laws (women's rights, poor unwanted children, overpopulation, etc.), but for anyone to support both of the above statements and then argue for abortion is downright hypocritical.

In summary, it would be greatly appreciated if in the future, people would come to grips with the above two questions first, before going on to other points of contention. Maybe then constructive discussion will follow. Peace.

Dance Marathon

To The Editor:

Having been officially sanctioned, preparations are under way for a National Marathon being held here, on campus, in the Student Union Ballroom under the sponsorship of Phi Mu Delta Fraternity, Nu Zeta Chapter. It's a very real commitment on our part, to own a share in the fight against muscular dystrophy—to supplement the intensive research already being conducted. It is our privilege to extend this invitation to any couple who can endure the grueling fifty-two hours on the dance floor. We solicit your support in the hope that we might close the chapter on this disease and lighten the burden of those victims already claimed by muscular dystrophy.

The rules of the game are simple. The trick, you see, for a little prize ($300) and the short-lived fame—is to hold each other up. Such a feat has been aptly described by one critic as a "modern gladiator spectacle! "It is a test of endurance, yet conspicuously lacking when we consider those most difficult moments of our stricken brothers and sisters.

Then to do your part, all that's required is an entry fee which may be reimbursed from the money collected by each couple's sponsor. The finalist will get a chance to compete for the $2500 first prize in the National Muscular Dystrophy Marathon being held in Illinois, all expenses paid.

We hope to get an enthusiastic response from the dorms and other houses to become sponsors for their most able-bodied. So, do it! And dance for those who can't. For further information call 545-2163 or 253-9034.

Joint Action

To The Editor:

The filing of a petition by the Massachusetts Society of Professors, asking to be declared the bargaining agent for our faculty, is necessary if we are to bring about a decision this spring. This action does not preclude so amending the petition before the election occurs has to make it a point action by AAUP, and MSP.

While we continue to have difficulties in bringing about such joint action because of the very different organizational and fee structures of our professional associations, I continue to hope and expect that such joint action will occur, speaking personally as a member of both organizations rather than an officer of MSP.

T.A. Contract Warnings

To The Editor:

What I am going to tell you may sound far-fetched and you may believe that this could never happen to you in your department. I know this because I once believed that University problems occurred when students broke rules or deliberately interfered with the University's normal operation. Now I know this is far from true.

I returned to UMass in January, 1972, from industry to obtain my Master's degree. My advisor encouraged me to participate with him in a research project which sounded very educational and challenging. Unfortunately, we didn't have a grant then, but I was assured that our chances were excellent. And, if I would complete the first contract requirement (an-in-depth literature search of the state of the art of artificial or robot-like hands) during my first semester's research, we would most assuredly obtain the grant.

I wrote letters to nearly every company or researcher in the field and searched the libraries here and at MIT. By June, I had assembled a report which, typed double-spaced, contained 120 pages. Then I waited, passing up a summer job with my former employer. The money came in July, and I started working full time 40 hours per week.

By summer's end, I had built a mechanisms laboratory and was proceeding with the design of the hand. When the design was completed, building materials had to be found. The construction of a model hand and the miscellaneous contract assignments began to require more and more time. I asked for help, but none was available. During November, I was working 40, then 60, then 80 hours each week to meet a deadline.

Three days before that deadline, my wife became ill. Our doctor told me that someone should be with her at all times. The next morning I told my advisor of her illness and asked for emergency help so I could return home. We talked with the other professor who was an investigator on the grant, and were proceeding to the machine shop. Then, in the Engineering Lab halls, this second professor told me he was sorry my wife was ill, but that I was obliged to continue working. I was shocked to hear that this contract deadline was interpreted as more important than my wife's safety, and told him so. Further, I said that I couldn't understand why they (the professors) couldn't pitch in and help me with the work or see that it was done-after all, they too were being paid under the grant. My advisor interrupted immediately and told me to come into his office, where he lectured me for starting this argument in the hall. I told him that I was sorry, but I believed that my wife's safety was most important to me and that I couldn't continue to work knowing there was some danger. I offered to resign from the project, but my advisor said that he didn't want my resignation; he wanted me to complete the work.

Fortunately, a student nurse was available to stay with my wife, and I was able to continue working. After an all-night effort, I turned the model hand in to my professors and went home to sleep.

The following day, my advisor asked me to resign!

I was scared but reluctant to act hastily, so I talked with the student attorney (he told me not to resign) and with the Ombudsman, Jay Savereid. We met with my Department Head and contacted attorneys and deans. But while our discussion continued, I was officially notified that I had been terminated from the contract. The reason given to me was that a "personality conflict" existed.

Since then I have tried to use every means the University provides to obtain "due process" which is my right under the contract to have a fair hearing of the evidence surrounding this "personality conflict." But I have been informed that the University has officially fulfilled its obligation by offering me a last-minute T.A. and the opportunity to make up the shortage of money by taking on additional research work. Despite the efforts of Dean Piedmont, Jay Savereid, and others, I still have the termination on my record, and no fair trial appears in sight. Also, two of my project grades, which my Department Head assured me would be A'd, dropped to B's. And I may graduate this June with these problems unresolved.

If you will soon sign a research or teaching assistantship contract, I submit these warnings:

1.) You are the only party who actually signs the agreement.

2.) You will agree to work on assignments covered by a "starred" clause. As Veda Ross wrote in last week's Collegian, this "starred" clause will not protect you from extra-heavy work loads or transfer to undesirable work. Ask you advisor or department head for the hours and nature of the work, in writing, and signed!

3.) Should you ever need help, the only protection your contract provides for is the right to "due process." Due process can either be procedural or substantive, and your contract does not specify which will be used. Procedural due process can be nothing more than your advisor notifying you that your work is unsatisfactory and you will be terminated. Substantive due process requires that both opposing parties are equally represented on a deciding body. To obtain a fair hearing, you should be covered, again in writing, by substantive due process.

4.) R.A.'s have little protection under the existing interpretation of the contract. Administrators generally agree that a professor should have absolute authority over his student, and procedural due process is his only obligation to you. The "[illegible]ed" clause for R.A.'s is usually a job assignment-no matter how many hours it takes.

5.) You should ask where and how you might appeal, should you sense problems developing or have a grievance.

6.) You should receive a valid explanation of the "organization of power" within your department.

7.) Under the existing contract, you may be forced into a court of law to clear your records for future job references. And you may not succeed!

POWs Speak Out On Antiwar Movement

By RICHARD BILOTTI
Associated Press Writer

DAYTON, Ohio (AP)-The antiwar movement in the United States prolonged the Vietnam war, two former prisoners of war said today.

But both said they hold no bitterness to those who were a part of the movement.

Maj. Donald L. Heiliger of Madison, Wis., and Capt. Burton W. Campbell of Lorain, Ohio, commented at their first news conference since returning from a North Vietnamese prison camp three weeks ago.

Both men appeared relaxed and spoke freely and easily at the Wright-Patterson Air Force Base news center.

Both men agreed that although the antiwar sentiment in the country did not enhance their possibilities of being released they said they felt those in the movement were young and immature and had not learned a lot about life.

Asked whether amnesty should be granted to draft dodgers and military deserters, Heiliger said "they should be welcomed back to the country but they should be held responsible for the actions they took.

"Many of them made the decision when they were young. I am sure they have gone through a lot since then and maybe have matured in their attitudes toward life."

Neither man would comment on conditions in prison camps or how they were treated because of the possibility of reprisal to prisoners still in North Vietnam. Both men said they are looking forward to 90-day convalescent leaves.

Environment Study In N.Y. Available This Summer

Corning, N.Y.--UMass students may take environmental studies courses this summer in two New York state locations, according to a release by the College Center of the Finger Lakes, the coordinating agency.

The sessions will be divided into two "tracks" so students can study both fresh water and terrestrial studies, or just one environmental field.

At Finger Lakes Institute at Watkins Glen, water studies courses in Limnology (July 2-20 and July 20-Aug. 17) and Fresh Water Vertebrates (June 11-29) will be offered for four credits each.

At Pine Lake ecological preserve of Hartwick College, terrestrial courses in Bird Study in the Field (June 11-30) for four credits and Field Biology (July 2-27 and July 30-Aug. 24) for five credits will be offered.

Further information about tuition and housing is obtainable by writing the Summer Director, CCFL, Houghton House, Corning, N.Y. 14830.

Women's Film Co-op: Busier Than Ever

The Women's Film Co-op, housed in the Valley Women's Center, is supplying films from its library to women's groups and educational institutions across the country. With only 11 films in its library, it now gets far more requests than it can fill.

The Co-op has just compiled its first catalogue of women's films and related information. It is eager to see, catalogue and purchase some new women's films. It is especially interested in extending its analysis through films by and about Third World women, gay women, women and art, divorce, sexuality, children and sexism, women and history, middle-aged and older women, and funny or satirical women's films.

However, it needs information or leads on good films!

It needs new equipment, too. Like projectors, Steenbecks and video porta-packs.

Anyone wishing to make a substantial (or flimsy) donation to the Women's Film Co-op is hereby advised.

"Anyone wishing to make a substantial (or flimsy) donation to the Women's Film Co-op is hereby advised," said a spokesman.

"One last thing--we're interested in providing a distribution network for women working in video-tape, too, but we haven't yet been in touch with such women. Does the need for video-distribution exist? Let us hear from you," the release said.

Wellesley: Coeducation Fails

BOSTON (AP) — Wellesley College announced Thursday that it has decided to continue to award degrees to women only and that it has launched a $70.7 million centennial development program.

"Coeducation has failed," said Barbara W. Newell, president of Wellesley. "Women coeds receive conflicting signals on the femininity of intellectual vigor and do not take full advantage of college.

"The current trend toward coeducation has increased, rather than lessened, male domination of American higher education," Mrs. Newell said.

The Wellesley president said she realizes that the school's women-only policy may run up against anti-discrimination laws and the Equal Rights Amendment to the U.S. Constitution if it is passed.

But, she said, there is a need for "a college specifically designed for women in today's society."

Citing research by Matina Horner, the president of Radcliffe College, Mrs. Newell said, "Research points to a disproportionately fewer number of positions of responsibility held by women educated at coeducational or coordinate colleges. At coed colleges, women are more likely to go into feminine fields."

She said that Wellesley's exchange program with other colleges such as M.I.T., Dartmouth and Amherst will continue, but Wellesley will not award degrees to men.

Mrs. Newell said the purpose of the $70.7 million centennial fund program "is to allow us to provide an undergraduate education equal to any, to build on our strengths and introduce further programs which meet the needs of women and prepare them for their varying and changing roles."

According to the Wellesley president, $45 million will be used for the support of faculty, student and academic programs; and $25.7 million will be used for a construction program to provide additions to the library, a new interdisciplinary science complex and major remodeling of three academic buildings.

Wellesley celebrates its centennial in 1975.

Population Study Offers Fall Internship Program

Students interested in investigating population-related issues in state government next fall as interns with state legislators may apply for sponsorship by The Population Institute, a non-profit Washington, D.C., organization.

Graduate and undergraduate students accepted will work with legislators and other governmental officials from the state in which they are in school. By making arrangements with a professor at their university, the students normally receive academic credit (equivalent to one course or more) for their projects. The Population Institute will award successful candidates a $300 stipend as well as a limited budget to cover the costs of travel and research. Students interested in applying may contact the Population Institute by April 30th.

More information is available by writing William N. Ryerson, Population Institute Program, 100 Maryland Avenue, N.E., Washington, D.C. 20002.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

Pisces loves a secret, and Leo loves a party. Leo and Pisces often are drawn to each other, but the relationship presents a challenge. Leo finds Pisces intriguing and somewhat of a mystery. Pisces finds Leo helpful in a practical way but continues to be wary of the association. Eventually, Leo leans and Pisces wants to get out from under. Leo and Pisces represent Fire and Water elements and one of the two eventually must take a back seat.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Question of money related to luxury item or home improvement is apt to arise. Close budget loopholes. Strive for greater harmony within family. You get what you want if selective. Means don't settle for second best—insist on quality.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Cycle is such that you can be more independent. Refine techniques. Be true to your own style. One who advocates otherwise is misinformed. Know it and act accordingly. Pisces person could play key role.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You hold trump card. Investment of time, money made in past bears fruit. Don't underestimate your assets. What you possess is desirable. Older individual will lend helping hand. Be receptive. Be confident.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Accent is on how you relate to friends, how you deal with emotions, romantic interests. Special relationship is tested. What appeared permanent may be of less durable stuff. Don't hang on to past. Welcome future—it can be exciting and rewarding.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You will have more responsibility, greater chance to advance and to profit. Key is to take direct approach. Get to heart of matters. Deal with those in positions of authority. Accept assignment which tests your mettle.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): What was familiar may become complicated. Do some research. Prepare. Don't get into something without knowing potential. Check motives, byways. Aquarian plays prominent role. Family member could discuss travel plans.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be flexible where financial arrangements are concerned. Joint effort is most likely to succeed. You need cooperation of mate, business partner. You may receive news connected with legacy, money in escrow.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Maintain low profile. Don't push or rush. If you wait, you are most likely to succeed. Let others take initiative. Your role now should be that of keen observer. Listen and learn. Check legal papers.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Read and write—find ways of getting ideas across. Gemini, Virgo persons are apt to be involved. Accent is on work, health, what you can give dependents without spoiling them. Know when to draw line.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Children and family affairs tend to dominate. Obtain hint from Sagittarius message. Change of scenery could prove beneficial. Be ready for a variety of experiences. Beauty and pleasure are featured. Accept!

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Avoid seeking apparent shortcuts. Thoroughness now pays ultimate dividends. Check values. Realize you will not receive something for nothing. Older person who seems unreasonable will improve attitude if you are patient.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Forces tend to be scattered. You may be trying too much simultaneously. Review procedures. Cut waste. Relationship will be intensified. Nothing now is apt to occur halfway. Know it and prepare.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are sensitive, capable of reaching large segments of public. You are fascinated with law, medicine and publishing. If single, marriage is upcoming. Married or single, significant changes are due—many areas that had been closed to you will open to your advantage. December could be one of your most significant months of 1973.

New Bowditch Toys
Available To Families

The children of UMass students may look forward to having some new toys to play with starting soon. The University Day School, Bowditch Lodge, is starting a lending library of educational play equipment which will be available to all University Day School parent cooperative pre-school programs and individual UMass student families.

The play equipment is specifically for pre-school age children, and includes puzzles, lotto games, blocks, toy automobiles and trucks, physical play equipment, and more.

There will be a membership fee of $1.00, and the borrower will be expected to replace damaged or lost toys. Parent cooperatives can borrow equipment for 2 weeks and individual families may borrow up to 3 different toys for a period of 1 week. There will be a late charge for each day past the date which borrowed toys were due to be returned.

Betsy Pelz, director of the University Day School, and Janice Rewak, a School of Education senior, both responsible for the library, think it will be a great success. Ms. Pelz knew of two toy lending libraries, one in Boston and one in Washington, D.C., and thought that it would be a great idea if one were started at UMass.

"A good toy library would give incentive to families wanting to form play-school cooperatives," Ms. Pelz remarked.

"Besides," added Ms. Rewak, "Good educational toys are expensive, and there's not a very great selection available in the immediate area. Also, young children usually tire of their new toys rather quickly, and to invest in a good toy seems to many parents a waste of money."

The location of the library and the exact hours it will be open have yet to be decided. Both will be announced as soon as the decisions are made.

Stokes, Duarte Lead Minutemen JV's to 8-9 Season

By WALLY CLARK

The highlight of what Coach Fan Gaudette termed a successful basketball season was a final game victory over previously undefeated St. Paul's Prep. St. Paul's, which had beaten such schools as Fordham, St. John's, and Manhattan, came to the Cage hoping to add the little Minutemen to their list of victims. As it turned out a steadily improving UMass squad prevailed and enabled Mike Stokes to return home as the King of Philadelphia.

Despite finishing the season with an 8-9 record, Coach Gaudette felt his team was capable of winning several more games. The Minutemen played several games without star guard Mike Stokes and the whole season without forward Glenn Cooper. With these two players in the lineup there is no telling what the final record would have been.

When asked which players would be on the varsity next season, Coach Gaudette replied Stokes and Greg Duarte with an outside chance going to Glenn Cooper. Both Stokes and Duarte should fit right in and see plenty of action next season. How much Glenn Cooper will play will depend on how well he has recovered from surgery on his knees for bone spurs and how much a year's inactivity will affect him.

Next year the JV's will have a whole new setup. There will be new tryouts. Returnees could include Dan Donovan, who Gaudette called his toughest forward, Tom Ryan and Tom O'Donnell. Inexperience hurt Donovan more than anything but Coach Gaudette feels he has potential. Both Ryan and O'Donnell could use more experience and may be ready to step up to the varsity after another year on the JV's. When asked about recruits for next year, Coach Gaudette balked and said names would be forthcoming when the prospects are definitely going to UMass.

Coach Gaudette cited Greg Duarte as a great natural talent. Although a sophomore, Duarte is really a freshman in the UMass system because of the fact that he was ineligible last season. The new system of offense and defense was too difficult for Greg to handle in a short period of time and a year on the JV's has helped in his development. The most improved players on the squad were Ed. Rodriguez and Stu Campbell, both of whom were benchwarmers the first half of the season but came on like gangbusters in the second half.

On his own future at UMass, Coach Gaudette said, "I enjoy working at UMass as an assistant. I am not really looking for a new position, but I am available if offered the right opening." Gaudette points out that coaching at UMass is a team effort and cites the installing of the zone press, half court trap and several plays as his innovations.

Stressing fundamentals as the key to the team's success, Coach Gaudette said "the kids kept together." They realized that they could win and did win every close game they were in. The Boston University game was the turning point of the season. From that point on the little Minutemen played their best basketball.

Mike Stokes, seen here in action against Northeastern, was a key JV performer this season despite missing several season games with a knee injury. The little guard from Philadelphia capped a fine season with a season's high 33 points in the final game against St. Paul's Prep. (MDC Photo)

Scull in the Cage?

By MARTY KELLEY

Head of the Charles-yes, there are a few prestigious banners in a state of being at Curry Hicks Cage...One signifies a berth in the NCAA regional playoffs for the 1962 cagers...A couple of others relate to the most emotional experience in the history of UMass ports, the NIT engagements. But subdued in a darkened corner is a relic long in antiquity, but short in explanation...And only the historians know why.

The relic is a shell. It belongs to the UMass Crew Association. Believe it or not, the ornament, rescued as an artifact from the cellar of North College in 1905, stands for the very first regional college championship in the history of University of Massachusetts sports. It wasn't the Boardwalk Bowl or the NIT, but the accomplishment read something like this: "First Intercollegiate Rowing Title-Massachusetts Agricultural College". And the crew team still takes a bow for the feat performed in 1871.

The Intercollegiate Rowing Association held their first championship at Ingleside, a section of land on the banks of the Connecticut River between Holyoke and Springfield, with the Aggies listed with Harvard and Brown. Although the four Aggie majors who piloted the scull to victory for the first championship ever aren't around, they'd probably be a bit surprised at the course of action that crew has taken in the past century.

Mike Vespoli, new head crew coach after a four year high school teaching and coaching hitch in Philadelphia, gives an overall sketch. "Our crew team could really stand some recognition. I would say that status to us means more than money. In a large university such as this students seek identity through athletics, and the crew team is no exception". Incidentally, the crew team has a budget of $4,600 and that in no manner of speaking comes close to covering the equipment and transportation costs.

But crew never stops on campus and in its club state, gets a lot accomplished. The season started Sept. 20th and glides until May when summer breeds your own involvement. Participating in the Lowell Tech Regatta and the Head of the Charles Classic, coach Vespoli was given talent insight for the spring. And then came the winter workouts...

Until Christmas, the squad worked out fives times a week with weightlifting and running tactics. January 7th the team spent two weeks at Boston University weightlifting, stair running, and tank rowing at the Terrier facilities. And it was just a question of Mother Nature letting the team get to the Connecticut River early, and this winter had to be a leap year.

"We've been on the water since Monday of this week", said Vespoli. "This is the quickest start UMass crew has had since 1967". Twenty varsity oarsmen, 4 coxswains, 16 frosh and 2 coxswains participate in daily drills from 4-7 p.m. on the waters of the good old polluted to hell Connecticut...

And believe it or not Vespoli has even started a Newsletter that is being sent to "Friends of UMass Rowing" wherever they may be. That Sleeping Giant in the Berkshires also has a paddle in his closet...

Lacrosse!

By MDC STAFF

West Point, N.Y.–It's early in the year. They haven't seen a full field yet. The attack is brand new, so's the goalie. And the cadets have practiced now for months. But with all considered, Garber's Gorillas, journey to the land beyond the Hudson tomorrow afternoon to meet West Point in a 1:30 scrimmage in the second such venture this academic year.

In the fall, Coach Dick Garber, with the laurels of four straight Northeast Championships to his credit, experimented with his new attack of Sophomore Peter Connelly, Senior Fred Michaels, and North Country Community College transfer Frank Garahan. This same trio will start for the Gorillas as will rookie goalie, John Rutledge, a Junior transfer from Nassau Community College.

Garber noted the cohesiveness with the attack unit and a search for the first 6 midfielders out of 12 solid candidates will be stressed at the Point. So will conditioning...

UMASS GOALIE JOHN KIAL kicks this shot away. The rookie senior gave everything he had since becoming a starter after goalies No. 1 and 2 (Peter Erickson and Chick Rheault) were sidelined for the season with injuries. The Bowdoin Polar Bears, however, gave him more than he could handle enroute to their 9-3 romp at Orr Rink Wednesday night. (MDC Photo)

UMass Weightlifters Set for Nationals

By KEN KNAPP

York College of York, Penn., will host the 1973 National Collegiate Olympic Weightlifting Championships on March 17-18. At that time over 60 colleges across the country are expected to send teams to battle for top honors. The contest itself will consist of the two olympic events, with gold, silver and bronze medals presented for each lift and the total of the two lifts (which determines individual standings).

The Univerisityof Massachusetts will be sending three representatives this year.

Fast-rising freshman Bill Riley will represent UMass in the lightweight division (148 lb.). This is Bill's first year in weightlifting competition. He is progressing very nicely as he took second in the Senior New England Championships held last week. Inexperience will cost Bill a shot at the title though he may win up to two medals.

In the light heavyweight class (181 lb.) UMass has much talent. Sophomore Chris Calawa, Junior Dave Chambers, Freshman John Donnelly and Junior Chris Gomes all represented UMass in arlier competition. Only Gomes will be attending the Nationals as he was the only one to make the qualifying total. Chris has been making great strides though bad knees have hampered his progress of late. Nonetheless, Chris could make a good showing in his first nationals taking one or two medals in the individual lifts.

Senior Doug Cooney (who last year placed fifth in the nation) will represent UMass in the middle heavyweight division (198 lb.). Concentrating more on getting accepted to graduate school than on lifting has resulted in rather inconsistent performances of late. Most encouraging is his school record clean and jerk of 308 lbs. which he set only two weeks ago. If Doug does make the trip and gets motivated he may win up to three medals, one of which may be a gold.

Thus with a week to go, the UMass weightlifting team is getting ready to assault the nationals. An ambitious Bill Riley, a tenacious Chris Gomes and an unpredictable Doug Cooney head the field for UMass. As to what will happen next week in York only the lifting gods know for sure.

North Carolina Upset

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP)-Sophomore Phil Perry's layup basket that just beat the final horn in overtime gave cellar-dwelling Wake Forest a 54-52 victory over second-seeded North Carolina Thursday in one of the great upsets of Atlantic Coast Conference basketball tournament history.

Wake Forest was saved from a first-round defeat by freshman Lee Foye's layup in the final second of regulation time to tie the score at 48-all. North Carolina, No. 8 in the nation, had gone ahead a second earlier on a tip-in by Olympian Bobby Jones.

Third-seeded Maryland, ranked No. 10 nationally, beat Clemson 77-61 in the other afternoon game and gained a Friday night semifinal berth against Wake Forest, a team it was upset by last week.

Maryland's big three of Jim O'Brien, John Lucas and Tom McMillen combined for 57 points. O'Brien scored 21; Lucas 20, and McMillen tallied 16.

Unbeaten North Carolina State, second-ranked nationally and top seeded, drew a first round bye and will play the Friday night opener against the winner of Thursday night's Duke-Virginia contest.

The tournament winner, unless it is N.C. State or Duke, both on NCAA probation, will represent the conference in the NCAA Eastern Regionals opening next Thursday at Charlotte, N.C.

Missouri Probable NIT Opponent For Minutemen

By MARTY KELLEY

Amherst, Mass. -- The Minutemen will perform in the 36th annual National Invitational Tournament at Madison Square Garden in New York City March 17-22. That's definite. The opponent is not. But reliable sources have indicated that the University of Missouri Tigers will be the competition in the 7 P.M. prelim to Saturday night's Garden highlight at 9:30. But time and space leave the prestigious pairings for the post season classic in a state of confusion at this hour.

In an MDC interview over the phone last evening, Leaman was puzzled by the "Missouri" rumor that swept campus yesterday afternoon. "We won't find out until late this morning whether we play Missouri or not," said Leaman. "Your guess is as good as mine. But if we do draw Missouri, I'll be leaving for Columbia (Missouri) this weekend to scout them against Nebraska."

Right now, the Tigers, 20-4 overall, are the nation's 12th rated club according to United Press International, and are tied with Colorado (8-4 in conference play) for second fiddle to Kansas St. in the Big Eight Conference. Colorado and Kansas St. square off this Saturday and the Tigers should know where they stand late Saturday night.

So will a lot of other holdovers that, so far, have thrown a wrench into the early tourney pairings. Both the ACC (Atlantic Coast Conference) and the Big Ten will ballyhoo this weekend with the final pairings being selected late Monday night or early Tuesday morning.

There is a chance that Massachusetts will be seeded 14th for the post season classic. In prior NIT dates in 1970 and 1971, the then Redmen fell victim to tourney politics and drew top seeded and eventual champions Marquette (62-55) and North Carolina (90-49). However, '73, the third year in the last four that Massachusetts has been selected for the mid-March classic, politics will be different.

The way the tournament is run is simple mathematics. The number one seed (for example Maryland last year) will meet the last team picked in the opener Saturday at 1 p.m. Then the second seed (rumored to be Notre Dame) squares off over national television (CBS) at 3 P.M. that afternoon. Hinted adversary for the Irish on St. Patrick's Day is Southern California which would be the tourney's 15th bracketed club. Then at 7 Missouri, a solid number three, tangles with 14th ranked Massachusetts with 19-6 mark and a 12-game win skein to their credit.

"Apparently it was on the news this afternoon (late Thursday)," said Assistant Athletic Director Bob O'Connell. O'Connell couldn't really place the source of the "Missouri" rumor. Neither could Ticket Manager Wally Novak who returned from New York City Wednesday night with 3,500 NIT tickets. According to Novak, almost 800 tickets have been sold going into this morning's auction in Room 251 Boyden.

If Missouri is the opponent, how does Jack Leaman feel about not meeting the selected best for the first time in now three NIT appearances. "No matter how you look at it, all the teams in this tournament are tough. You have to play them one at a time. They play the same type of game that we do, defense and discipline."

Wake Forest's stunning upset of North Carolina could have ended the Tar Heels' chance of enrollment in the 36th annual event. However, the AP learned late last night that North Carolina was in. As far as Jack Leaman is concerned, the Tar Heels probably would be a nice second round test for the young Rebels from Amherst.

John Murphy puts one up from fifteen feet out while senior Tom Austin sets himself for possible rebound. The Minutemen will need super efforts from these two big men and starting center Charlie Peters if they hope to advance in the NIT. (MDC Photo)

Co-captain Betsy East exhibits in pure form the strength, agility, and balance needed in the uneven parallel bar event. Betsy will be in her final glory this Saturday afternoon as the gals host Towson State, one of the finer squads in the East, at the Boyden Auxiliary gym at 1:30.

Gymnasts Here Tomorrow

By MDC STAFF

Saturday, at 1:30 p.m. in the Boyden auxiliary gym the women's varsity gymnastics team hosts Towson State College for their final home meet of the season. Towson finished in one of the top team spots at last year's Easterns and has had a fairly successful season thus far. Towson will be eagerly trying to make a decent showing against the Minutewomen in order to get a good seeding at the Eastern Championships in three weeks.

Coming off their best performance, and first loss, of the season, the UMass varsity will be led by Co-Captains Margie Combs and Betsy East. Margie will be in as an all-around performer and Betsy will display her bars routine. Going three events will be Anne Vexler and Heidi Armstrong. Candy Gross, Marion Kulick, Alicia Goode, Thanne Poth, Gail McCarthy and Jeannine Burger complete the tentative starting line-up.

The format of the meet calls for six performers from each team in each of the four events. Therefore, any of you who have not been in regular attendance at the meets can familiarize yourselves with the procedures involved.

Next weekend the varsity travels to New Haven to meet with So. Conn. State College. Two weeks from that date is the Eastern Championships at Temple University. Hence, in their last performance at home the team will be presenting the same routines they will more than likely present in Philadelphia. Come early and get a good seat. Doors open at 12:30 p.m. Admission free with undergrad I.D.

Providence Game At Civic Center Next Year

By MDC STAFF

Marvin Barnes of Providence College won't be coming to the Cage next year. No, he didn't turn professional, it's just that the UMass-Providence basketball game won't be played in the Cage. It will probably be at the Springfield Civic Center.

Frank McInerney, Head of the Athletic Dept., said, "There's a very strong possibility that we will be able to schedule Providence in the Civic Center next year during intercession period." And McInerney was quick to add, "It is coincidental that the only date available to us is during intercession."

Asst. Athletic Head, Robert O'Connell, said that Providence coach, Dave Gavitt, was very interested in playing at the Civic Center. Gavitt guaranteed 3500 Friar fans would accompany the team if the game was played at Springfield.

The Springfield Civic Center, in its first year of operation, was used as an experiment by the UMass Athletic Department "to expand interest in the athletics of this university, UMass students objected to the experiment as was evidenced by the very poor turnout at the games.

Notice

There will be a meeting of the Black Athletic council Sunday, March 11 at 12 a.m. in the Malcolm X room, located in the basement of the Berkshire Dining Hall in Southwest. All concerned people are invited.

A Hit of Nostalgia

The excitement created by the National Invitational Tournament (NIT) has lengthened the season a bit for the cagers, but for four seniors (Tom Austin, Tom McLaughlin, Charlie Peters and Chuck Olsen) and countless graduating fans, Senior Night marked their last appearance at the Cage. The trip to New York City will be just frosting on the cake, as the heart of UMass basketball for the last four years for those moving on has been the Cage and that is where most of the memories will flow from.

If you wandered into the Cage today, hoping to sneak a final view of the court of the NIT-bound hoopsters, all you would find would be the Astrodome-type atmosphere of a dirt floor and netting for the baseball sluggers preparing for their California trip. New recruits have the same problem trying to fathom how basketball could be played in a building which resembles a barn. It's time to reminisce of the past, as these thoughts will be stretched with time to rival tales of the old Celtics or Notre Dame.

Four years ago, the season started with a game against Providence. The prelim game was nothing to rave about, as it was an off year, but the performance of a skinny sophomore named Julius Erving with a record breaking 28 rebounds in his first varsity game, began the worries of being able to get into the Cage. The season progressed, the lines kept getting longer and earlier, and the basis for this year's leadership was performing for a lackluster frosh team. Who at that time could have foreseen that a transfer from Tennessee, McLaughlin, would be the captain four years later. And who would have guessed that Peters and Olsen would be on the varsity. The only sure bet was Austin as he had been a center on the undefeated team of the preceding year (he was red-shirted).

The trip to New York that year was the first in this school's history. After winning 12 of 13 to end the season, Coach Leaman had waited anxiously for the rumored bid. Finally, as practically all the bids had gone out, he left to scout some prospects for the following year. The call came while he was away, but the right answer was given.

I remember going down to NYC with five others squashed into a Toyota station wagon, driving over the George Washington Bridge into New Jersey looking for Madison Square Garden. When we finally found it, with the help of a friendly New Yorker who gladly showed us the way, there was the matter of paying $2 to park your car in a lot, only to return later to find it parked out in the street. Then, there was the cheering for a team from the West, which without its fans was down by eight, but when we cheered for them, they went on to win the game for their adopted fans.

The game against Marquette had to be the proudest game in UMass history, as the underdog Redmen tied them at the half and lost by only five. It was a moral victory for the multitude that made the trip, in that a nationally ranked team which put on a cocky dunking drill at the beginning, was shown to be human.

The next year's NIT trouncing by North Carolina taught a lesson to the cocky fans who expected a game similar to the year before, but the lesson was also absorbed by Leaman. Just notice the present full court press by the Minutemen and guess where that came from.

Last year's 14-12 record disappointed many, but the 15-1 frosh provided the entertainment. Three NIT appearances in four years isn't bad for a fan to swallow, but just think of the possible stories if this year's graduates are able to see a UMass victory in the Garden for a change. Against probable foe, 13th ranked Missouri from a truthful but anonymous, let's hope that St. Patrick's Day provides a tale to answer the question, "I'm from Missouri, show me?"

Fair-tastic!

By BILL BALLOU

New York, Seattle, Tokyo, and Brussels probably aren't looking over their shoulders, but if they don't watch out they may find "Amherst" listed next to them among the sites of the great World's Fairs.

Actually, the International Fair, held in the Student Union Ballroom this past Friday and Saturday, isn't quite in the big boy's class, but it has grown enough in the last two years so the Ballroom is filled with people a good percentage of the time it's open.

Judson Haverkamp, Assistant Foreign Student Advisor and one of the Fair's co-chairpersons, estimated that the crowd attending over the two-day period was between 3,000 and 4,000 people, "probably more" than attended last year.

The crowd, he said, consisted in large part of children, but also included lots of students and older people. Haverkamp figured that the Fair drew its crowd from "all over the Pioneer Valley" with some people coming from farther away than that.

What the crowd saw were various exhibits manned by foreign students representing their respective countries and different types of live entertainment on the Ballroom stage.

The exhibits offered various souvenirs and wares while food and drink, including beer, were available.

Haverkamp said that he thought the exhibits this year were more elaborate than last year, and the fair as a whole "more efficient, with greater diversity."

There was no admission charge, but donations were accepted, with receipts going to the Foreign Student Emergency Fund. Amherst merchants contributed door prizes which were given out four times a day. A list of uncollected door prizes appears in today's Collegian.

Haverkamp estimated that receipts from donations totalled "at least $100 dollars", but said that the major source of revenue from the fair was a 20 per cent tax levied on exhibitors net profits. The combination of the two is expected to produce total revenues in the neighborhood of $300 to $500. According to Haverkamp, "sales turnover was excellent" for the exhibitors.

The large crowd created a space problem, Haverkamp said, but the main problem the International Fair faces is that of control.

Right now the International Fair is run as a cooperative effort of the International Programs Office, Faculty, and American and foreign students. What these groups want to do is turn control over to the International Student Association.

The fair, first conceived of by the Council of Foreign and American Students and Faculty, is probably going to become an annual event according to Haverkamp. But he sees the space problem as basically unsolvable. "If we want more room," he said, "we'd have to move it outside and hold it in the spring, but then that would be during exams and we probably wouldn't be able to attract many exhibitors."

So, chances are Amherst's own World's Fair won't get that chance to join the list of exhibiton immortals. Especially if it can't move out of the Student Union Ballroom. But it remains the closest thing Amherst's got.

Senate OKs Black Scientist Rationale

By STEPHEN FINE

The Student Senate voted last night in special session to approve the funding rationale of the Black Scientist Society.

The organization's rationale approval came in the wake of an attempt by the Senate's Budget Committee to combine the group with the CCEBS (Collegiate Committee of Black Students) Academic Affairs Committee.

A rationale is a statement presented to the Senate by a group in which it states the reasons why it should be funded.

The main purpose of the special meeting last night was to both consider rationales that had been approved before and those which had not.

The dispute over the Society's rationale came when James Parks, a spokesman of the group, questioned the reasoning of a letter the Budget's Committee had presented to the Senate on incorporating the Black Scientist Society with the Black Students Psychological Association and then placing them under the auspices of the CCEBS Academic Affairs Committee.

Paul Doran, chairman of the Budgets Committee said the reason for the proposed combination of the groups was the eliminating duplication of costs. "CCEBS Academic Affairs said they had no objection to combining the two groups into their committee," he said.

Senator Gail Sullivan asked, however, if the three groups would be guaranteed proper funds for their individual purposes.

Student Government President Larry Ladd said that all three organizations would be combined together, but each would get a certain percentage of the budget of the CCEBS Committee.

He added that the only way to guarantee that proper funding would be given to each group would be to vote separately for each individual rationale and worry about combining them later.

To this, Parks agreed emphasizing that he was against combining them if there was no guarantee on his group's funding.

When the vote came the Senate decided on separate rationales for each group.

Doran later said that the passage of this motion guaranteed that the three groups would probably remain separate entities.

The Black Scientist Society stated in their rationale that the purpose of their group is "...to unite undergraduate and graduate black students who have a common goal of achieving a degree within a scientific discipline."

In other business the Senate voted to approve the rationales of: ---S.W.A.P. (Student Workshop on Activities Problems), an organization whose purpose is to bring together administrators and students to discuss University issues; ---The Medical Emergency Fund, an organization that loans out money to undergraduate women who need abortions; ---The Committee on Poverty, an organization committed to communicating the problems of poverty in both Amherst and the nation to UMass students. This rationale had previously been defeated by the Senate. ---C.E.Q. (Coalition for Environmental Quality), an organization which tries to educate the UMass community about environmental activism. They are very active in the recycling of paper.

Outlook For Roads On Campus: Muddy

"...any paved surface is just like people..."

By BETSY CARENI

Mud has appeared with the first signs of warm weather and spring, covering much of the campus's walks and parking lots. Although the mud is hazardous in some areas and simply a nuisance to all, there is nothing that can be done to improve the situation.

Bill Lambert, UMass landscape architect, said that "for the past seven years, the University has received no money from capital outlay to fund roadways, parking areas and sidewalks." Last year, he requested $1.7 million for assistance and received none, the previous six years he asked for $1 million in aid and each time got nothing. Moreover, none of Massachusetts' state colleges and universities were granted any amount of help.

Lambert, who has been at the University for eight years, recalls the conditions of the walkways as always being "poor". The only consolation the University has today is a lot more walks, built to accomodate the booming University population. Not only do more walks, parking lots and roads need to be built, but the present ones need repairs. "One tends to forget that any paved surface is just like people. It has a given life expectancy: whereas we die, pavements disintegrate," stated Lambert.

The University last received aid in 1967; they asked for $2.58 million and got $1 million instead. This meant that they never had enough money to build the pavements first-class. Lambert described the situation this way: "There was a demand for the pavements, and due to lack of money, they weren't designed with an adequate base. This means that money spent this way is wasted. They must be built properly from the beginning."

Prospects for receiving aid next year is once again doubtful. The state claims that they have no money to give for this work. So, UMass may have to contend with the mud and its inconveniences for at least another year.

"...whereas we die, pavements disintegrate."

WMUA 'Focus'

WMUA's "Focus" series tonight at 10 will feature a speech on the politics of mental health in Massachusetts.

The speech was delivered on the UMass campus last December by Dr. Larry Brown, director of the Task Force on Children Out of School, at the invitation of the Belchertown Friends Assn. and UMass Students Offering Support. Dr. Brown's talk dealt with some of the concerns raised by a report, "Suffer the Children", released by the Task Force last September.

The second segment of tonight's pre-recorded 60-minute program will offer, by popular request, a re-broadcast of a recent interview with State Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst.

WMUA will present an exclusive interview with former WMEX D.J. Arnie 'Woo Woo' Ginsberg on "The University Week in Review," tonight at 7:30. Ginsberg appeared over the weekend at UMass

WMPIRG Urges Lists For Drug Prices

By BILL DENSMORE

The director of Ralph Nader's health research group Thursday urged the Massachusetts Legislature to require posting of common drug prices at Bay State pharmacies.

Speaking on behalf of a bill filed in October by The Western Mass. Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG), Dr. Sidney Wolfe said that "extraordinary discrepancies in the prices of prescription drugs have become an unhealthy reality thoughout the U.S."

State Rep. Edward McColgan (D-Northampton), also speaking on behalf of the law, said that "it is time to remove the secrecy from prescription drug prices."

Last October, the Amherst-based WMPIRG used student volunteers to conduct a survey of drug store prescription prices in western Mass. communities, including Northampton and Springfield.

The consumer group found price variations ranging from $2 to $10 for twenty capsules of a common antibiotic, depending on where it was bought.

WMPIRG also found in October that almost 40% of the druggists queried were unwilling to reveal the price of a drug before a customer agreed to buy it.

The proposed legislation, House Bill #2013, would require pharmacists to post prices of the 100 most commonly-prescribed drugs and to give price information on request for other drug items.

The head of the Vermont board of registration in Pharmacy, Edward Croumey, also testified in support of the Massachusetts legislation. The Vermont Legislature enacted a drug price identification law last year that is similar to the proposed Massachusetts one.

Wolfe said that without readily available price information, consumers are forced to "become full-time investigators" in order to get well.

Wolfe added that "those hardest hit by high prescription drug prices are the old, the poor, and the disabled."

Metric System Coming

By STEVE FERRARA

Did you know that it's 11.2 kilometers to Sunderland? Or that it's 12.8 kilometers to Northampton?

The UMass Metric Committee and Chairman Klaus E. Kroner, associate professor of the industrial engineering and Operations Research Department, think it is important for you to know it.

By April 2–"M Day"–there will be two directional signs on campus giving both mileage and kilometric measurements to nearby towns. The signs will be located facing Governor's Drive at the lights at WoPE, and facing southbound traffic on Commonwealth Ave. in front of Boyden.

The physical plant personnel will also paint colored stripes in random classrooms and halls in lengths of meter designations. There will also be a display in the Campus Center.

Kroner said, "these displays are a kind of educational tool to get people to think in metric measurements."

The UMass Metric Committee was formed last fall. Its members come from many departments within the University. The committee's stated role is "to promote a smooth transition to the nationwide use of the metric system by whatever means suitable." It has chosen the signs to help educate the campus.

Kroner said he feels that the advantages to the system far outweigh the problems of converting and adapting to the system.

Take this problem for example: to convert 3-2/3 miles to feet you multiply by 5,280. This produces an awkward fraction. But to convert kilometers to meters you merely divide by 1,000 (or move the decimal point three places to the left). The metric system also is used in measurements of volumes (liters) and mass (kilos).

Although the United States is the only major country not committed to the metric system, metric measurement has been used by scientists, pharmacists and industry since the 1880's.

In 1968 Congress approved an act calling for a study of the metric system. In July, 1971 the study published a report to Congress recommending that the "country should convert to the metric system with some kind of coordinated plan spread over a 10-year period."

Last August the Senate passed a bill to adopt the system, but Congress adjourned before the bill reached the House.

Kroner said new bills have been introduced in both houses and his committee "anticipates that favorable action will be coming about."

Kroner added that the bills should be enacted by January, 1975, after a new 18-month study. Therefore, the U.S. should be predominantly metric by 1985, Kroner said.

The legislature says that it is not mandatory for any industry to convert to the metric system; that is, if an industry feels it would be advantageous to use the present system it's OK.

Kroner warned, "Some people have exaggerated ideas of the cost to industry in change over–they anticipate billions of dollars. This is hogwash, but these industries will drag their feet. The fact is that in the long run, everyone will benefit."

Global Survival Group To Discuss Transportation

Jon G. McGowan, associate professor of mechanical and aerospace engineering, will be the principal discussant at Tuesday's meeting of the Faculty Colloquium on Energy.

Prof. McGowan will discuss some of the economic, political, regulatory and technical problems involved in individual and mass transportation. Transportation accounts for approximately 25 per cent of the energy utilization in the United States.

The colloquium, part of the University's developing program n Global Survival Studies, will be in the Colonial Lounge in the Student Union at 3 3 p.m. Tuesday. Designed to facilitate interdisciplinary discussions on the world energy issue, it is open to anyone concerned about this global problem.

Additional information can be obtained by calling Prof. Jerome King of the Political Science Department, who is chairperson of the colloquium, or Walter Johnson, coordinator for Global Survival Studies, at 545-1529.

34 Fair Prizes Unclaimed

Thirty-five prizes donated to the International Fair drawings have not been picked up. They may be claimed at the Foreign Student Office, Whitmore 239, in exchange for the tickets.

The ticket series is UMass pink, 018---, with the following last three digits: 020 Jeffery Amherst Bookstore certificate; 028 1-quart casserole; 034 McDonald's: 6 hamburgers and french fries; 042 silver necklace; 050 silver ring; 060 pipe; 061 shoe shine kit; 084 bike lock and chain; 086 2 ceramic wall-hangings; 092 AM radio; 102 free oil change at Rowe's; 103 Stop & Shop canned ham; 125 gift certificate at Rani's; 135 Mt. Tom all-day lift for 2; 161 spark plug wrench; 208 stereo headphones; 225 necktie; 227 3 books; 232 bottle of wine; 235 Mt. Tom ski rental, lesson and lifts; 236 2 decks of cards; 240 bear ruglet; 263 Howard Johnson's steak dinner; 269 green hammock; 275 box of stationery; 278 The Pub $10 certificate; 286 fondue set; 290 silver earrings; 307 canned ham from Louis'; 343 needlepoint kit; 346 panty hose; 358 Eric's Food Store certificate; 363 electric wall clock; 394 winemaking kit.

The committee said, "No ticket, no prize." Winners should collect their prizes promptly before the ham spoils, and the wine gets drunk the committee said.

Committee Picked To Watch Intramural Hoop Play-offs

By STEVE CROWE

A watch committee has been established to observe the basketball Intramural playoffs this season, it was announced by the Black Athletic Council Saturday in a meeting with Frank McInerney, Head of the Department of Athletics, and members of the Intramural Department.

The Black Athletic Council, newly recognized student organization, is a "type of investigator or complaint council of the Athletic Department," according to chairman Richard Bell. Problems in the sports and Intramural Departments brought by minority students are investigated by the committee.

The watch committee was established because of the problems which occurred in last year's tournament. The playoffs were suspended when fighting broke out between an all-white team and an all-black team.

Bell charged that Intramural Director Ted Schmidt "had not handled the incident in a proper manner." He said Schmidt offered no definite answers as to how this year's playoffs should be handled to insure that the same problems (due to what Bell termed "an ethnic communication gap") do not evolve. Schmidt, he said, placed the blame on the officials for letting the game get out of control last year and did not see it as a "communication" problem.

The Black Athletic Council also charged Schmidt's assistant, Merrie Fiddler, with "an inability to relate to Black Sisters," as shown by her unawareness to "the hostile and bitter feelings" felt towards her department since last year's troubles in the women's basketball tournament. Ms. Fiddler, Bell said, didn't know that the feelings of the black girls had carried onto this year.

Schmidt offered his staff to work alongside the Black Athletic Council's watch committee (comprised of members of the executive committee).

The Black Athletic Council is also involved in projects such as bringing more minority students into the physical education department and more coaches onto the athletics staff (there are presently only two black coaches). They have also initiated a special program at Boyden Gym on Saturday and Sunday mornings to bring in children from the Westfield Detention Center. The request has already been approved and once the transportation problem of getting the children up to the campus has been solved, this will be done on a regular basis.

One of the major projects of the committee is to organize a central minority council between the universities of the state to (1) make recruiting of more minority students and coaches easier and to (2) get more minorities on the Yankee Conference board, which as far as Bell knows, has no black representatives.

Selectmen OK Sewage Plans

By ED FOGARTY

Amherst Board of Selectmen has voted to hire a Boston firm to develop plans for a secondary sewage treatment plant.

The firm of Camp, Dresser & McGee was recommended to the board by the Technical Advisory Committee.

Town Manager Allen Torrey said the new plant should be ready by October 1976 if there are no difficulties in the planning and construction.

The board also voted in a special weekend meeting to follow an abbreviated schedule in building the plant. The shortened schedule would cut off up to two years of the present schedule.

In other action at the meeting, the selectmen by split vote went on record in disagreement with Torrey on a road reconstruction problem, agreed to support recreational funds at the annual town meeting and decided to seek a state lottery drawing for Amherst.

Torrey said that he had been in contact with Bill Slegal, Chief of Implementation and Enforcement Section of the Massachusetts Water Pollution Control Board, and that Slegal had said that an abbreviated schedule has been done before and is all right to use.

In response to a question about plans for the Stanley St. Pumping Station, Torrey said that plans have been submitted to the Water Pollution Control Board, and have been there for 30 days. He said that as soon as the plans were approved the Town will act.

"It seems like they (the Water Pollution Control Board) haven't done anything," said Torrey.

The Board engaged in a heated discussion on the Station Road Reconstruction Project. Torrey submitted a memo to the selectmen suggesting that the Town be allowed to widen the road to eighteen feet and widen the gravel base to twenty-four feet.

Citizens of Station Road have protested the widening.

Leo Bouchard, Selectman, found the memo "arrogant, dictatorial, and an affront" to the citizens. The memo is "an example that Mr. Torrey has been hostile to the citizens," and Bouchard suggested that the memo be given back to Torrey for reconsideration.

In the memo Torrey suggested that the Town has tried hard to meet the protests of the citizens.

"I feel that the town has given considerable ground to the residents of this area in our desire to obtain their approval of the project."

Bouchard felt that the memo did not suggest, but told the citizens what to do.

Merle Howes, Selectman, said that he found nothing wrong with Torrey's memo. He felt that the Board had been under too much pressure from the citizens of Station Road and that they have no exclusive right to the road.

"Many people use Station Road than those who live on it."

Viet Aid Costs Soar

By SPENCER DAVIS

WASHINGTON (AP)—For almost as many years as the Indochina war brought devastation to Vietnam and its neighbors, massive plans were being drawn to erase the scars with a new era of reconstruction after peace returned.

Now the old blueprints are being updated as American and North Vietnamese officials prepare to meet in Paris on Thursday. The first session of the Joint Economic Commission will study postwar reconstruction aid to Hanoi.

How much it will cost for all of Indochina? There are no firm estimates as yet, but it is likely to cost double or more the amount thought necessary only four years ago.

Current estimates are in the vicinity of $7.5 billion spread over five years. This would include $2.5 billion for South Vietnam, $2.5 billion jointly for Cambodia and Laos and $2.5 billion for North Vietnam.

The estimate for South Vietnam is the same as it was in 1969 but the time span has been shortened from 10 to five years, in effect doubling the cost. U.S. assistance for the part of Indochina that does not include North Vietnam currently is $700 million a year.

The five-year program involving other countries as well as the United States would cost $1 billion a year for South Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos and another half billion for North Vietnam.

Secretary of State William P. Rogers told Congress last week that the Soviet Union and the Peoples Republic of China have said they will give postwar aid directly to North Vietnam, but will not join others in a multinational aid program for other countries in the area.

The best line on how much aid the Russians and Chinese have supplied to Hanoi came last May from presidential adviser Dr. Henry A. Kissinger.

In the so-called "Kissinger memorandum" on U.S. bombing of North Vietnam from 1965 to 1969, data assembled by the National Security Council and CIA showed Moscow and Peking supplied North Vietnam with $2.9 billion over four-years.

The economic component was $980 million, $675 million Soviet, $305 million Chinese and the military component was $1.915 billion, $1.515 billion Russian and $400 million Chinese.

Since then, it has been estimated that Russia and China stepped up their aid contributions to Hanoi to about $1 billion a year.

Now U.S. negotiators in Paris are expected to urge that the Communist countries continue to supply Hanoi with economic help in the same magnitude.

By 1969 at the start of President Nixon's administration the noted economic planner David Lilienthal predicted in a report prepared for South Vietnam President Nguyen Van Thieu:

"Our studies over the past two years lead us to this conviction—Vietnam can achieve economic independence within 10 years . . . During the decade the amount of foreign aid required will be on the order of $2.5 billion."

More POWs To Be Freed

By GEORGE ESPER

SAIGON (AP) — The Communist delegations announced Sunday they will begin releasing the next group of American war prisoners Wednesday in Hanoi.

The North Vietnamese promised to turn over Monday a list of those coming out of North Vietnamese prisons. The Viet Cong pledged to turn over their list Tuesday.

Together, the lists of U.S. prisoners in this third regular group are expected to contain about 140 names. As they are received in Saigon, the names will be sent to Washington for immediate notification of relatives.

The North Vietnamese said they will release their American prisoners Wednesday at Hanoi's Gia Lam Airport. But there were conflicting reports about the Americans held by the Viet Cong.

Capt. Phuong Nam, the chief spokesman for the Viet Cong delegation, said he was aiming for a release date of Wednesday, the same days as the North Vietnamese.

But the U.S. delegation on the Joint Military Commission said earlier the Viet Cong indicated North Vietnam would release its prisoners on one day, and the Viet Cong the following day, with both releases at Gia Lam Airport. This was the procedure followed for the last release March 4-5.

Neither the North Vietnamese nor the Viet Cong said how many U.S. prisoners they plan to release.

But about 140 men are expected to keep the Communist in compliance with peace agreement requirements that prisoner releases match U.S. troop withdrawals.

Since Feb. 12, North Vietnam and the Viet Cong have released 299 American prisoners, a little more than 50 per cent of the number reported held at the time of the cease-fire Jan. 28.

The Communist side would have to release half the 286 prisoners it still holds to match the 75 per cent U.S. troop withdrawal rate.

The peace agreement states that prisoners will be released in the same ratio as American and other allied troops are withdrawn, with both to be completed by March 28.

West Europe Unable To End Money Worry

By CARL HARTMAN
Associated Press Writer

BRUSSELS (AP)-Any joint float against the U.S. dollar and the Japanese yen probably will be limited to the stronger currencies in the European Common Market, it was reported Sunday.

Sources said finance ministers of the nine Common Market countries, gathered here for their second Sunday session on the 10-day-old monetary crisis, had virtually abandoned plans for full linkage of currencies.

Such a joint float would have brought them closer to their ambition for "European union" with a single currency.

The market's 14-man executive commission, headed by Francois-Xavier Ortoli, was reported to have proposed that only member countries with strong currencies try to link them. The strongest currencies in the community belong to West Germany, Belgium and the Netherlands.

Switzerland, Sweden, Austria and Norway may be asked to join the project, the sources said. Although they are not members of the Common Market, they are or will be closely linked with it and have strong currencies.

Britain, Ireland and Italy apparently were in no position to go into the joint float, at least by the proposed March 19 deadline. A spokesman for the Irish delegation said they probably would have to work out something for themselves.

Decisions by the West Europeans would help clarify the position of the dollar. No one was talking about supporting an agreed dollar price, such as the United States fixed Feb. 12 and the Europeans abandoned March 2.

But some support for the dollar seemed possible. The commission reportedly suggested that the European central banks in a joint float should go into the market to buy dollars when they want to keep the stronger currencies from dragging up the price of the weak ones.

If the value of a country's currency rises, its export goods become more expensive and harder to sell.

A meeting in Paris on Friday may make it clear how much the U.S. government is willing to help by going into the markets itself to keep up the price of the dollar.

No official support for the dollar was expected until at least March 19. How much support there will be after that depends on decisions from the Sunday meeting in Brussels and from another the Common Market countries will have Friday in Paris with U.S. Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz and representatives of five other countries, including Japan.

In Tokyo, Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka expressed belief the United States will take some step toward partial convertibility of the dollar into gold, abandoned in August 1971. Any such step would support the official rate for the dollar-2.835 West German marks-set on Feb. 12.

At the close of business Friday the price had drifted down to 2.79 marks. Shultz said a few hours later that the United States had made no commitment to support it.

State Of Emergency Declared

Bermuda Gov. Killed

HAMILTON, Bermuda (AP) — The British governor of Bermuda and his young aide were shot and killed just before midnight Saturday as they walked the governor's dog after a dinner party.

Sir Richard Sharples and his aide-de-camp, Capt. Hugh Sayers, were found lying dead near the door of Governor's House, the official residence of London's representative on this British crown colony in the Atlantic.

They had been walking on the spacious unguarded grounds with the Sharples family pet. The Great Dane dog also was shot and killed by the unknown assailants.

The assistant governor declared a state of emergency shortly after stepping in and gave police and immigration officials the power to stop anyone from leaving the island.

Sir Richard, 57, took over last October, a month after the island's police commissioner was killed and his 17-year-old daughter was wounded in the yard of their home.

A government spokesman said police did not know whether there was any connection between that incident and the new one.

The spokesman, acting at the request of police, declined to say how many shots were fired at Sharples and his 25-year-old assistant. He said the number of attackers was unknown and declined to reveal what type of cartridges were found.

In Wake Of London Bombing

Police Tighten Cooperation

LONDON (AP) — Police of three capitals and a number of other cities were reported Sunday to be tightening their security cooperation as a precaution against further terrorist bombing.

Informants said cooperation between security headquarters of London, Dublin and Belfast was stepped up following bomb blasts in London on Thursday that killed one man and injured more than 200.

Police of Londonderry and Glasgow also got involved after explosions there over the weekend.

The cooperation involved faster exchange of information about terrorist suspects, the sources said, and stricter controls at British, Irish and Northern Ireland border checkpoints.

The Irish Republican Army was blamed for some of the bombings or hoaxes that have kept police in the five cities occupied since Northern Ireland's violence spread to the British capital.

Glasgow police refused to say whether the IRA had any links with two men arrested and charged early Sunday in an explosion that damaged a club and an apartment house.

The 200 residents of Londonderry's Carlisle Road, a busy shopping street, were allowed to return home at noon Sunday—20 hours and three bomb explosions after an alert sent them packing.

The bombs were small and the casualties were few-a soldier with leg and arm injuries and an elderly lady suffering shock. The blasts wrecked three stores.

Dublin police were kept busy over the weekend checking bomb scares. At times Saturday the city center was immobilized because they sealed off streets to check suspect cars. But no explosions were reported.

Bombings and sectarian killings continued in Belfast and outside the capital with no sign of any letup in the violence that in 3-1/2 years has claimed nearly 750 lives in Northern Ireland.

The spread of the bombings to Logdon caught people by surprise and although Scotland Yard had advance warning the terrorist attacks were coming, serious flaws turned up in police routine.

The metropolitan police force is roughly 4,000 men below its authorized 22,000-man strength.

British authorities, from Home Secretary Robert Carr down, made clear they expect a further terrorist campaign in London and probably elsewhere in Britain. When, they don't know.

Many believe, however, that it may coincide with the publication expected later this month of a British government document outlining its plans for the future of Northern Ireland.

Police were still questioning 10 suspects in the London bombings, seven men and three women who were hauled off a Belfast-bound plane late Thursday.

Reliable Sources Claim

IRA Meets To Heal Split

DUBLIN (AP)—Leaders of the nationalist Provisional wing of the Irish Republican Army were reported to have met secretly over the weekend in bid to heal a split between the Dublin headquarters and the forces on the firing line in Belfast.

Reliable informants said the Dublin high command summoned Joe Cahill and Seamus Twomey, Provisional leaders in Belfast, to a meeting Friday and Saturday.

The IRA is outlawed both in Northern Ireland and in Ireland and its leaders are in hiding.

But IRA sources said the Dublin delegation was incensed by what it considered the disobedience of the Belfast group over the recent London bombings.

The London bombings were said to have been carried out by a task force of extremist Provisionals from Belfast's Andersonstown district.

Members of the group were believed either to be also members or to have close links with a splinter faction of ultras known as Saor Eire-Free Ireland. Saor Eire, which has Trotskyite leanings, sees continuing violence as the only way to achieve its aims.

Cahill and Twomey were said to have reported to the meeting that the bombings were the work of young hotheads increasingly outside their control.

Dissatisfaction between the Dublin and Belfast commands has been simmering for some time, however, informants said.

The differences were reported to be over tactics, with the Dubliners, after the arrest last year of hardline Provisional chieftain Sean MacStiofain, favoring some form of negotiation with the British government.

The Belfast leaders argued, though, that they were losing control of extremist elements because of this approach.

On the immediate issue of carrying the bombing to the heart of Britain, the Dublin group adamantly opposed such action.

FBI Agent Shot At Wounded Knee

By F. RICHARD CICCONE
Associated Press Writer

WOUNDED KNEE (AP)—Fresh gunfire was reported around Wounded Knee Sunday, 24 hours after authorities struck a peace with militant Indians and withdrew an armed blockade. One FBI agent was shot in the wrist.

Federal marshals said the agent, who was not identified, was struck in the vicinity of the village, taken over only two weeks ago by the Indians.

Fired Upon; Fired Back

Dennis Banks, a leader of the American Indian Movement, said some of his followers in a van were fired upon. He said his men returned the fire.

"I think the FBI was attempting to provoke the situation," Banks said. The rear windows of the van were smashed by bullets, he said, but none of the men inside was struck.

There was no immediate word from authorities on the exchange of gunfire. The agent was taken to a hospital at nearby Pine Ridge, but his condition was not known at once.

The shooting of the agent was first reported by Oglala Sioux tribal President Richard Wilson—an AIM opponent— and confirmed moments later by federal marshals.

Federal authorities 24 hours earlier had withdrawn the circle of lawmen that had surrounded the village. It was not known immediately whether they planned to reinstitute their barricades.

The shooting report followed a charge by the Indians that the government was trying to "discredit" the peace pact by infiltrating federal agents into the village.

4 Held By Indians

Four men who the Indians said claimed to be postal inspectors were held under armed guard about two hours before being escorted from the hamlet with their hands above their heads.

The Indians have said they intend to remain in the village indefinitely.

Indian leaders said the four men told sentries they were postal inspectors, but only one gave his name and carried identification.

"We figure the other three are some kind of federal agents," said American Indian Movement leader Dennis Banks. "I'm still going on the theory there was a deliberate attempt by the FBI to discredit our end of the agreement. I don't think they came here to protect any mailboxes."

Banks said the same four men had tried to gain access to the village Saturday night by posing as health officials. He did not elaborate.

The four were taken to the edge of the village by panel truck and told to walk with hands in the air to their car, parked about a quarter of a mile away.

There was no immediate word from federal officials on the identity of the four.

A local rancher and his teenaged son also were held by the Indians for about one hour before being released. The circumstances of their being taken into custody were not immediately known.

When the first group of four was taken hostage, the Indians sealed off the village with armed guards. Three guards were posted at the Big Foot Trail entrance to the village and warned two newsmen as they approached their blockade: "Go back or you'll get shot."

Celebrated a "Moral Victory"

The Indians celebrated Saturday night after proclaiming they won a "moral victory" from the U.S. government when the 300 federal marshals and FBI agents withdrew their roadblocks and checkpoints at 5 p.m. EST.

The celebration included dancing, drum beating, chanting and speeches by leaders. The Indians also slaughtered and roasted a cow, lit a huge bonfire and held spiritual ceremonies.

Banks told the Indians Saturday night, "We have won this war, but there still is a war in Washington State, there still is a war in Oklahoma."

Disarm

David L. Johnston, director of the UMass Department of Public Safety, doesn't feel that the carrying of firearms presents a danger on this campus. His reasoning is this: ". . . in a violent situation, authorities will simply call on officers who do have guns. In Amherst, the Amherst town police would be called."

Johnston pointed out that the State University of New York doesn't have armed police but "that does not relieve the situation, simply because they call on the Albany police department who do carry guns when there is the possible need for someone with firearms."

We feel that this is a backwards approach of dealing with the problem of police and citizen disarmament. Looking at it in this way, it would make sense to say that students might as well carry guns, because without them, they could always call on campus police if the need ever arose.

Looking at it in proper perspective, however, the disarmament of campus police would mean fewer people with guns, and less chance of using them. Campus police should not carry guns.

On Religion

Jesus freaks, the Maharishi, and Guru Maharaj Ji are manifestations of movements which are peculiar to our society. Or are they? The proliferation of these movements has shed light on religion in general.

The basic appeal of religion is its ability to supply explanations to things which hold men in awe. Attachment to specific religious movements are the result of anomie or alienation caused by men's awe of the unexplainable. To ameliorate a condition of anomie or alienation, input into religion is rewarding. Where one perceives non-direction and lack of rules, he can acquire both by becoming a Jesus freak. Where one is alienated from societal rules, he can reject them and take on the rules of Guru Maharaj Ji. All promise salvation from the "tragedy of life". All supply answers and escape from that which awes men.

It is paradoxical that people expect to solve problems of the world, and finding out their ideals cannot be achieved, end up asking to be saved from the problems of the world. You can hear it said, "It's just not desirable around here; humans are evil; we live in a dark age. I have to go somewhere and mellow out. I look forward to an afterlife with Jesus." Or perhaps you will work to achieve cosmic consciousness. Anyway you look at it, you must be saved from this tragic human condition.

To get back to the central point—what do these new religious movements mean to the traditional religious institutions?

It means the Guru Maharaj Ji and the Jesus freaks will draw numbers away from the Catholics and Baptists. Also money and influence.

It might mean a re-evaluation and adjustment of traditional religious ideology in order to appeal again to the masses.

Most important, however, these religious movements shed light on our traditional religions. The Guru and the Jesus freaks give us a glimpse of what our traditional religions were like at their birth. After all, are the followers of Guru Maharaj Ji different from Christ and his disciples? It's the same cult of personality and divinity. Doesn't transcendental meditation (TM) fill the same void as Buddhism, Islam or Christianity. TM is a psysiological process, but all those who meditate have an orientation to the world that portrays a certain commonality—a commonality which can be characterized by a notion of transcendence of human activity except that which is necessary. This is a strain of ideology permeating all religions.

What it all boils down to, is that religion is religion no matter what the guise, whether old or new, from east or west. It is awe inspired by events which m[illegible] can't explain. However, history has shown man to discover causes to [illegible] previously unexplained. Man has been able to make it in the world [illegible] becoming [illegible] have done all right alone. There is no re[illegible] which we [illegible] not understand. So what's the awe all about?

White Collar Crime

We all know about street crime.

That's when a junkie who's undoubtedly black or Puerto Rican gets busted for mugging somebody or ripping someone off.

But white collar crime, that's o.k., because the guys who do that are like pops or Uncle Sumner, and they've done a lot for the department, and they've always given you a $25 birthday check.

White collar crime is not necessarily illegal.

It can be an extra business lunch, or a phone call to the folks back home, or a bunch of flowers for the secretary.

It can be an expense account. A couple of cigars. A room at the Ritz, instead of a room at the Happy Heavens Motor Inn. A diarrheic contingency fund or miscellaneous category in the budget. A private letter using department postage.

The Athletic Department is suffering from the legal kind of white collar crime, the kind that is largely invisible, mostly minute.

It is an affliction that affects every department on campus, but is highlighted in the Athletic Department because athletics is the only extra-curricular activity financed by a student fee which students do not exercise direct conrol over.

During the past week, while I was writing a series of articles about the Athletic Department, I became convinced that white collar crime can be combatted.

1) If the Athletic Department were forced to fend for itself, without financing by student athletic fees, much of its extravagences would be eliminated through necessity.

2) If the student athletic fee is kept, written policies approved by the Trustees must be established to govern and delineate practices in recruiting, travel, ticket distribution, food and refreshments, and miscellany.

3) The Student Senate should hire an independent auditor-permanently or temporarily-to review all University expenditures which involve student funds.

4) The Student Senate President should, in the future, make his or her appointments to the Athletic Council not on the basis of balance or politics, but on the basis of ideas. The President should exercise leadership.

5) The Athletic Council must promulgate a discipline policy which protects the civil liberties of its athletes. Civil liberties should not be left to the whims of a dubious coach or administrator.

6) Alternatives to the athletic fee should be explored. The Athletic Council should not take anyone's word that alternative financing is impossible without limiting the scope of varsity athletics.

'Finnegan's Wake'

Northern Ireland went to the polls last week, in what might be termed a half-hearted attempt at democracy. The referendum voted on was to decide whether or not Northern Ireland would continue under British rule, or join with the Republic of Ireland. It sounded just great, but you didn't have to be an expert in politics to realize that it was all a big show. The Protestants outnumber the Catholics in Northern Ireland by two to one, so you might say the results were known before the votes were even counted. To add to the farcical proposition, the Catholics, with the aid of the IRA, mobilized their people to abstain from the polls altogether, to demonstrate, I suppose, the futility of it all. The Protestants were there in force, however, as the results clearly demonstrated: 591,820 votes to remain under British rule, 6,463 against. It brings to mind the old cliche, "the yea's have it, and the nay's never vote".

Technically, it was a free election, with the result a majority rule. But more than that, it was a demonstration of the dividedness and hatred with which Northern Ireland abounds. The referendum underscored the fact that the long dark night of terror is far from over. On voting day, the IRA moved its tactics south to London itself, setting off huge explosions near Trafalgar Square, and in front of the Criminal Court Building. As was evident on the evening news, the scene in London was chaotic, with at least one dead, and some two hundred injured. Most reporters likened the situation to the blitz of World War II.

And likewise, the Protestants will not be terribly happy when Britain issues its forthcoming White Paper on Northern Ireland, which will outline plans for the future running of that government, as it is expected that the British will retain control over the more vital functions. The Protestants want a larger piece of the pie, and it seems that the Catholics don't want either Protestant or British rule. Britain has hinted that it will introduce a form of proportional representation, thereby giving both groups a say in government, in proportion to their population. Instead of rectifying the situation, it seems to me it will only frustrate the Catholics even more. So what is the solution to a militant and strongly divided country, where the minority will always remain the minority? Will the fighting never cease, and is Northern Ireland doomed to terror until the Catholics sit back and accept Protestant or British domination?

I cannot at this point conceive of a situation in which the three parties will be pacified, short of, that is, all Catholics emigrating to the Republic, which may not be such a bad idea, considering the vivid pictures of beautiful downtown Belfast that we've been seeing lately. Or perhaps the British could follow our Vietnam example, and initiate a Britishization Program, complete with flags and "Rule Britannia", and then sort of slip out the back door while no one was looking. Or else they could import Barry Goldwater, and have him begin sawing off Northern Ireland, and let it drift away with the tide. You may laugh, but these suggestions are every bit as good as some of the "solutions" we have been hearing about lately.

One thing is sure at any rate; the revolution and patriotic battles of Ireland have lost their romanticism. The drinking and crying songs about O'Hanlan and Finnegan, and all the other brave young rebels have been turned sour with the pictures of dying children, and churches being blown to bits. Sympathy for the "cause" has turned to disgust for the nightmare. On March 17, the world's Irish will turn out to honor the country of their heritage, but I miss my guess if the celebrations aren't more somber and reflective. And unless I'm really off target, the Catholics in Northern Ireland will demonstrate their love for St. Patrick with more terrorism and violence. No single group is at fault there, the blame belongs to everyone. Until the dark cloud of terror is lifted from Northern Ireland, and they realize that killing does not have to be a way of life, then just maybe we can sing about heroes again, instead of crying over victims. Ireland doesn't have to be the agonizing place that it is. The roots of hatred go deep in Ireland, but if given the chance, the roots of love go even deeper.

Exterminate Old People

To The Editor:

In retreat of the current abortion issues infesting the latest polemics in the Collegian, I should like to propose an alternative to the controversial issues burdening the American Citizen. I think we should do away with all who are unwanted, most particularly Old People.

I'm sure most people will agree that Old People are a damn nuisance, both to society at large and our own individual freedoms. For one thing, it's quite often that a driver of a gasoline powered vehicle, upon the confrontation of an Elderly crossing the street in defiance of the streetlights, is compelled to stop his machine and impatiently wait until the Older One has crossed. In this we have a few negative results. For one thing, the vehicle being in a stop position, the gasoline is wasted...both using up precious fuel and adding to the pollution of our sacred environment. Another thing is that the surface pvement upon which the Older walks upon is that much more worn down by his senile wanderings, for the pavements are constructed for the purpose of controlled momentary usage...meaning that they were made for many people to walk upon at the same time, and when several people, in this case being many Old People who refuse to follow the controlled method of transportation, cross at different times, the pavement is more worn than usual...thus costing the taxpaying citizen untold increased payments to care for the pavement. Most of these Old People live on Social Security, so they need not worry about such trivial taxation. Also since this society depends on timed-promptness, any wasted time within non-movement is detrimental to the function of societal progression. All because of Old People.

I also think that all Old People should be administered a "test" to determine if they are competent to live or should be eliminated from society in order to insure the proper and most beneficial functioning of the society. Such a test could proceed as follows:

1.) Can you run the three-mile dash without undergoing a heart attack?

2.) Can you see well enough to heave a stone at a Civil Rights worker from a distance of thirty miles?

3.) Do you give money regularly to your city's local drug drop-in center?

4.) Blah, Blah, Blah?

Also, about Old People driving cars. It's such a pain in the posterior to have to drive behind some old Ancient on a huge interstate highway and not be able to pass, when that Ancient is keeping an average speed of less than forty miles an hour. So, simply, Old People should not be allowed to drive.

Old People are both a menace and an obstacle to us younger folk, who are trying so hard to keep the world together these days. We never asked for Old People, and since this is "our" world now, we don't want them. Just as we sometimes never ask for a pregnancy when it occurs suddenly contrary to our personal plannings, we never asked for the bickering and self-righteous interferences of Old People. They slow us down. They frustrate our precise mechanisms of movement, and they lead us, through their visual presence, to thoughts of hopeless expectations.

To be blunt, for this is such an out-an-out approach to begin with, Old People should be exterminated. Put them in desserts to starve, or snowy tundras to freeze to death, or simply follow the techniques of our national hero, Adolf Hitler, and lead them like sheep (for they are, for the most part, equal in docility and diminishing intellect), into gas chambers or stoves and get rid of them with no muss, no fuss. One idea proposes the establishment of "Hunting Grounds" where Old People are put in their multitude amidst an environment similar to the jungles of Africa, and where sporting young people under forty can sit in tree-houses and pick off the Old Ones with the latest device of warfare...which could also interest such social organizations as the Army or SDS in establishing a sort of "testing ground" for future endeavors.

Old People are unwanted in this day and age, and should be dealt with accordingly, as are other problems of today: pregnancies, sexist attitudes, political condensation, and so forth. I propose a campaign which will eliminate the troublesome and hindering interference of Old People upon the precision oriented society we younger folks have created and polished to its perfection. I will call this campaign "Kill the Old People", quite simply.

Seeking Truth?

To The Editor:

Man's endless quest is to understand his purpose for existence. He isn't satisfied by intellectual arguments and material wealth. He seeks to know why he is alive. The difference between a person and a corpse is energy. A dead person doesn't have the power to move. He has no energy, therefore he has no life. This most incredible phenomena is beyond our control. So now while we can we should realize this energy.

Greek philsophers directed us to know ourselves by searching within. They weren't pointing at our minds or our personalities. They spoke of our spirit, that life force that is the source of our wisdom and love.

Guru Maharaj Ji can reveal this energy to you. It is already in us, He just shows us where to look to find it. He offers His Knowledge freely to all seekers of truth; its simple purity speaks for itself. This energy is God, and meditation upon it unlocks our creativity and love and gives us peace.

Sylvan Janitors

To The Editor:

Unfortunately, Chris West is not familiar with the janitorial service all over this campus. In her proposal in last Monday's Collegian (re: Kind to Janitors' Week), she writes: "The mere thought of what this school would be like without them is mind staggering." It's a crying shame that Chris has not visited Sylvan area. We residents of Sylvan had a janitorial cutback last fall. On my floor, for example, the janitors come at most twice a week.

Also, it is stated: "Think about having to clean the lounge after the Saturday night party...all that beautiful, sticky beer all over the furniture..." Well, Chris, we in Sylvan have gotten used to thinking about such a dilemma from the Saturday night parties right up until Wednesday of the next week, at times.

Chris, if you want to be kind to janitors, why don't you come up to Sylvan and do some work for them?

Woweee!

To The Editor:

I found a neat way to get high. Rub some alcohol on your face and then stick your whole head in a basin full of lukewarm water. Keep blowing bubbles until you're out of breath. Then, with your head still in the water, stand on your hands, for about ten seconds. Then stand up and run around in circles as long as you can. I did it with a bunch of my friends last weekend, and WOWEEEE did we get shlonked on our asses. We were all rolling around the floor, trying to get up onto our knees. And it's not even addictive. P.S. Whatever you do, please don't print this in the Collegian.

Editorial Points

A lot of words are under attack because they're sexist. Now you have to say chairperson instead of chairman, selectperson instead of selectman, spokesperson instead of spokesman. Just wait until the church becomes the target of anti-sexist lexicography. Instead of hymns, we'll all be singing hers? And instead of finishing the prayers with amen, we'll be saying awomen.

Making Love

To The Editor.

Due to a "commotion" in the Collegian office in which free speech emerged victorious, there was an editorial error in my review of Deep Throat in Friday's Poor Richard's. The corrected copy should read as follows:

"Fifty-two percent of all 13-to-19 year olds in the United States have had sexual intercourse," reports the Boston Globe. That's half the population. Half the population has screwed, fucked, balled, laid, copulated before they were 20.

False Argument

To The Editor:

Perhaps Jonathan Steimen believes that philosophy lectures are a good basis for answering deep questions, but I have found the put-down rhetoric of pseudo-philosophers rather annoying. Instead of coming right out and saying "I don't think a fetus has a right to live, so I disagree with Ms. Laidig," Jonathan chose to tell us everything he learned in his philsophy class. Well, I took philsophy, too. And I learned the public put-down rhetoric by listening to the professor. But I won't use it, at least not now. Perhaps explanations will do better.

First of all, reading Dear Abby has nothing to do with the anti-abortion coalition, and the incident mentioned does not, as you might like to believe, personify the typical anti-abortionist. If you want a good argument against abortion, plenty of people can give it to you, even though they are becoming discouraged about shoveling sand against the tide. But observe with caution that these people have the illogical gall to recognize a specific human quality in the human fetus. But, philosophically, these people have a right to believe that a human seed, being in an optimum environment for growth, does not remain a seed for long-it begins to develop into a human being immediately--they conclude that these human seedlings are not expendable. It may sound simple, but there are a lot of things that many people wish to ignore.

One of them is that you who read this passage are a pile of chemicals which was once a smaller pile of chemicals--each series in that pile of chemicals being made in the stereo likeness of your first cell--your seed, unless you happen to be a cancerous mutant.

Deny that the only reason your mind can think is because the chemicals that make your brain cells give you that capcity. Yes, it is basically chemicals. So let's not get wound up in the philosophy rhetoric if it is only going to be used to put down another's beliefs without offering an explanation. As I said before, I took the course, too, and I didn't need to skip any classes to get plenty of pro-abortion explanations--I don't see why Mr. Steimen had to in order to get any anti-abortion arguments.

The anti-abortion arguments are not illogical, it's just that you see what you want to see. And you can support that vision by wearing spectacles tinted to your favorite color by philosophy classes, or what not.

Well, philosophy doesn't answer it all. Science, philosophy, and human development combined can give you some pretty astounding revelations, though. Morals are not based only on emtions. Laws which make it to the books in every society regardless of when or where, are laws which seem to guard human rights. These are legislations of morals. People live together-this what society is. People living together must respect the needs of others. Thus they set guidelines, which we in America call legislation, to help satisfy everybody's needs. But you can't please everyone, so you try to please most. Society does in fact have the right to establish its own guidelines--who else is going to establish the guidelines of another's society by right? There is some philsophy and political science and sociology for you to think about. So Ms. Laidig's sentence: "To say that a society has no right to legislate morals is to say that no society has a right to legislate," is not that illogical, unless you mistakenly see "American Beaurocracy" as being an absolute synonym for the word "society".

Also, Ms. Laidig was not implying that society changes in only two ways. She was stating that in the abortion situation, we as a society had two directions legally, those being yes or no, and in her interpretation, we as a society chose the more selfish. You can agree or disagree on that count, but please let's not take arguments out of context and disagree on pretentiously contextual levels, because that is false argumentation.

If you do not understand the beliefs of the anti-abortionists, then listen a little bit more. You may not be convinced, but you may understand....

Death Penalty To Return?

A ROMP IN THE RUBBLE—A South Vietnamese youngster, wearing a discarded U.S. Air Force fatigue shirt, runs through a sea of soft drink cans along the main road leading out of Saigon. By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon's proposal to restore capital punishment for certain federal crimes will have to fit through a narrow—but still undefined—hole in the Supreme Court decision last summer that outlawed the death penalty.

Four states already have adopted laws reinstating legal executions, but none has been subjected yet to a Supreme Court test.

There are indications the federal legislation will follow the same pattern the four states did, making death mandatory for certain crimes but giving a jury latitude to determine precisely what crime was committed.

Nixon said in a nationwide radio address Saturday that Atty. Gen. Richard Kleindienst has drafted a death-penalty statute that will cover war-time traitors, "the hijacker, the kidnapper, the man who throws a firebomb, the convict who attacks a prison guard, the person who assaults an officer of the law" if their acts result in death.

The proposal, to be submitted to Congress soon, can be expected to win wide support in the House, where eight constitutional amendments to restore the death penalty were introduced in the wake of the Supreme Court ruling last year.

None was acted on then. One of the leading opponents of capital punishment, House Judiciary Committee Chairman Emanuel Celler of New York, was defeated for re-election.

The head of the Judiciary Committee in the Senate, James O. Eastland, D-Miss., already has said he would look with favor on a proposal such as one suggested earlier by the attorney general.

"I am convinced that the death penalty can be an effective deterrent against specific crimes," the President said, although he acknowledged that some sociological theories dispute that.

Kleindienst, himself, at a news conference in January, said: "I don't believe, generally speaking, that the death penalty acts as a deterrent," but he said it might in certain "cold-blooded, premeditated" crimes.

Less than a week later, however, Asst. Atty. Gen. Roger C. Cramton told a Senate subcommittee the administration was likely to recommend two-stage trials for serious crimes, permitting guilt and punishment to be decided separately.

Punishment "that is too severe or too flexible may interfere with, rather than enhance, law enforcement," Cramton said.

Juvenile Delinquency

Indifference In USSR

By JAMES R. PEIPERT
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) — Russia's No. 2 policeman says juvenile delinquency remains an "urgent problem" and blames indifferent adults, boredom and vodka.

Interviewed in this week's Ogonyok magazine, Deputy Interior Minister Boris T. Shumilin cited figures indicating "a favorable trend in reverse, an urgent problem."

The Shumilin interview in the popular picture magazine—published by the party daily, Pravada—indicates widespread official concern.

Ogonyok's editorial board concluded the interview with an appeal to parents, teachers, Young Communist League members and youths themselves "to take part in the dialogue and share their thoughts and observations on this most important problem."

Unlike the situation in capitalist countries, Shumilin asserted, "juvenile delinquency in the Soviet Union is not a natural phenomenon stemming from the social system."

"It is a result of our mistakes in the education of youth and an inability to use all existing opportunities for the formation of a higher moral quality."

Shumilin cited the case of Valery Shelkovnikov, expelled from a Novosibirsk high school for "violating discipline."

Shelkovinikov was reinstated, but after only two weeks of the new term the teachers gave up and he was expelled again. The youth was eventually sentenced to a year and a half in prison.

Shumilin chided the teachers for abdicating their duty "to spare no efforts so that young people will worthily carry on the cause of their fathers and the cause of the great Lenin."

"While not exonerating the school," Shumilin added, "we should state emphatically that we still show little concern for the leisure time of youths outside school."

He quoted from a statement to the police made by a juvenile delinquent from a Ukrainian city.

"When I get out of school," the youth said, "I usually go stand around on a corner." He complained there was no place to go except a movie theater, so after a while "standing around, talking and telling jokes," he and his friends usually bought a bottle of vodka at a nearby liquor shop and drank it in the school yard.

Shumilin pointed to drink as a prime cause of delinquency. He said 40 per cent of the minors who come to trial committed their crimes while intoxicated. Polls conducted in reform camps showed 60 per cent of the inmates were heavy drinkers before they were 16.

"There were even cases when the first drink was given to children by their parents," Shumilin said.

He urged parents and teachers to heed the example of School No. 13 in Novogorod, where the Communist Youth League organizes marches to sites of World War II partisan battles, visits war invalids and has set up a detachment of "Friends of the Police."

Counsel Named

WASHINGTON (AP)—H. William Shure, a New Haven lawyer and former judge advocate in the Air Force, was named Sunday an assistant minority counsel of the special Senate committee assigned to investigate the Watergate bugging affair and related charges of political espionage.

The appointment was announced by Sen. Howard Baker, R-Tenn., vice chairman of the committee. He said Shure, 33, will work with chief minority counsel Fred D. Thompson, a Nashville lawyer and former U.S. attorney in Tennessee.

Alumnus Wins $500 And Trip

A paper he did while a graduate student at UMass has won a $500 prize and a trip to Russia for John Barnoski of Blanford.

The paper is "Hot Wire Measurement of Velocity Gradients in a Fluid Flow," based on Barnoski's master's thesis in the UMass department of mechanical engineering. It won first prize in the graduate division in national competition sponsored by the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics.

The all-expense paid trip to Russia is so that Barnoski may present the paper there at an international conference in September. Professor Robert Kirchhoff, Barnoski's thesis advisor, directed and supported the research for the paper. Barnoski received his master of science degree in mechanical engineering from UMass this past June. He is a 1971 graduate of UMass and the son of Mr. and Mrs. Frank J. Barnoski of Russell Rd., Blanford. He is now on active duty with the Air Force as a second heutenant, stationed at Hill Air Force Base in Utah.

School Of Education Awarded For Teacher Prep. Programs

The School of Education has received a "distinguished achievement" award for its Teacher Preparation Program Council, from the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education.

Dr. Dwight W. Allen, dean of the UMass School of Education, and Dr. Richard J. Clark, assistant dean for undergraduate programs and teacher preparation, accepted the award in Chicago.

Purpose of the Distinguished Achievement Awards is to "encourage member colleges and universities to describe their successful programs thereby stimulating other institutions toward excellence in their programs."

The UMass School of Education was cited for its 24 different teacher preparation programs "each with a different thrust and each created in answer to the need for teachers trained and oriented toward a specific kind of student, school, curriculum, or community environment."

The Teacher Preparation Program Council at UMass was created in spring, 1970 to take advantage of the variety of teacher education ideas available in the several School of Education departments, including those not directly involved with teacher education. Since then, 24 teacher preparation programs have evolved, giving students alternative means of study to suit their individual interests and career plans.

By 1970 the rapidly growing School of Education had departmentalized into a dozen "centers." The Teacher Preparation Program Council (TPPC) was created and empowered "to make policy and to obtain resources for teacher education," with the idea that teacher education is the responsibility of the entire School of Education, not one center or department.

TPPC abolished all existing School of Education requirements for students, and invited proposals for new programs. State teaching certification requirements were kept, with a flexibility approved by the State Education Commissioner.

Resulting programs for students preparing to teach range from the teaching of prisoners or specific national groups, to urban education, to emphasis in special kinds of instruction or educational philosophy.

For example: The Methods Potpourri. Students may take any of several short courses in teaching methods, regardless of the special teacher education programs they are enrolled in.

Integrated Day Program. Juniors and seniors are accepted for one year of study. Following a semester of such modular courses as aesthetics, language arts, reading, social studies, and science, a student spends a full semester working in a school district where he gets to test his own theories in the classroom. The idea is to give students on-the-job experience while bringing new educational ideas to school districts. School districts involved are: Brattleboro, Vt.; Kennebunk, Maine; Wellesley, Mass.; and Gateway Regional High School in Huntington, Mass.

Sexist Prejudices May Cramp MD's View

By WARREN E. LEARY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON (AP)—When a woman gets nauseous during pregnancy or suffers cramps during menstruation, some doctors are likely to dismiss it as an "emotional thing" instead of treating the cause, a doctors' report contends.

These doctors may be guilty of sexist prejudice against women, the study says, when they attribute psychological causes to ailments which are known to have organic causes.

In a report in the New England Journal of Medicine, Drs. K. Jean Lennane and R. John Lennane say they have studied medical literature, including textbooks, and found the "cloudy thinking" involving women's medical problems "may be due to a form of sexual prejudice."

In an accompanying editorial, Dr. Martin J. Kelly Jr., assistant director of psychiatry at Boston's Peter Bent Brigham Hospital, said the suggestion that a physician's unconscious attitudes may affect his treatment of a patient should make him consider whether he may be guilty of prejudice.

Dr. Kelly also cautioned that the study discussed "only the most distorted statements" in the literature on female problems and that most physicians don't rely solely on such psychological explanations, which he said can be valid factors in some illness.

"But sexism exists and it's very subtle," he added, "and physicians are also guilty of these attitudes."

The report, done at Wellington Hospital in Wellington, New Zealand, says, for example; that the cause of menstrual pain is unknown, but depends upon the occurrence of ovulation. Studies have shown that the pain is relieved with suppression of ovulation through hormone treatment.

The report says some medical textbooks include statements that the menstrual pain is caused by "faulty outlook . . . leading to an exaggeration of minor discomfort" or "the pain is always secondary to an emotional problem."

"There is no valid basis for this attitude," the study said.

The cause of nausea during pregnancy is unknown; but medical texts say it is probably due to secretion of some substance, probably a hormone, during pregnancy.

Yet, the study says, this condition, which affects about 80 per cent of all pregnant women between the fifth and 16th week, is commonly held to be partly or wholly psychogenic—originating in the mind.

The study says some literature—the textbook explanation not-withstanding—attributes the nausea to such "questionable" causes as ". . . stress coupled with an irrationally exaggerated fear of the obstetric hazards confronting her, especially that of producing an abnormal child," or possibly, ". . . resentment, ambivalence and inadequacy in women ill-prepared for motherhood."

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Virgo is style-conscious. These natives appear to be rebellious, but they usually know what "hits" and they perceive just how far they can go. Virgo finds much to learn from Taurus, could have a secret fear of Leo, can make money with Libra and is physically attracted to Capricorn. During 1973, Virgo will gain more recognition and many born under this sign will experience an outstanding month in September. Virgo can be critical, overly fastidious, but also charming and loyal.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Finish what you start. You may appear overly aggressive but this is necessary if you are to complete assignment. Be practical in security matters. Be a shrewd bargainer. Someone is trying to get you to give up something for nothing. Don't do it!

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Strive for greater independence of thought, action. One who wants to make sweeping changes affecting you should be told facts of life. Means protect your own interests. Aquarian could play prominent role.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Money interests could dominate. Trust hunch. You will know when to pull in reins. Associate could advocate radical course. This would lead to loss. Know it and respond accordingly. Check plans with family member.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Spread influence. Teach and learn. Creative endeavors come to foreground. Sagittarian is apt to play prominent role. One who travels much may try to interest you in financial proposition involving land. Take time to consider.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Relative talks about purchasing land, home or farm. Be sure it is truly fine place. Take nothing for granted. If you read between the lines you get better deal for yourself. Act accordingly. Scorpio is in picture.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Be ready for possible change of scenery. One who for months prefers is in mood to experiment. Be flexible. Adapt to reasons. Resist the superficial. Friend tells of romantic episode. Take what you hear with proverbial grain of salt.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Adjust conditions at home. Means help yourself before telling others what should be done. Message will become increasingly clear. One in position of authority requires praise, moral support. Act accordingly.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Avoid fooling yourself. See people in realistic light. Pisces person plays prominent role. What appears a setback is due to boomerang in your favor. Look beyond the immediate—get head on potential.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You may be handling more responsibility. This is necessary because some who make promises cannot keep them. Friend who means well is distracted, not reliable at this time. Prepare accordingly.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Lie low. Let opposition show hand. Time now is on your side. Don't rush to judgment. Mate or partner wants action but is not sure of direction. Your best course is to wait and observe. Put finishing touches on current project.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Those who depend on you may make unusual demands. Key is to find new ways of accomplishing goals. Leo is in picture. Be wary where pets are concerned. One who supposedly cares for animal may not have touch.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Unusual procedure is most likely to succeed. Choose the unorthodox. Individual who appears eccentric is actually inventive. Emotional relationships are sudden and sharp. Lovers' quarrels may result.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are urged to use tact to win. You will find your life more meaningful this year, with happiness your most significant month. You are artistic, able to express your self, and you are fond of travel. You attract many to you who are Sagittarians.

Winter Track Ends; O'Brien Awaits Spring

By WALT POWERS

The 1972-73 UMass winter track season was paradoxical; a comparision of this year's and last year's performances show that, on the whole, this year's team ran faster, jumped longer, and threw further than last season's team, yet their performances in the conference and New England championship meets fell well short of last year's efforts. There were several reasons for this.

First of all, this year's squad was deeper and better balanced than last year's but graduation of last season's top five scorers left a quality gap that the Minutemen were never able to fill completely. This weakness became more glaring as the competition increased.

Lack of adequate training facilities was a major handicap, especially to the younger, less experienced athletes. The weightmen and jumpers were forced to work out in the cramped confines of the Amherst College cage. They were allowed only a modicum of practice time, and in one event, the 35 lb. weight throw, no practice was possible. The sprinters and hurdlers didn't have it any easier. They were forced to practice for sixty yard events in the narrow, thirty yard confines of Curry Hicks Cage.

The six week layoff at semester break was a final damaging factor. Because of it, the season was very short, and the team was unable, until the end, to develop its potential cohesion and sharpness.

In the context of Coach Ken O'Brien's overall objective though, the season was far from a disappointment. "The track season lasts from September to June," said O'Brien at the start of the season, "and our primary objective is to prepare for a successful outdoor season."

Particularly encouraging were the performances of the team's less experienced members. Five freshman records were broken, and nine of the top fifteen scorers were freshmen or sophomores. Only three members of this season's team will be lost to graduation: sprinter Dennis Busa and Co-captains Tony Pendleton and Steve Levine. Busa has been a prime cog in the UMass mile and 440 relay teams over the past two years. He's also a Conference and New England class 220 man. Pendleton, primarily a 100, and 220 (He's finished as high as third in the IC4A 100 yd. dash.) holds the school 220 record, and unofficially set the UMass indoor record at the conference meet. Levine, the leading scorer on this year's indoor team, broke his own school record in the 600 this year, and was a member of the UMass record-setting two mile and distance relay teams. All three seniors close out their collegiate careers this spring.

If the indoor season proved anything, it was that this team has potential. UMass came out of the season demonstrably stronger in the weight events, long jumps, and hurdles than when they went in. Depite their lack of scoring, the most encouraging meet of the season came in the New Englands. Coach Ken O'Brien summarized it this way: "UConn was able to train all season long on their modern indoor facility, and they won the New Englands. Their winning margin over us in most events, though, was only a matter of inches, seconds, or tenths of seconds. If we hope to defend our conference outdoor championship title, we have to work that much harder in the interim to make up the difference. We know we have the ability and we have the outdoor track to do it on."

By DIANE BISSONNETTE

UMass women's basketball team lost a heartbreaker to Ithaca in the first round of the N.E. Regional Women's basketball tournament by a score of 40-38.

"We couldn't get off in the first half," said Coach Jane Farr. "Our shots just weren't going in. It was the foul shots that kept us in the game."

With seven seconds left in the game, the Minutewomen had one last chance to tie the game, when Jenny Edminster tapped a jump ball to Ann Foley in the key. Foley's 5 ft. jumper was just short of the rim and Ithaca rebounded, ending the game.

UMass won its second game against Plymouth State 65-51 in the consolation bracket. Edminster was the high scorer with 19 points. Pat Glispen had 13 points in the winning effort. This victory gave UMass the right to play U.N.H. in a second consolation game. U.N.H. handed the hoopsters their second loss 59-51 and went on to take first place in this bracket.

Southern Conn. took first place in the tourney by pulling off a surprise victory over top seeded Queens.

Celts Manage NY Revenge

By PHIL CANNADAY
Associated Press Sports Writer

BOSTON (AP) — For captain John Havlicek of the Boston Celtics, Sunday's 122-107 National Basketball Association victory over the New York Knicks was a matter of professional pride.

"You hate to get beat by a team four games in a row," Havlicek said in reference to the three game victory streak the Knicks had carried against Boston.

"It doesn't make much difference in the standings," Havlicek said. "You just don't want to lose four in a row."

The victory increased the Celtics lead over the Knicks in the NBA's Atlantic Division to 7-1/2 games. And with only 10 games remaining for Boston, it reduced to two the number of Celtics victories and Knicks losses that remain between Boston and the Atlantic Division title.

Havlicek led the way in Sunday's nationally televised game with a game-high 32 points, aided by the rebounding and defensive work of Dave Cowens and Paul Silas.

The game was pretty much decided when the Celtics ran off a 33-15 first quarter lead as the Knicks committed a string of fouls-five in a one minute stretch-and could not get any help from standout forward Dave DeBusschere. DeBusschere played only nine minutes and did not score before being lifted by Coach Red Holzman because of a bruised hip.

"The loss was due to our committing fouls," Holzman said. "We're going to have to work on that. You can't afford to commit five fouls in a 55-second stretch like we did."

The Knicks narrowed the half-time margin to 59-50 and put on a brief streak in the third period as Bill Bradley fired in 10 points.

But tip-ins by Silas and a string of points by Havlicek widened Boston's lead to 90-79 at the end of the third quarter.

Walt Frazier led the Knicks with 22 points, and Jerry Lucas added 21.

Cowens, playing better than he has in recent games against the Knicks, added 24 points to the Celtics' cause and hauled down 18 rebounds. Guards Jo Jo White and Don Chaney pitched in with 20 and 19 points, respectively.

Aronstein Headed For Nationals

Scuderi's story is also worth telling. He was fourth going into the Saturday finals and also had a 9.0 for the first optional routine. But for some unknown psychic reasons, Steve just couldn't put it all together Saturday. To the spectators, it looked like he just lost control. It was an horrendous event, the high score being a low 8.75 shown by Penn State's Avener and Southern Connecticut's Jay Whelan. The event, which took place three hours after warm-ups—a vast handicap in itself—saw half of its performers fall off, many probably due to cold hands and impatience. Avener won the event, followed in second place by his team mate, Freshman Larry Butler. Dave Jacobson of Navy was third.

In other events, UMass had little to show. Dan Spier, had one of the best ring routines in the first optional set, one of the finest sets of his career. But the judges didn't agree and scored him five hundredths of a point below what he needed to qualify for the finals. Spier, who is a senior, had three final optional routines on the rings, parallel bars, and horizontal bar on Friday.

Floor exercise was dominated by John Crosby from Southern Connecticut State College, but Southern isn't an official member of the league. This meant that they could not receive medals.

Marshall Avener took the first award officially. Mel Hill, of Temple, took the second spot. (He was last year's champion.)

Pommel horse was an excellent event which is not often the case. Navy's Eric Swanson was one of the real standouts of the competition. His final total for three routines was 19.150 out of a possible 20. Hill was second. Avener third.

Penn State's Jim Kruest, took vaulting although Coen's Crosby scored better. Jack Fabricante, a Sophomore, had the fourth best vault of the meet but didn't hit his compulsory vault well enough to qualify.

The all-around title was won, not surprisingly by Avener. Fellow Olympian, John Crosby would have been a very close second. Jim Kruest took the official second place. UMass' Steve Scuderi took the cup for his sixth place finish. Gene Whelan was seventh.

Penn State was the top Eastern team. Navy was second, Temple third beating UMass out for the spot the three had shared.

Amato, Ireland Look Good In Nationals

By JOHN BOCK

The poet sung "The bluest skies you've ever seen are in Seattle . . ." The Iowa State Cyclones couldn't agree more and they loved everything else about the city, too, as they crowned two national champs and walked away with the title to the Forty-Third Annual NCAA National Collegiate Wrestling Championships.

The surprise of the tourney, again this year, was little Clarion State College of Pennsylvania who crowned THREE champions, beating out the traditional best in the nation for the honors. (Details of the Nationals intomorrow's Collegian.)

UMass's own Dave Amato and George Ireland continued to show the rest of the Nation that there are some good wrestlers in New England as they won two matches and looked respectable against the best at the tourney. There are thirty-five men to a weight class so the action was all over the place on eight mats for two days and then moved to four and then down to one for the finals. Both Dave and George wrestled a "rat-tail" preliminary match (a preliminary preliminary, sort of). Amato bested Marquette's 118 pounder 10-6 and Ireland pinned Washington State's Heavyweight.

That win put them both into the first round preliminary matches where their luck changed for the worse. Amato met top seeded Gary Breece from the University of Oklahoma, last year's National Runner-Up, and ended up on the short end 17-3. Ireland almost surprised second seeded Gary Ernst from the University of Michigan (this year's Big Ten Champs) as he took the match down to the last thirty seconds with a 5-4 score in Ernst's favor. At that point George had nothing to lose and shot the works on the best takedown he could muster, but lost the TD to Ernst and the bout 7-4.

It was a bad break but the bright side came in the fact that both Ernst and Breece made it to the semi-finals and that put Amato and Ireland into the consolation brackets. In that respect their luck changed again as Amato lost a heartbreaking 1-0 overtime match to Mid-American Champ Bob Morgan from Kent State. Ireland was a lot less than lucky as he drew Northern Michigan's Small College National Champ Gil Damiani and was pinned.

As was the case in past years with UMass wrestlers at the Nationals the only thing that makes the opposition better is that they wrestle all year around and wrestle the best competition in the nation during the season. UMass can't even wrestle the best in the East, so they enter at a decided disadvantage.

One more bright note for New England was Rhode Island's 177 pounder Stu Horowitz pulled one of the bigger upsets of the tourney by pinning Minnesota's second seeded John Panning. Panning was the defending National Runner- Up and won the trophy for the most pins at last year's nationals.

Aronstein Makes Nationals

By BRENDA RAU

Disappointment and one star are about all the UMass men's gymnastic team came home with this weekend. The team had a bad night on Friday of the three day Eastern Intercollegiate Gymnastics League Championships and dropped from their second place League spot to fourth.

There is, however, one success story worth recounting, that of senior Co-captain, ringman Jay Aronstein. After Thursday's evening competition in compulsory routines, (the same routine done by all competitors on their event), Jay was in second place behind Marshall Avener.

Friday night was a minor fiasco. Jay, who hasn't had a major problem in a routine all year, lost a handstand and in general blew the first part of the set. He finished strongly but scored a low of 8.3. (This is a whole point lower than his lowest score in the regular season.) At this point, Aronstein had dropped to third place but surprisingly he was only trailing by one tenth of a point to Penn State's Vince Faust, for second place. Penn State's Avener was still leading.

On Saturday, in the finals, Aronstein came up with a beautiful 9.4 routine to jump strongly into the second spot. Aronstein will be traveling to Eugene, Oregon for the NCAA finals, the first week in April.

The only other UMass men who had a crack at a trip to the Nationals were Gene Whelan and Co-Captain Steve Scuderi who both qualified for the finals. Gene, who has made a great comeback since a bad injury sustained early in February, came up with solid routines all weekend and took a fifth place medal. Gene promises to be one of the best in the East in a couple of years.

Missouri Has Bulk To Spare

By EARLE BARROLL

You look at the draw and see that Fairfield is slated to oppose Marshall in the first round of the N.I.T. Then you find that UMass has 12th-ranked Missouri in its opener. Politics? Maybe. Getting a local into the second round? Perhaps.

"Actually," rationalized UMass basketball Coach Jack Leaman, "when you're going into a national tournament, you have to expect to play a good team. They're the only kind that can make it to a tournament." Exactly.

There will be no first seeded opposition for the Minutemen this year in their opener Saturday night (7:30) at Madison Square Garden. No Marquette's that were ranked second in the country at that time three years back. No North Carolina's, a team that was considered the only one in the nation two years ago to have a shot at U.C.L.A.

But there will be a Missouri; the runner-up in the Big Eight behind N.C.A.A.-bound Kansas State, a returnee to the New York Classic, a victor over the likes of Purdue, Ohio State and Tennessee and a team that at one time during the season had run off a dozen consecutive wins that vaulted them into the number four slot in the national polls.

"Missouri is an outstanding team," said Leaman who has been furiously patching together the Missouri plan in recent days. "They play in a Conference that is most noted for its football, but also has a great tradition in basketball with the likes of Kansas, which made the final four of the N.C.A.A. two years back and Kansas State in recent years."

The Tigers were 9-5 in the Big Eight, 21-5 overall and concluded their season Saturday night, pasting Nebraska, 86-70, in another "senior night" home court a la UMass-Fordham epic. The biggest single aspect of Missouri that strikes Leaman is their overall size. "Not only are they a tall team," he said. "But they're an extremely heavy team with a guard who weighs 235 pounds and a front court that is over 225 per man."

Since their N.I.T. selection the Minutemen have practiced sporadically, with only heavy-duty staff over this weekend resembling tournament preparation. "This does not bother me," Leaman said. "We haven't played under game conditions for almost two weeks. But I'll guarantee you, these guys will be more than ready when they step on that court Saturday night. Right now they're very anxious to get down to New York."

As far as the entire tourney is concerned the 16-team field was completed this weekend when Minnesota (ranked third or fourth in the country) hobbled its way into the number one position when the Gophers lost to last place Northwestern, while Indiana won the Big Ten title defeating Purdue on national TV.

It has been said that Minnesota was one of the only three teams this year in the country to have a chance at ousting U.C.L.A. along with North Carolina State and Long Beach State. In a recent edition of Basketball Weekly, the Gophers were picked for the final four at the N.C.A.A.'s with the Bruins, Memphis State and North Carolina.

And guess who the Minutemen will face if they get by Missouri? You guessed it. The winner of the North Carolina- Oral Roberts game. Said Leaman, "We'd love to have that opportunity."

Captain Combs Paces Gals To Towson Win

By MDC STAFF

The Boyden gym was its usual crowded cubicle, and as the gymnasts began to warm-up one could detect a certain lack of psyche and concentration. The Towson team was weaker than expected and the UMass team was more tired than expected. After coming off a close meet with Springfield, the team was missing polish. Although most members had off days, Margie Combs proved again her ability to compete and complete routines in the face of any level of competition. She took first place on all events and won the all-around event so easily that she seemed to be in a different meet.

The most exciting event of the meet would be hard to delineate. Floor exercise got the most audience response. Combs and Vexler both wrapped full twisting somersaults and tumbled well enough to finish one, two respectively. Grace Cuddeback of Towson was third, and Alicia Goode tied for the fourth spot. Marion Kulick and Candy Gross both did good routines and really appeared by enjoy their performances.

Uneven bars was a rather strange event as only a few gymnasts were able to show completed routines. Combs was her usual solid self and nailed down the high event score. Bonnie Corrigan, the defending Eastern regional bars champion finished second and Betsy East took the third spot. Anne Vexler finished a close fourth with perhaps her best routine thus far.

On the vaulting event most performers failed to demonstrate any flight and were severely penalized by the judges. Margie Combs hit a good yamashita vault and the winner's circle again. Bonnie Corrigan from Towson was second and Towson's Nancy Vaicichi third. A bouncing Marion Kulick was fourth and Heidi Armstrong was a close fifth.

The balance beam event again proved to be haunted. The ghosts of Boyden began their work on both teams and only two performers had no falls. Combs was one of these persons and earned herself the top slot out of the twelve competitors. Paula Fenhr was another victorious competitor who managed to escape the weirdness of the beam, and took second place for Towson. Vexler had never trouble and could only compile enough points for a fourth place finish.

Overall the team scored its season low of 93.5 points while Towson computed 89.15 points. If UMass is to ever put it all together some changes need to take place very quickly. Next week the varsity completes its dual meet schedule with a meet at So. Conn. State College. Two weeks from that date the team journeys to Temple for the Easterns and another showdown with Springfield. Presently the team is 6-1 on the season and should have no trouble containing a pretty weak team in New Haven on Saturday.

This week's practice sessions will be rearranged and stepped up as the coaches search for their still undetermined "strongest line-up". It should be noted that Jeannine Burger, the team's other all-around performer, did not compete this week but hopes to return to the line-up by Saturday. This should enhance the team's performance somewhat.

Phaseout Of Athletic Fee Defeated

By STEPHEN W. CROWE

Rejection of two Student Senate proposals highlighted yesterday's meeting of the Athletic Council.

Larry Ladd, Student Government Association President and Senate representative Gail Vittori had introduced proposals to review the physical education requirement and to develop a plan to end the Student Athletic fee.

Athletic Director Frank McInerney contemplates what it would be like to be in a world without Athletic Fees. (MDC Photos by Steve Raggles)

The physical education proposal never reached the floor as chairperson George Richardson declared it out of order. Richardson felt that this issue should come under the Academic Affairs Committee. Ladd agreed willingly and withdrew the motion.

Then, after lengthy discussion, the Athletic Council voted 7-5 against the athletic fee issue.

The proposal from the Student Senate was "that the Director of Athletics develop a plan to phase out the financing by the Student Athletic fee of all University intercollegiate sports programs other than those on a club or intramural level; and that the Director of Athletics present a preliminary plan to the Athletic Council at its next regular meeting of April 9, 1973; and that the completed plan will be presented to the Athletic Council at its first regular meeting of the Fall 1973 semester."

Larry Ladd, the chief spokesman for the motion, explained that the bill arose out of the Senate's search for the most appropriate area in which fees could be cut. He pointed out that students were faced with financial problems and cuts must be made in the fee wherever possible. Ladd claimed that the athletic fee was the "least vital" in that it wasn't nearly as important as room and board.

He added, "The Athletic Department has become lethargic with the consistent money coming in from the students' fee and never even thinks about alternatives to the athletic fees."

He offered some alternatives of his own to the financing problem: 1) that there be substantial reduction in the fee; 2) that a high promotion of intercollegiate program make UMass athletics self-supporting; and 3) make the program supported totally through state funds. He also cynically recommended a fourth possibility that the students would match the amount of money that comes in from the enimic alumni contributions.

Frank McInerney, Head of the Athletic Department, complained that "substantial reductions in the athletic fee means substantial reductions in the athletic program. Eventually," he added, "you phase out the program."

McInerney explained that his job as Athletic Director was to "maintain the level of excellence" UMass sports are presently at, and, at the same time, to give more money to the women's athletic department and to club programs.

He said that he could see "no possible way" that he could do this if the fee were to be cut at this time.

Each undergraduate of this University pays an athletic fee of $30 per semester. The money finances athletic programs, clubs, and intramurals.

Ladd questioned the percentage of students involved in these programs and asked how many actually get their money's worth. McInerney said that no statistical data was available yet as to the percentage participating and added that he saw the fee as a tax, which the Trustees had voted on in 1960. The fee of $30 has been consistent since then.

The meeting ended with the defeat of the athletic fees bill.

In other action, the Council heard reports from the Civic Center experiment and the football parking policy committee.

Assistant Athletic Director, Robert O'Connell, reported that the Civic Center experiment had netted a profit of $5,400 to $5,500 which goes into the Barber Scholarship Fund. Statistics showed a low turnout of UMass students at the games. At the two basketball games, a total of 577 student tickets were sold at Boyden and just over 1,300 at the game, an unknown percentage of which were from the other schools. The hockey games were even less successful. The Vermont game netted $1,350 while the Yale game was a $500 loss.

Bernard Bussle, of the Mathematics Department reported on his committee's review of the football stadium parking policy. Larry Ladd objected to the idea of giving special privileges to "Trustees, President, Chancellor and others as designated by the Athletic Director (ex: press, staff)." Ladd opposed the bill on the grounds that it wasn't defined enough as to whom "other designated by the Athletic Director" were. Chairman Richardson said that he had complete faith in McInerney to determine this and the objection was overruled by the Council.

Chairperson George Richardson declared both motions "out of order", but the Athletic Fee motion made it to the floor.

An Old N.E. Tradition

Amherst Operating Expenses Approved

By ED FOGARTY

The Amherst Operating Budget of $12,805,377 was approved with little opposition last night in the first night of the Amherst Town Meeting. The money is for an eighteen month period extending six months into 1974.

The major source of debate was an appropriation of $1500 per year salary for the Selectmen. Many of the Town Meeting members felt that the Selectmen did not have to run for office. If they did and won they should not expect a salary.

It was pointed out that the money was not for salary purposes, but to help defray costs that the Selectmen suffered from their own moneys while working for the office. Often the Selectmen must take days off from work with no pay and spend their time working for the Town.

A Finance Committee spokesman said that other towns paid as much as $600 to $900 per Selectman. The Selectmen's salary was approved by the Meeting.

In further business, the Town Meeting voted to appropriate $490,000 for the construction of a new fire station and the purchase of a fire engine and truck.

The new station will be located at the intersection of East Pleasant Street and Tillson Farm Road. The land will be transferred to the Town by UMass.

Tentative plans call for a three-stall fire station with wings for offices and sleeping quarters. The sleeping quarters would be used for a contingent of student volunteer firemen besides full time firemen.

Some opposition was met in the passage of the article to appropriate $45,000 for the purchase of a new fire engine. Robert Garvey, Selectman, suggested that he would be more than willing "to accept any money donated by an institution."

Although Allen Torrey, Amherst Town Manager, said that there were no problems at present with the water main on South Pleasant Street, the Meeting voted to appropriate $350,000 for the construction of a new 12-inch main.

Torrey said that a new system was needed to provide adequate service to the area. He pointed out that the present system varied is size from six-inch line to twelve-inch.

The Town Meeting defeated an article that would have appropriated $53,100 to construct a sanitary sewer on Leverett Road on the north side of Cushman Bridge.

Selectman Merle H. Bowes introduced the article. He said that some people in the area had been having difficulties with their septic tanks overflowing.

The question was immediately asked as to whom the sewer line was being built for. Steve Fletcher, Town Meeting Member, said that the sewer line would "increase the possibility of town growth."

Many of the homes in the area now have to pump out their septic tanks at the rate of once every two weeks. According to Susan Johnson, property owner on Leverett Road, the only alternatives would be to dump their sewage into the property directly behind them or to dump it into the drainage system.

Leo Bouchard, Selectman, pointed out that the Amherst sewer system is regional. That would mean surrounding towns could hitch up to Amherst's sewage system and plant, including any developers that moved into these surrounding towns.

The bill was defeated because it did not get the required two-third's majority.

Feds Tighten Grip Around Wounded Knee

By JOHN A. LUNDQUIST
Associated Press Writer

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (AP) — Federal agents blockaded Wounded Knee again Monday and vowed to cut off a pipeline of reinforcements, ammunition and food to militant Indians holed up there.

Officials said the roadblocks were ordered because the Indians used the free access to bring in weapons and ammunition.

Russell Means, a leader of the American Indian Movement, said moments before armored personnel carriers moved to roadblock positions, "We'll do the same thing we did about the last one—prepare to die."

The action came a day after the wounding of an FBI agent who was shot in the arm during a gun battle. Officials said the agent's condition was stable.

Wayne Colburn, head of the more than 300 U.S. marshals, FBI agents and Bureau of Indian Affairs officers used in the encirclement, said, "This will be a tighter and more strategic blockade than the last one."

Federal agents surrounded Wounded Knee from Feb. 28, the day after the Indian takeover, until late Saturday.

"We have observed," Colburn said, "changes in the type and number of weapons there and changes in the type of people—meaning they are importing people."

He said about 150 persons, some of them white, have joined the estimated 300 Indians who have occupied Wounded Knee.

Colburn said the blockade means "starving them out, freezing them out, everything to prevent them from normal comfort. I'm sure as hell planning on charging their lifestyle."

Asked if the government had ruled out a forced entry into the village, "That always has to be an option," he said.

Spokesmen for the Justice and Interior departments in Pine Ridge, a dozen miles southwest of Wounded Knee, said they have no contact with negotiators for the Indians since Saturday, when talks deteriorated.

A Justice Department official said the number of arrests since the takeover began climbing Monday to about 85. Most are charged with obstructing federal officers in the performance of their duties.

Charles Abelard, associate deputy attorney general, said the Indian declaration Sunday that Wounded Knee is now a "sovereign nation" might lead authorities to consider seditious conspiracy charges against leaders of the takeover.

New Major To Mix Disciplines

By DENNY MATTEAU

A new major is being offered through the Center for Interdisciplinary Studies in Social Sciences and Humanities. It will be explained on Wednesday at 3 p.m. in 419 Thompson to all interested students.

The new major offers three programs: Social Thought, Political Economy, and Psychology and Literature. These programs will be done in cooperation with BDIC (Bachelor's Degree in Individual Concentration) for next year, and then the interdisciplinary committee will move to have the major officially instituted by the University, according to Prof. Patrick Eagan, administrative head.

Prof. Robert Paul Wolff of the Philosophy Dept. said yesterday, "The proposed major is interdisciplinary in that it pulls its courses from the Economics, Sociology, Political Science, Anthropology, History, Philosophy and Psychology Departments. It offers a good undergraduate preparation for students interested in social services, law, politics or any of the associated fields. It is not intended to be a primarily profession-oriented program."

The general structure is such that incoming students must take up to 36 credits of introductory courses in three of the associated fields and six credits of a senior tutorial seminar. Thus, as Prof. Wolff said, the course of studies requires "more than the ordinary amount of study, to prepare for advanced interdisciplinary work in the senior year."

The senior seminar will be offered in the fall semester, team-taught by Prof. Mike Best of the Economics Department and Prof. John Cole of the Anthropology Department. It is entitled "Seminar in Comparative Political Economy" and is open only to those students enrolled in the program.

Students of the Class of '75 should apply now, through Prof. Eagan in Thompson Tower, as the major is not open to juniors and seniors this year.

Prof. Robert Paul Wolff of the Philosophy Dept. said that the new major would be a merger of the Economics, Sociology, Political Science, Anthropology, History, Philosophy and Psychology Depts. (MDC Photo by George Withers)

Special Students Present Case

On Thursday, March 8th, Dean Norma Jean Anderson, Assistant Dean of Graduate Affairs of the School of Education, representing Dwight Allen, Dean of the School of Ed., met with representatives of the Special Students group who presented her with the following statement.

OUR CASE IS SIMPLE

Most Special Students became Special Students with the expectation that they would have a fair chance to be admitted at the end of one year's work, during which time they would have had an opportunity to prove their capability. Their expectation was based on three factors: 1) Historically this has been an entry into the School of Education. 2) The number of graduate admissions to the School of Education in Fall 1972 was 600; thus a person being admitted with Special Student status in the Fall of 1972 had no reason to believe that the number would be appreciably less the following year. 3) There had been encouragement from some members of the faculty and administration of the School of Education to adopt this method of entry into a graduate degree program.

With this information, approximately two hundred people decided that the risk was a fair one, so they took it. Suddenly in January 1973 the University reduced the number of graduate slots allocated to the School of Education from 600 to 128. Most of these slots are already committed to specific groups or individuals. This means that most of the Special Students have virtually no opportunity for acceptance. The doors have been closed without so much as a second thought.

There are two clear reasons why the University must recognize Special Students' rights to be admitted to degree programs. When the University makes a sudden arbitrary decision which so drastically affects the professional and personal lives of a large number of people, it has a responsibility to those people who have made decisions based upon the University's original policy. In addition, the Special Students are a pool of people who have been participating in the University community for one year, are a known quantity and are a group who are capable, competent and committed.

There is only one just path open at this point. A number of additional slots should be opened specifically for the Special Students who have applied for admission into degree programs in the School of Education. This number should be 50% of the current number of Special Students who want acceptance in the Fall of 1973. The remaining 50% should be guaranteed full acceptance by Fall 1974 if they choose to wait that long. In addition, once this batch has been admitted, the University and the School of Education should define exactly what the status of the Special Student is, and make this abundantly clear to them.

Past mistakes are being rectified now--but not at the cost of people, please!

Dean Anderson indicated understanding and offered full support for the Special Students' cause and agreed to take their request to the Graduate School. At press time, the results of the negotiations between Dean Anderson and the Graduate School were still unknown.

Meanwhile, the Special Students are preparing for an open meeting today in Rm. 22 of the School of Ed., where they will hear the results of Dean Anderson's negotiations.

The Rape Hotline; 5-2122

By JOANNE RESTEGHINI

A "rape hotline" has been put into effect by the UMass Department of Public Safety in an attempt to combat the rape problem on campus.

"We have received calls, however, the hotline has not been as effective as hoped since there is some confusion concerning it," said Officer Judith Jackson.

"Anyone who has been raped or was the victim of an attempted rape should call or, better still, come to the police immediately to file a report," said Officer Jackson.

"The hotline is also for anyone who may have faced a rape situation in the past, which they did not report, but would like to volunteer the information to the police. In this case, a girl need not give her name. She can feel free to volunteer any information regarding a rape, attempted rape or assault and battery," Jackson continued.

All such information is kept in a confidential file, a way the UMass police hope to determine the actual number of rapes and attempted rapes on campus.

"The file will determine just how serious the rape problem is on this campus," says Officer Jackson. "The information could be referred to in the future in apprehending a suspect or getting a lead on another rape case."

The hotline (5-2122) is open twenty-four hours a day and has been operating for three weeks. There will be a police officer to take the call anytime, but from 12 to 1 p.m., a policewoman will be available.

Officers Judith Jackson and Diana White, who are in charge of the line, came up with the idea of the hotline as well as dorm talks they are no planning.

"We want to talk about the problem of rape and some methods of self-defense to groups of students," said Officer White. "Hopefully, these talks will create an awareness of the problem."

Hosts Needed For Ensemble

As part of the Third World Cultural Series of the University's Fine Arts Council, the American Indian Theatre Ensemble will perform March 22 at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, free of charge.

Anyone interested in being host or hostess to members of the ensemble should contact Ms. Rabbitt at 545-0202.

DVP Seeking New Members

DVP (The Distinguished Visitors Program) on campus is currently accepting applications for new members. DVP, a student run organization which attempts to keep the University community in touch with contemporary issues by bringing guest speakers to the UMass campus, has presented such speakers as Senator Hubert Humphrey and boxer Muhammad Ali.

Anyone interested in joining the program may pick up an application at the RSO (Recognized Student Organization) reception desk on the first floor of the Campus Center, and must be returned no later than March 16.

DVP is currently presenting international poetry festival.

Guests To Evaluate Career Office

The Career Planning and Placement Office has as guests today a committee of three members of the Eastern College Personnel Officers' Professional Advisory Services. They are Dr. Paul Doigan, Corporate Education Services of General Electric Company in Schenectady; Mr. Leonard E. Black, Chief of Engineering Recruiting at Pratt and Whitney Aircraft in East Hartford; and Dr. Victor E. Lindquist, Director of the Office of Career Planning and Placement at Boston University. They are here at the invitation of Robert J. Morrissey, Director of Career Planning and Placement Service to evaluate and improve this service by reviewing policies, procedures, and range of operations. In addition their assessment will include future development in order to provide more aid for our large student body.

Rally Today

The Young Workers Liberation League is calling for a short rally in support of the Sioux Indians today. The rally will begin at 12 o'clock noon at the main entrance to the Student Union.

Zionist To Speak

Boris Kogan, a Zionist activist recently permitted to emigrate to Israel from the USSR, is now visiting the United States and will speak in Thompson Hall, room 102 at 8:30 this evening. He is co-sponsored by SSJ and Hillel.

Mountainman To Speak

Hampshire College professor David Roberts will use a slide show tonight at 8 p.m. in Cance Dorm to illustrate his expeditions in the Alaskan Revelation Range and Cathedral Spires. Roberts, the director of the Hampshire Outdoor Education Center, is the fifth in the series of Tuesday and Thursday night speakers sponsored this semester by Project 10, the campus "experimental college".

Prof. Howard Brogan of the English Department was elected last night to head the Massachusetts Society of Teachers. The MSP will be voting in the next few weeks for a bargaining agent to represent them on campus. (MDC Photo by Steve Ruggles)

MSP Hearings March 27

By CINDY GONET

At a Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) meeting last night, it was announced that the hearings for a collective bargaining agent for the UMass faculty will be held on March 27 and the election will be scheduled for April 25 if there is no administrative interference.

At this time, the Society has received 35-40 per cent of the faculty's endorsement (by authorization and designation cards) for a bargaining representative said Walter Denny, Secretary of MSP.

Howard Brogan, president of the Society, announced the future possible joint action of MSP and the American Association of University Professors (AAUP). "Although AAUP will be opponenets on the ballot, I'm fairly certain we can reach a compromise in a Professional Unity Agreement with further negotiations," said Brogan.

AAUP need only submit token authorization and designation cards for a show of interest to be on the ballot.

Other orders of business included the reporting of the newly elected officers: Howard Brogan was elected President, Warren Litsky, Vice President, Surinder K. Mehta, Treasurer, and Walter Denny, Secretary. Denny told MDC that the officers "will act merely as figureheads, as spokesmen for the organization."

A motion was then passed for the formation of a subcommittee to propose a platform of policies regarding issues such as Affirmative Action. The committee will also be responsible for compiling material for circulation about the functions of collective bargaining.

USCC Eyes Tuition Bill

By LARRY CARPMAN

The University and State Communications Council (USCC) is a four year old R.S.O. funded group which "keeps an eye on legislative bills that would effect the student body."

According to USCC president, Richard Hardy, the most important issue now is dealing with tuition increases. "A massive student effort is needed, Hardy said, "to stop tuition increases. Legislators must understand that tuition and room and board are not the only expenses a student has here."

There are now several bills before the legislature to raise tuition. One of these bills calls for an increase of $1000 a semester for in-state students.

Hardy went on to explain the new State Education Re-Organization Plan to be submitted to the legislature by Governor Sargent. "The plan," said Hardy, "would give the governor more say in state education." The Re-Organization Plan calls for the elimination of the board of trustees and the office of president for state education. Instead, a "board of visitors", appointed by the governor, would be set up to control state education.

"The result of such a plan," said Hardy, "would be that non-educators would tell educators how to run the campus." Hardy explained that with the governor having more say in state education, politics would enter more than ever into the education process.

USCC is an organization with a student perspective, but as Hardy says, "Our projection is basically toward the state legislators themselves. We try to inform the legislators of the effect a certain education bill would have on students."

Hardy cited two important dates to remember: House-Senate Joint Education Committee Hearing on Re-Organization—April 13th. Hearing on all tuition increases-April 10th.

USCC is in need of more members to help the organization act as an effective communication link between students and the state legislature.

Boston Gets New Chancellor

By BILL DENSMORE

BOSTON–The UMass Trustees are scheduled to meet this afternoon in executive (closed) session in Boston to choose a new chancellor for the UMass-Boston campus.

The new chancellor will have the immediate task of moving the growing commutor university, with an eventual enrollment of 6,000, into a new campus at Columbia Point in Dorchester.

The campus, not yet completed, has met with questions about its ability to house and transport its students. Three candidates for the post were recommended to the Board of Trustees by a search committee from the Boston campus approximately three weeks ago.

All three candidates are presently involved in the administration of higher education, and all three are from out of state.

They are: Saul Tauster, 47, vice-chancellor for academic affairs for City College of New York; Carlo L. Golino, 59, a vice-chancellor for academic affairs at the University of California at Riverside; and Donald Reich, 43, a provost at Oberlin College in Illinois.

Tauster was magna cum laude as an undergraduate at Harvard and Phi Beta Kappa at that school's Law School, and has been an administrator at the state university at New York at Buffalo.

Golino was a final candidate for the UMass-Amherst chancellorship last spring, a post which was given to current chancellor Randolph W. Bromery. Golino is a native of Italy, and came to this country at age 15. He received a Ph.D. in Romance Languages and literature from University of California at Berkeley.

Reich, has a B.A. from the University of Wisconsin and a Ph.D. from Harvard, both in political science, and teaches constitutional law at Oberlin.

According to informed sources, acting chancellor W. Roy Hamilton is not a candidate for the position, and Ernest Litton, a Rutgers University dean, withdrew at a late date.

The chosen candidate at tomorrow's meeting may not accept the trustee's offer immediately, but a press aide for UMass President Robert C. Wood said a decision would come by the end of the week.

Hamilton has served as acting chancellor at the campus, currently located in downtown Boston, since President Wood asked Dr. Francis Broderick to resign as chancellor last fall.

Blockades Up At Wounded Knee

No shooting incidents were reported Monday, the 13th day of the confrontation between the government and the militant Indians at the historic village.

Dennis Banks, a leader of the American Indian Movement (AIM), said the occupation would go far towards ending "misunderstanding and mistreatment of all Indians. We had no alternative in showing our frustrations in dealing with the government."

A federal grand jury convened Monday in Sioux Falls to investigate the takeover of the trading post by the Indians Feb. 27.

Ralph Erickson, special assistant to the U.S. attorney general, said in Washington, "Law enforcement authorities are again restricting vehicular traffic to and from Wounded Knee by maintaining roadblocks leading to the area.

"This action was taken because the Indians holding Wounded Knee used the time when they had free access to fortify their positions with more weapons and ammunition. Deputy U.S. marshals will continue to restrict access to Wounded Knee as long as necessary to restore order."

At Pine Ridge, the Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) said one reason the blockades were reinstated was because an AIM leader "has publicly avowed to shoot on sight any federal officials attempting to enter the Wounded Knee."

The BIA statement also said AIM armed guards had increased their strength at all entrances to the besieged area and in several bunkers in fields around Wounded Knee. The bureau said a meeting planned Monday between AIM leaders and federal officials was called off "because of their AIM leaders' publicly avowed statement to shoot any federal officials entering the sieged area of Wounded Knee."

Nixon Staff To Refuse Capitol Hearings

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Expanding on White House executive privilege guidelines, President Nixon said Monday that past and present members of his personal staff will turn down requests to appear formally before congressional committees.

But Nixon pledged he would "provide all necessary and relevant information through informal contacts" between his aides and congressional committees "in ways which preserve intact the constitutional separation of the branches of government."

His two-page written statement on how he will employ the traditional doctrine of executive privilege came as Democrats on the Senate judiciary Committee sought ways to subpoena White House counsel John Dean to tesify about the Watergate investigation.

White House Counsel At Watergate Interviews

According to testimony at the committee's confirmation hearings on Patrick Gray's nomination to be FBI director, Dean sat in on FBI interviews of White House aides questioned about various aspects of the bugging of Democratic National Headquarters.

Nixon said at his last news conference that he will not allow Dean to testify before the Senate panel, but his promise to provide information through informal contacts appeared to indicate he might attempt to avoid a showdown with Congress on the issue.

White House Press Secretary Ronald L. Ziegler said that the presidential statement on executive privilege was "not a new policy but...a restatement of policy that has guided this administration...and previous administrations."

Nixon Adds Guidelines

But Nixon's statement added three guidelines to the five-point set of guidelines he established in a memo to agency heads in March 1969. One of the new guidelines reads: "A member or former member of the President's personal staff normally shalll follow the well-established precident and decline a request for a formal appearance before a committee of the Congress."

Ziegler said the coverage of former aides by the executive privilege doctrine was past policy, but he was unable to cite specific precidents.

Security Tight In Bermuda

HAMILTON, Bermuda (AP)-The government tightened emergency conditions Monday and Scotland Yard began a probe into the killing of Bermuda's British governor and his aide.

An announcement in Parliament by Sir Edward Richards, the government leader, said police had been empowered, to hold anyone without charge for 96 hours as they carried out their hunt for the killer or killers of Sir Richard Sharples and Capt. Hugh Sayers, his aide-de-camp, late Saturday night.

The state of emergency was ordered Sunday by the acting governor, Ian Kinnear. At that time police were given the power to detain anyone for 48 hours, in place of the normal 24.

Tourists Not Effected

Although extra security forces were called to duty, the state of emergency had little or no effect on the thousands of tourists, many of them Americans. Tourist activities were not curtailed, although all local sporting events were canceled Sunday.

A special guard force was ordered to watch over Lady Pamela Sharples at Government House, the governor's residence, where her husband, 57, and Sayers, 25, were shot to death after stepping outdoors after a private dinner party to walk the family great Dane, Horsa. The dog, too was slain. An unarmed police guard was on duty inside the residence at the time.

Persons Detained

A government spokesman said that a number of persons had been detained for questioning he declined to say how many or to identify them-but noted that no arrests have been made.

Scotland Yard assigned a 10-man squad to the investigation of the killings which came six months after the slaying of the island's police commissioner, George Duckett, and the wounding of his 17-year-old daughter-also late on a Saturday night.

Two of the Scotland Yard men assigned to the new murders-Detective Chief Supt. Bill Wright and Inspector Basil Hadrell-had left Bermuda only two weeks ago after investigating the police commissioner's murder. They made no arrests in that case.

Walpole Prison Facing Upheavel

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP)—Every day is a crisis at Walpole state prison.

The institution—the highest security prison in the state—is in turmoil over reform, caught in a spiraling pattern of upheaval that began after the riot at Attica state prison in New York two years ago.

This past week, the superintendent resigned, guards went on strike, there were three stabbings, prisoners refused to work, guards said prisoners ran the institution and the Boston Herald American demanded the resignation of the correction commissioner.

Plagued by Violence

In the year since Commissioner John O. Boone has ruled the prison system, Walpole has had three superintendents and begun searching for a fourth, had more than 30 stabbings and several murders. During a one-month stretch, officials kept inmates locked in their cells day and night while guards searched for contraband.

The guards have gone to court seeking Boone's expulsion and lost; inmates have charged they were gassed and beaten in their cells; a superintendent alleged that inmates ran a prostitution ring and a laundry betting game; and the Justice Department said a handful of Mafia-types were ordering executions inside the prison walls.

Prisoners said Walpole—with 558 inmates and 230 guards—was run like a concentration camp. Guards said it was more like a country club.

Boone Was Hailed As Reformer

Boone's appointment was lauded by some as the beginning of reform at 17-year-old Walpole prison and in the rest of the state penal system. He has tried to emphasize that inmates have rights, such as the privilege of receiving mail, having visitors and talking to reporters.

Guards resisted the changes and said old rules were struck down without new ones being put in their place.

The guards' union, which staged a brief walkout last week, went to Gov. Francis W. Sargent on Thursday and said unrest would continue until Boone was removed.

The latest prison superintendent, Raymond Porelle, increased controls. He ordered inmates locked up for a month while guards searched for weapons. Some prisoners said that the search, which turned up more than 200 weapons, could have been done in a few days.

Inmates Resisted New Superintendent

Inmates countered by refusing to work in the kitchen or clean up their cells. They refused to do anything until Porelle either quit or was fired. He quit and has declined to comment on his resignation. Published reports quoted him as telling guards that he could not remain in the job because Boone superseded his orders.

A spokesman for Boone, Michael Widmer, said the "old way to treat prisoners was just to lock them up and throw away the key. It's easy then to maintain security.

Peron's Pick Probable Winner

ARGENTINE CAMPAIGNING--Hector Campora, candidate for Argentine president for the Justicialists (Peronist) Liberation Front, delivers speech during the closing rally of the party's campaign Thursday night. Argentina will elect a new president this Sunday. (AP)

BUENOS AIRES (AP) — Unless the military intervenes, Argentina seems certain to install a Peronist government in May, with the former strong man, Juan D. Peron, wielding considerable clout as elder statesman.

Peron's handpicked presidential candidate, Dr. Hector J. Campora, a 63-year-old dentist turned politician, received almost 50 per cent of the votes in Sunday's general election, the first in Argentina since 1965.

Victory in Reach

Campora fell just short of the majority needed to avoid a runoff election between the two top contenders. But he was close enough to put victory within reach in the runoff, to be held April 1 or 8.

In the runoff, Campora will face Ricardo Balbin, 68-year-old lawyer and nominee of the Radical Civic Union, which is strong in the middle class.

The Interior Ministry announced Monday morning that Campora was close to victory, with 1,031 of the 55,560 polling places uncounted.

Figures Adjusted

Later, the ministry adjusted the figures and said that with 50,293 polling places reported, Campora had 5,559,645 votes and 48.7 per cent of the total, while Balbin had 2,429,676 votes and 21.3 per cent of the total. Seven minor party presidential candidates shared the rest.

The ministry said 11,503,013 votes had been counted, or 80 per cent of the 14,331,427 people eligible to vote.

Gen. Alejandro Lanusse, president of the ruling military junta, promised on election eve to respect the results and to deliver the presidential sash on inauguration day, May 25, to the new civilian president. Authoritarian military governments have been in power since 1966.

Peronism Linked with Leftists

Still, Lanusse and other top officers have charged that Peronism is linked with some of the leftist guerrilla organizations operating in Argentina.

Lanusse said last week the armed forces will not permit violence or "a new despotism"–a clear reference to Peron's authoritarian government between 1946 and 1955.

GM Asks Exhaust Standards Delay

By JAMES PHILLIPS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—General Motors said Monday it would be unable to meet the proposed antipollution requirements for 1975 model autos and urged a one year delay in enforcement of the exhaust standards.

"General Motors cannot comply with the requirements before 1975 as they now exist," said Ernest Starkman, GM's vice president for environmental affairs.

But further reduction of harmful exhaust gases could be achieved if the Environmental Protection Agency would modify its testing procedures, Starkman said.

Starkman made his comments in the opening session of court ordered EPA hearings on the proposed 1975 standards.

Ford, Chrysler and other foreign and domestic automakers also are expected to ask for a delay later in the hearings.

EPA Administrator William D. Ruckelhaus last year denied the automakers' request for a delay, prompting court action that forced the new round of hearings.

Cutbacks

Starkman noted the 1974 standards have resulted in exhaust cutbacks of 80 per cent for hydrocarbons and 69 per cent for carbon monoxide, compared to uncontrolled vehicles.

He said that changing test procedures would enable GM to reduce still further the emission levels of its 1975 model year autos.

He urged EPA to permit averaging test results and adopting different policies for end-of-the-line testing and recall regulations.

He also urged that the company be permitted to install catalytic converters—a pollution reducing device—only on its cars sold in California during the 1975 model year. He said this would enable GM to test the reliability of devices and its production line techniques.

Ruckelhaus, who has until April 11 to announce his decision, said at the opening of the hearing that auto emissions are the primary sources for some types of urban air pollution.

"It is now reasonably clear that more than 25 major American cities will require the imposition of controls on the use of motor vehicles if national ambient air standards for carbon monoxide and photo chemical oxidants are to be achieved according to the timetable laid down in the Clean Air Act," he said.

Amateurs?

There is presently a plan being discussed, between the Rents and Fees Committee and University Food Services, which would provide for a nine-member student board of directors to control Food Services.

Joel Stoneham, director of Food Services, claims there is no need for this board: "We are experts, and students are not. With responsibility goes liability; students should not have liability of a $6-1/2 million dollar business."

We feel, however, that students have not only the capability, but also the desire and the right to determine Food Services policy and review the operation budget. True, there is still a need for a professional staff, but there is also ample justification for placing Food Services into student hands.

Butterfield Dormitory is on a small scale, an excellent example of what can happen when students run their own food operations. For three years, Butterfield has had one professional chef who cooks supper; everything else is student-run. Butterfield residents receive fourteen meals a week for the price of the dining commons' ten-meal ticket. And when a small crisis arose a few days ago, the students immediately responded and corrected the situation effectively and efficiently.

Butterfield is only one bit of evidence to show that "amateurs" can indeed operate a food service.

Guns In UMass City

It would be hard to disavow that UMass is a city. We have an abundance of movies, concerts, dances, cultural exchanges and clubs that deal with such specific and limited issues that they strike some of us as silly and irrelevant. But the fact is that out of this gigantic human stewpot there are enough people to keep these organizations functioning.

We have blacks, and whites, and fags, and Orientals, and whores, and prudes, and Mexicans, and wallet-licking rich kids, and ghetto children. We're all different, but we're all here. And we are a city.

Out of this stewpot there are, of course, a few rotten ingredients who rob and rape and generally disrupt the smooth functioning of the city.

And we have a police force who by choice have become gourmets for this human stewpot and are responsible for contending with the rotten vegetables.

There has been a lot of talk recently about whether or not to disarm the UMass police. To disarm them completely at the request of a few is ludicrous, simply because a city environment provides too many situations where a gun could be necessary.

No policeman should have the right to decide who is to live and who is to die, but this is unfortunately idealism that cannot be lived always. Sometimes the decision has to be made. The prevention of trigger-happy cops has to be accomplished long before they begin wearing uniforms and badges by very particular screening, even psychological testing. This would insure with near certainty police service at its best possible quality.

The gun a policeman carries probably gets used for shooting almost never, but it does by nature of its presence act as a deterrent to people who are committing a crime or being disruptive. It separates the people from the police, which is a necessary thing while they are on duty. They are on the job by choice, and those who feel that they are pllicemen so they can be official badasses are either hungover from a bad childhood experience, guilty of something that is undiscovered, or without faith in their fellow man and his assumption of a responsibility. Furthermore, in London, where it is a matter of pride that the policemen and women do not carry guns, a noticeable rise in attacks on police has been seen in the last ten years.

The nature of society today makes disarmament sound reasonable. There are no longer the large amounts of demonstrations and similar gatherings that ultimately produced the horror of young people being gunned down. Gunned down, that is, by National Guardsman, part-timers, and obviously amateurs, who were misled by other non-professionals probably angry somewhat because they were asked to do something else than give one night a week and one weekend a month. (Which incidentally is reminiscent of a sewing circle with vulgarity allowed.)

The point here is that professional policeman, well screened and supervised by other professionals, should be allowed to carry guns, and should be taught as well as possible when their use is warranted.

As far as the UMass campus police are concerned, there are alternatives other than complete disarmament, or trunk guns or prior permission to gun use that would work. There is mace, and its chemical sisters that could be used instead of a gun. Presently, the UMass police force does not carry mace while on duty. There are also rubber bullets for guns, which are effective in stopping a criminal without killing him. Either of these alternatives would allow a policeman to keep the psychological advantage he needs and would also keep him from having to make the decision of killing a man or not.

Lastly, disarmament of the entire world is the goal we are looking for in our dreams, but until we have made more progress in the development of a non-violent culture where crime born of drugs, hunger, and utter despair is eliminated, the removal of guns from policemen will not be a first step in the realization of this dream. It will help only those who must live violently because they know no other way to continue to live too often at the expense of those who are making a contribution to a better world.

Philosophy Of Evil

The question of whether the evil in man or, to put it in less normative terms, his natural propensity toward acquisitiveness and self-gratification, is innate or socially induced is one of the great theoretical dividing lines in the history of political thought. The view that man's evil is innate and irradicable, which is currently identified with conservatism, has been held in differing ways by Plato, Saint Augustine, Hobbes, Adam Smith, and Freud. The liberal view, that man's evil is not innate but the result of societal influences has generally been a less popular one, its most illustrious spokesman being Karl Marx.

There are difficulties involved with both positions. On one hand the conservative position can lead to some rather chilling conclusions. Plato, for instance, despite his vision and genius, believed that the state should be ruled by a repressive aristocracy and Hobbes believed that the only way human society could function was for it to be ruled by an all-powerful sovereign. The liberal position, however, is at best naive and at worst simply false. If the foundation of worldly evil lies in society and not man the natural question arises as to who constructed society. The only plausible answer to this question is man himself and if this be the case the liberal is hard put to explain how a collection of inherently good human beings managed to construct a society laced with evil.

Thus the position that societal evil has its base in the nature of man seems to be the more realistic one and this is precisely the stand which President Nixon took last week when he rejected the "permissive philosophy" which holds that society is responsible for crime and promised the nation a tough crackdown on the criminal elements in America. While Nixon's position on the origin of evil is the correct one the general tenor of his address was appalling for to say that man's evil has its origin in his own nature is not to deny that certain of his evil tendencies cannot be exacerbated by environmental influences. Indeed to say that one's environment has not effect upon the composition of one's personality flies in the face of basic common sense. In short, Nixon embraced the conservative position and ignored the fact that there is a middle ground which can serve to mediate between the liberal and conservative extremes. Thus someone who grows up in a slum environment will tend to give a freer reign to anti-social tendencies than will someone who grows up in an environment in which he is taught to measure his behavior against moral imperatives. This middle position makes it clear that the individual must accept the final responsibility for his actions but avoids being an apology for the inhumane conditions which exist in many American cities as was Nixon's recent statement on crime. At the same time of course, it rejects one of the central tenants of Marxism and anarchism.

One of the challenges which a holder of the view that man's evil is innate must meet comes from those who charge that such a position leads to doctrine of political repression. First, claim these challengers, the doctrine of innate evil leads to the conclusion that man does not deserve freedom and secondly to the conclusion that he cannot bear its burden. To these charges it can first be said that while man may possess an innate evil he also possesses a fundamental dignity grounded not in his goodness, as some liberals would have it, but rather in his transcendental freedom. This position is suggested by the third antinomy in the transcendental dialectic of Kant's Critique of Pure Reason and also by the philosophy of Karl Jaspers and, to an extent, Jean Paul Sartre.

In regard to the second charge it merely need be pointed out that the doctrine of innate evil does not preclude goodness in man nor does it necessarily entail, as Hobbes thought it did, a conservative political philosophy. A brief glance at history is enough to assure anyone that repressive governments have been no more successful at preventing social chaos than have liberal ones.

Thus the doctrine of innate evil does not entail political conservatism and the concept of man's transcendental dignity not only suggests that man should have the right to possess political freedom but demands that he have that right.

Letters To The Editor

ROTC: War And Peace

To The Editor:

I take strong exception to the letter by Mr. George Johnson reprinted in the March 8 issue of the MDC ("No Credit for ROTC").

Mr. Johnson states that "The Vietnam War was supplied with officers by the ROTC program. This is its war making capacity. Stop that capacity and we make a step in the right direction." He could not be more incorrect.

I don't know what actual experience Mr. Johnson has had with the military other than the hurling of verbal spitballs from afar. Be that as it may, I have had a four year military tour during which I came to the conclusion that it is just such an organization as ROTC that helps keep the military from becoming even less responsive to public mandate and opinion.

Upon my graduation from UMass in 1968 I entered the Navy and subsequently served a tour as a patrol plane navigator in the Pacific. One of the first things I noticed upon entering the Navy is the difference in attitude between service academy graduates and graduates of civilian colleges. While the Naval Academy produces a very superior graduate in the areas of military and technological competence, it is the civilian schools which more often than not contribute the most liberal and open-minded officers.

Please do not underrate this fact. Besides ROTC and the service academies, the only other source of officers the military has is through the comparatively minor inputs of the different officer candidate and officer training schools. To reduce or eliminate the output of the various ROTC programs will mainly result in an increase in the output of the service academies to meet the current need, with the possible concurrent reduction in quality of the finished product if the facilities cannot fully handle the flow.

Yes, the Vietnam War was supplied with officers by the ROTC programs. But this is not just a war-making capacity. It is also an attitude-modification capability as anthropology, art, and journalism majors (I had all three on my crew) work with academy graduates. To hinder this capability would be a step in the wrong direction. It would be a move toward establishing an officer class in this country similar to those of pre-WWI European nations. The only acceptable officer corps in a democracy is one in which a major component comes from other than just service-oriented backgrounds and whether you like it or nit, Mr. Johnson, the military in this country is very unlikely to go away in the near future). To deny credit to ROTC means that a college student must allocate considerable time in a crowded schedule to a course of study which cannot pay its way in working toward graduation. Thus, ROTC output declines and the in-service educational institutions take-up the slack.

Denying academic credit to ROTC is a step in the direction of ending the citizens' war-making power. And peace- making power, Mr. Johnson.

Misquotes

To The Editor:

I left the university in 1967 by invitation of our government to learn how immoral and sick minds work. My stay in the Navy was over last September and I have been here since. My four years of government inflicted education might have tainted my outlook on life, but I maintain that there have been external changes as well. The Daily Collegian was a small, poorly written rag with some good notions of progressive news. Now the Collegian is a big, well written newspaper with dedication to truthful and accurate copy.

I can only hope that your policy of printing letters to the editor will expose to the public the true nature of those who write. How many times can the Chairman of the Student Academic Affairs Committee be misquoted? Just ask a veteran about people who continually complain about misquotes.

Seeing The Light

To The Editor:

This Wednesday past, there was a letter, aptly titled Divine Light Club. This club, it seems, worships and idolizes a 15 year old Guru who purportedly gives 'peace' to all people who sincerely want it" (MDC 3/7).

Far out.

Now, this here letter is to inform any interested that there is a group of righteous people, not a club, clique, or organization, you understand, but dedicated and humble humanitarians, so to speak, who gather daily at the Bluewall. These, uh, humanitarians, willfully, unselfishly, and properly give not only peace, but head as well to any and all who want it.

Yes, indeed.

Student Drinkers

To The Editor:

Since the drinking age was lowered on March 1st, thousands of UMass students are now eligible to drink legally. In view of the new, tremendous increase in business at the Bluewall and Top of the Campus, it would seem to me that the management could make a few changes that would benefit the students who pay a Campus Center fee to support the location for these establishments.

Here are some suggestions:

1) Lower the price of all drinks from their outrageously high prices; (perhaps the same 20% as the food discount at the Top of the Campus).

2.) Institute "Happy Hour" prices at specific times or on specific evenings; (practically every bar in the area does this).

3.) Drop the cover charge on weeknights at the Bluewall, (afterall, how do the smaller bars in the area have bands without cover charges?). Furthermore, who is willing to drop into the Bluewall for a "quick beer" after evening classes if they have to pay 50¢ just to enter?

Would these proposals seriously hurt the profit of the Bluewall and Top of the Campus or would it be made up for by the new increase in the number of legal drinkers? I suggest that the increase in business would make up for any loss of profit from lower prices or lack of cover charge.

The time has come to give the students some tangible return from their Campus Center Fee.

Bowling Ripoff

To The Editor:

The devaluation of the dollar has obviously hit UMass. Intramural Bowling for one dollar per person sounds like a good deal, doesn't it? We felt this way also, so we naively went through a good deal of trouble to organize a bowling team for what we thought would be at least a couple of weeks of competition. Unbeknownst to us, this intramural competition lasts a grand total of two hours per team, which takes place all in one night! We felt the term "intramural" implied competition, in other words, playing against other teams. As it turns out competition means merely that the highest scores win. If this information had been made known it is unlikely that twenty-one teams would have signed up. This does, however, make the intramural office $126.00 richer!! This is in the true sense of the word, a RIP OFF.

Academics

Teacher Power

By DOUG PHELPS

Last week's announcement of faculty plans to proceed with organizing a union suggests, at first glance, the possibility of a progressive social force emerging within the university. And, indeed, faculty unions in higher education could generate real power, capable of turning the American university away from its present role as servant of the status quo and the corporate/military powers-that-be, and towards a proper, independent role as agency of desperately needed social change. They could transform the American academy from an embodiment of the prevailing technological ideology into a source of critical thought, social dissent, and cultural renewal.

But such a development would require that faculty unions formulate comprehensive demands for fundamental change, and that they be willing to adopt a militant posture with respect to the acceptance of these demands.

And who can really imagine the faculty pursuing such a course? Can anyone expect these predominantly tweedy, retiring fellows to go beyond a modest set of limited and essentially materialist goals—goals circumscribed by the dominant cultural ideology and institutions which need to be challenged?

Unfortunately, reflection leads inevitably to the conclusion that the appearance of faculty unions is, in most cases, a further step in the triumph of reaction in academia, not the portent of revolution. If faculty are unionized employees, and the administration is management, then who can escape the thought that the university has, indeed, become a factory through which students are processed and packaged? When we arrive we are raw material, and when we leave we are products.

The emerging faculty union drive at UMass shows clear signs of being prematurely gray, like so many of its members. That is, it takes its agenda from the moribund and reactionary stage of American trade unionism in its mature, legitimaized, coopted form, not from the more hopeful, progressive, militant image that one associates with trade unionism's formative years. Almost certainly, faculty unionization will only further rationalize present patterns of power and present values, leaving the university's conservative social role and its policies and curricula which reflect this role untouched and unquestioned.

Such is the case for pessimism. But pessimism leaves no space to dream . . . and without our dreams we will all turn prematurely gray. So if you can, suspend disbelief for a moment and think on what could happen next fall, if only the dear faculty had it in them . . . imagine the scene . . . M.S.P. and A.A.U.P. have merged and renamed themselves the UMass Revolutionary Workers Union . . . they have elected Brother Brogan president, and presented a list of demands to the Trustees which they culled from an old, borrowed copy of Andre Gorz' Strategy for Labor . . . key union agitators—Brothers Biddle, Denny, Burroughs, Ray, etc.—have read up on the lives of Joe Hill and Samuel Gompers, and now the time has come . . .

. . . the entire faculty goes out on strike and masses four-abreast around the library (knowing that the library is the true heart of any university . . . right?) . . . to the north, federal troops left over from the Johnson administration's Vietnam policy have been called in by President Wood to police the situation and are gathering by the Campus Center . . . but to the south, strike-breaking scab teachers, called in by some unidentified conservative elements on the Board of Trustees, are preparing to try to bust picket lines and enter the library . . . meanwhile, inside Whitmore, notable university liberals Bob Woodbury, Pete Edelman, Seymour Shapiro, Larry Ladd, Bill Bromery, Zina Tillona & Dwight Allen ("representing all constituencies and in accord with affirmative action requirments"), have formed a trouble-shooting mediation team, but can't find their way out of the building . . .

. . . students have factionelized . . . the Student Senate is debating passage of a report by the Academic Affairs Committee entitled "Faculty Unionization: Should We Get Involved?" . . . the Collegian editors lead a "Freedom of Expression" faction which has no particular opinion regarding anything so long as the students' right to print almost-obscene pictures on the front of Poor Richard's is preserved

. . . student radicals have coalesced around Eric Walgren's call to carry the struggle into the community and are holding a nude dance-in at town hall . . . WMPIRG is preparing to file suit challenging the presence of troops on university lawns as a violation of Environmental Protection standards . . . and residents of Southwest and Orchard Hill have liberated their areas and formed a free university with no faculty at all, bringing in a freshman at Hampshire with the unlikely name of Joseph Umie as Chancellor . . .

. . . think of it . . . the surge of bureaucrats and buffoons who pretend to run the university . . . futilely trying to recover a modicum of smug legitimacy . . . and amidst the utter chaos of it all, Daddy's fantasy of EDUCATION is demystified . . . the thin veil of PURPOSE and AUTHORITY around here is torn. . . and the mass of students peer into the void and see the nothingness of it all . . .

Nelsun To Read For "Vision"

David Jurdan Nelsun, distinguished poet and film maker will present a dramatic reading of his works to highlight a weekend of plays, music, and other artistic works, sponsored by the Center for Creative Development in Student Activities.

TDa Yah Dayvid Jurdan Nelsun II, one of the most distinguished poets of the WEUSI World, will be presented in a dramatic reading from his works.

The program is entitled "Vision" and is sponsored by the Center for Creative Development in Student Activities (CCDISA).

Nelsun, who is presently on the Student Activities staff at the University of Massachusetts, has traveled extensively in the States, lecturing and giving performances of his work. He has also had his work shown in America and Africa and Europe via the hit film "Right On." The film, winner of the International Film Critics Award for Best Film in 1970, was also a director's selection to the Cannes Film Festival and has also been featured in various festivals here and abroad. In addition to the film which he co-produced, co-authored, co-directed, and co-starred in, Mr. Nelsun's works have been recorded on a number of albums, numerous anthologies, and performed by various theatre groups and dance troupes throughout the country. Clayton Riley says this of Nina Simons' interpretation of one of his works: "Her pain is practically visible in 'Today is a Killer.'"

This performance will mark Nelsun's first dramatic solo recital although his performances off Broadway with the Last Poets have received very critical acclaim.

Nelsun's appearance will highlight a weekend of events the 16th, 17th, 18th, including plays, music, dance, poetry, painting, sculpture, workshops, food and warm vibrations. The weekend is called WEUSI Resurrection and deals with unifying forces of human kind for positive development and the enrichment of life.

For information on times and locations of events contact Center for Creative Development in Student Activities, 114 Campus Center. Phone: 545-2351.

Life Planning Offered In SW

Life planning is a model and a process by which individuals may work with the questions: Where am I going? Where do I want to be in 5 years? in a supportive setting with others who share their needs. The goal is to help each individual build toward his/her future by 1) reclarifying values and goals 2) reexamining the effect of these values and goals or all aspects of one's future life and 3) learning to appreciate skills which persons may have but do not recognize as such.

There will be 4 sessions on Wednesday afternoons from 4-6, on March 21, April 4, 11, 18. The meeting place will be the Resource Center in Hampden Activities Center. If you want further information on the workshop, please feel free to drop by the Resource Center this Wednesday from 4-6 and ask for Penny Thompson. The workshop will be limited to 10 participants maximum, so call and sign up as soon as possible. Phones 5-2416, 5-2892.

BOSTON (AP)—The Department of Correction granted a total of 2,559 furloughs to convicts in state correctional institutions from Nov. 4 1972, to March 9, Commissioner John O. Boone said Monday.

He said that 24 failed to return on schedule, and were reported to police as escapers. Of the 24, he said, 12 have been apprehended and returned to custody.

Boone said he is proud of a record showing less than one per cent of the convicts failed to return.

Committee To Evaluate Mental Health Services

A sub-committee has been formed by the Student Advisory Board of the University Health Services to assess the role of the Department of Mental Health of the University Health Services.

The sub-committee wishes to open communications between the department and students, and sort out varying interpretations of the department around campus.

Students are particularly asked by the sub-committee to help in the evaluation of the department with frank criticisms and suggestions.

The evaluation will investigate students' comments, both pro and con, about the service, and hopes that information about the service can be more widely distributed to students.

Anyone interested in discussing their experiences about Mental Health, may contact Mari Earnest at 6-1275, or Cathy Cavalieri at 6-9016. Confidentiality will be assured.

WMUA 'Openings'

Tonight at 7:30 WMUA's OPENINGS Series features an interview with nurse-midwife Nancy Haley of the Boston Hospital for Women. Ms. Haley believes that as a specialist the nurse-midwife can offer the pregnant woman more personalized and better care than the obstetrician; and, because she too is a woman, she can better understand a woman's needs and anxieties. Among other things, Mrs. Haley will be talking with WMUA's Joe C. about her own personal experiences in Boston and in the southwest. About her conception of the role of the nurse-midwife, and about available educational and job opportunities.

Students Hit By 'Gut Rot'

By TONY GRANITE

FOOD, AGAIN is a subject of the weekly magazine supplement to the Diamondback, student newspaper of the University of Maryland.

The headline on the center spread reads, "Don't order the burgers in the Tortuga Room–they might come out wearing berets."

And readers of Argus/Dimensions were lead into the piece by this masthead-teaser: "Regardless of the fact that, spelled backwards, the Tortuga in Tortuga Room comes out 'A Gut Rot', the Student Union's newest eatery offers classy French cuisine at reasonable prices. Unfortunately, as Chad Neighber points out on pages 4 and 5, the TR will not be long with us, unless massive numbers of gourmets and/or good food-starved students begin patronizing it."

OBITUARY for another yearbook has been written for the 1973 Falcon of Miami-Dade JC-North. When the yearbook appears, next month, it will be the last of a series begun in 1962.

Finances is the reason given. Another victim of cutbacks is the faculty adviser, who has been dismissed.

SHORTAGE IS ALSO THE ROOT of the troubles of The Daily Reveille of Louisiana State U. But not of money. This time, its shortage of newsprint, according to an editorial in which the editors explained "skinny papers" to their readers.

"The crisis came about through poor purchasing policies, which will be corrected soon," they wrote. They promise to buy the paper a year at a time.

By SYDNEY OMARR

A spokesman for National Life Insurance Co. denies that astrology is being utilized throughout its organization, as previously reported instead, says the spokesman, it is being used by Ed Rogers, described as an independent general agent in a southern Florida sales office. Rogers has engaged the services of astrologer Clifford Mc Millen, who is a lecturer at the Miami Museum of Science. Rogers is quoted as stating, "McMillen is surprising us with his results. His analysis of character is amazingly accurate."

ARIES (March 21 April 19): New ways of achieving longstanding goals—these are emphasized. One who is older plays paramount role. Accent is on home, property, the finalizing of agreements. Stick to factual information. Get to heart of matters. Adhere to your own style.

TAURUS (April 20 May 20): Collect needed data. Don't be put off by one who doubts, chides and expresses skepticism. Instead, give full play to intellectual curiosity. If you ask questions, answers will be obtained.

GEMINI (May 21 June 20): Spotlight is on what you earn and spend. Budget requires creative review. Obtain valid hint from Taurus message. Go after facts. Someone appears quite willing to take a chance: with your money.

CANCER (June 21 July 22): Cycle is such that you can be more independent. Unravel various factors. Piece together bits of information until you come up with complete picture. Accent is on personality, appearance, ability to win allies.

LEO (July 23 Aug. 22): Look behind the scenes for subtle nuances which provide hints to basic course required. Key now is to be analytical. Do some personal investigating. Gemini and Virgo individuals play important roles.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 Sept. 22): Accent is on how to fulfill desires. Family member could aid. Throw aside false pride. Make conciliatory gesture. If you do, results will be constructive. Otherwise, you find that pride can be a poor companion.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 Oct. 22): One in position of authority evaluates your performance. You must now show that you know difference between desire and requirement. Means outline schedule. Come up with working model plan. You have opportunity to make room for yourself at top.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23 Nov. 21): Good lunar aspect now coincides with the higher education, long journey, correspondence, ability to communicate with those who hold different views. You get chance to mature. Capricorn person plays significant role.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 Dec. 21): Concern with future potential is emphasized. You are able now to see beyond the immediate. Aries person aids you in adopting a more independent stance. You find better ways of distributing product.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22 Jan. 19): You get contract offer. Cycle is such that new agreement, fresh deal is apt to be on agenda. Some you thought were against you prove actually to be fascinated with you. You will be in demand. Member of opposite sex puffs up your ego.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20 Feb. 18): Pace may seem interminably slow: you get impatient with yourself. However, you will receive intuitive flash which makes life exciting, meaningful. One who depends on you will express willingness to return favor. Accept!!

PISCES (Feb. 19 March 20): Influence spreads. Don't say 'too much'—you will be taken up on claims, promises. One you thought you could view only at a distance becomes strikingly available. There is no need for stage fright. Be yourself!

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are an enigma. Some consider you ultrasensitive. Others claim you are practical. Still others insist that you create situations to your own liking—that you develop crisis situations so that you can overcome them. August should be your most significant month this year.

Pair Skate For Gold

By MIKE BROPHY

An accomplished figure skater in her own right, Lynette Backhaus is probably better known throughout Massachusetts as part of a pair combination that includes Jeff Caird. The duo have been skating as a pair for nearly fifteen months and practice for about ten hours a week at one of the three clubs. Jeff and Lynette are actively involved in the Amherst Figure Skating Club as well as their hometown club, the Woodland Skating Club of Pittsfield, Mass.

The third club that sees their service is that of Little Sun Valley in Springfield. Caird, a recent graduate of UMass, now is employed by Mutual of New York and finds skating time a good break from both the insurance business as well as his part-time job at McDonald's in Hadley. Lynette, on the other hand, is a full-time student at the University and finds little time to do anything but skate and study, not necessarily in that order. Now a sophomore, she hopes to see a program develop at the University for those who desire to figure skate. The only resemblance to such a program is the PE course offered through the General PE Office in Boyden.

Much of the skating time the pair puts in together is spent on reviewing and changing routines they use while performing on the ice. Figure skaters, like any other performers such as floor competition gymnasts, have set routines they follow and these are set to music of the pairs' choice.

As a pair, these two skaters possess an extensive repetoire of routines that include moves all the way up the scale from sit spins to death spirals.

Lynette Backhaus and her partner, Jeff Caird, are shown here performing one of their moves in a show performed earlier this year at Orr Rink. The pair will be performing again this weekend in a UNICEF Benefit Show on Friday night as well as Saturday afternoon and evening at Orr Rink. (MDC Photo by Tuna Stewart)

When watching them skate the question of "how long has it taken them to learn to skate?" must enter the mind. The answer to that question is part of the marvelous story of this pair. Jeff has been skating for nearly ten years and it was he and his mother that encouraged neighbor Lynette to dawn blades four years ago. Now she is working on Gold Medal competition. That is indeed a long way to come in four short years, especially when one considers that skaters such as Peggy Fleming and Janet Lynn have been skating since they were about five years old.

Lynette has won events such as the Philadelphia Area Bronze Dance Competition which included competitors from all over the Northeast. She has also placed in the Middle Atlantic competition of 1971 as well as the New England Regional Figure Skating Championships.

Jeff has captured medals since 1967 with the first being a Gold at the Eastern Sectionals in the Bronze Dance Event. In the same year, he also won the Silver Dance Event at the Niagara Invitationals. At the North Atlantic Regionals, he won the Silver Dance Event in 1970 before going on to take the Gold Dance Event in the New Englands in 1971.

As a pair, the two have not yet won any medals but are presently working on their Gold Free Dance Test which will net them a Gold Medal upon passing it. They are also working on Bronze and Silver pair tests.

Within two weeks the switch will be thrown that will turn Orr Rink into a sandy swamp as opposed to the hard bed of ice that is there now. However, that will not put an end to the skating of this pair. They will continue to skate in both Springfield and Pittsfield until the middle of May.

These two skaters will be performing in three shows over St. Patrick's Day weekend at Orr Rink. The Shows will benefit UNICEF and the contribution is $2.50 for students at the Friday night show and the two Saturday shows. So, if you are NIT bound, you might wish to take in a brilliant display of figure skating.

Ernie D's Secret- "I'm Super Confident"

By HOWARD ULMAN
Associated Press Writer

PROVIDENCE (AP)-Ernie DiGregorio has always been impatient to get to a basket.

It started when he was a kid. In winter, he would take a shovel with his basketball to clear the snow from the court and shoot by himself, all day.

"I put a lot of work into it that normal people don't do," says the confident juggernaut who has helped run the fifth-ranked Providence Friars into the NCAA tournament starting Saturday.

There was the summer day after his sophomore year at North Providence High School when "everybody picked up to go to the beach. It was something like 95 degrees. That day sticks out in my mind." He spent it bouncing and shooting a basketball, all day. He said people called him crazy.

Now they call him "Ernie D.," a standout college basketbal player.

"Because of the number of things he does and the way he can control the game, he is probably the best pure college basketball player in the country," says Bob Cousy, coach of the K.C.-Omaha Kings, who should know..

"Ernie makes passes that other people don't even think about," says his coach, Dave Gavitt.

And, from Ernie D. himself:

"I think the biggest thing I have going for me is I'm super-confident. I don't think anybody's better than me."

That confidence pervades a 24-2 Friar squad that has won more regular season games than any other. But it can be harmful, DiGregorio said, adding: "When we get up like 16 points we know we're playing tough and instead of playing smart we want to blow them out. And we get killed."

That almost happened earlier this year against St. Joseph's, Providence's first round rival in the NCAA tourney. The Friars eked out a six-point victory after losing a 17-point cushion. But Ernie D. thinks the well-knit Friars will take the Hawks again. "I think we just have better players than they do."

scoring average this season that includes 41 points in a key victory over St. John's last Saturday, is second on the all-time Friar scoring list behind Jimmy Walker. He also is a good bet to pass Vinnie Ernst's career assist standard.

"When we run, I think that brings out the best in our game" says the talkative senior.

"I think the team looks to me as being the leader on the court, the field general, the setup man," Ernie D. says.

He got to that command point by setting goals. Not yet in his teens, he decided to become a proathlete and concentrated on basketball.. Then he aimed for all-state, a college scholarship, All-American and prop career. He's reached the first two. The last is almost certain. He's hoping for first team All-American, but thinks the absence from national television of perhaps his finest performance of the year in a 24-point loss to UCLA could hurt. The game was pre-empted by President Nixon's inaugural balls.

His chief weakness is defense, he says, and those solo sessions could have held him back. "This is where I think I got hurt in the long run. Where others are playing head to head in the park, here I am knocking my head against the wind."

But, he adds, "where I live there aren't many good players."

Now his horizons stretch to Phoenix, Buffalo, Milwaukee and Kentucky.

Phillies Topple Sox Again 6-2

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP)-Mike Rodozinski, a non-roster rookie, hit a two-run homer and Deron Johnson and Mike Anderson drove in two runs each Monday in powering the unbeaten Philadelphia Phillies to their fourth exhibition victory in a 6-2 decision over the Boston Red Sox.

Rododzinski, who had 18 homers with Eugene in the Pacific Coast League last season, drove his shot off the screen in right center against Boston starter Lynn McGlothen in the first inning. It was only his second time at bat this spring.

Johnson doubled home two runs off Rogelio Moret in the sixth inning and Anderson singled across two more after a walk and Nellie Garcia's double off John Curtis in the ninth.

Jim Nash didn't allow a Boston hit for three innings, but was nicked for an unearned run on two walks and a throwing error in the first.

Mike Wallace blanked the Red Sox on two hits in the middle three innings. Andy Kosco homered off the screen in left center for Boston's other run off Early Stephenson in the eighth.

The defeat left the Red Sox with a 3-2 record, both losses to the Phillies.

Manager Eddie Kasko had named Orlando Cepeda as a designated hitter, but had to erase him when the Phils protested in accordance with a National League directive against uses of such a player.

NE Wrestling Looking Up In Nationals

By JOHN BOCK

"I wouldn't say that it was the case of anyone being any more determined, it was just the case of one individual rising up." With these words Coach Homer Barr characterized the Forty-Third NCAA Wrestling Championships that saw only four of the top seeded men achieve their seeds and win the National Title.

"New England is definitely gaining some respect," said Barr. In respect to Dave Amato's matches and George Ireland's, he thought that Dave wrestled a good bout in his match with top seeded Breece of Oklahoma, but that "he was too strong, like so many of those kids."

"George gave Ernst an excellent bout, but in the end again, I am afraid, it was a matter of strength that won it." Ireland looked at this years nationals and reflected "It's a good place to start for next year. I met a lot of nice people, I met some Olympians, and I met some very influential people. I hope I can go back next year and really do something."

The other eight New England Champs had varying kinds of success in their bouts. Scott Pucino of URI, wrestling at 126, lost his first round match 8-12 to John Berry of Idaho State. BU's 134 pound NEUWA Champ, Rick Freitas, bested Bob Beck of Pitt in the first round, 17-3, but was knocked out in the second round by losing a tight 9-8 bout to Greg Maestas from Western Colorado.

Tom Kryzak felt and showed his feelings as he lost 6-5 to Dan Muthler from Navy who went on to win the Nationals. Muthler won by virtue of one second riding time and Kryzak expected a tie. They called both men to the center of the mat and when they raised Muthler's hand Kryzak yelled "What?!" and was shocked to find out the clock had been in the Middies favor. (In the consolations Kryzak lost 5-3 to Nebraska's Tom Lotko.)

Greg Gamen was ahead of Cornell's Dale Porter, 6-0, but got careless and saw the lights at 4:30 and it was exit one more Rhode Islander. Brown's Jim Miller met fourth seeded Mark Hansen of Brigham Young and was pommelled 11-1.Rhode Island's Jim Urquhart lost to Michigan's Roger Ritzman 8-3 in the first round.

URI's Stu Horowitz had the most success of any NEUWA Champ as he advanced to the quarter-finals by virtue of a pin over second seeded John Panring of Minnesota. In the first round Horowitz pinned Penn State's Eastern Champ, Dan Brenneman in 7:05. He met Panring in the next round, was behind 9-0, and caught Panring in a cradle and pressed him. The next round saw Horowitz get pressed by Oklahoma's Warren Reid in 7:09. His first round consolation match was also last as he lost 13-5 to Bill Hill of East Carolina.

Defending National Champ Iowa State did defend their title but only winnings with two champs. It was Iowa State with 36 points, Oregon State with 29½, Michigan 24-½, Brigham Young 20½, Oklahoma State with 6, Oklahoma 3, and Iowa and Washington with 2 each.

The 118 pound finals saw fourth seeded Dan Sherman of Iowa beat second seeded Tom Phillips of Oregon State 10-5. The 126 pound class left its top seed, Oklahoma State's Billy Martin, in the semi-final, a victim of a 6-0 overtime loss to eventual champ Mark Massery of Northwestern. Masserry defeated Iowa State's Ron Glass 9-6 in the final.

At 134 one can't help but feel sorry for Oklahoma State's Bobby Stites. Stites has been hanging around Stillwater, Okla. for about five years waiting to win the Nationals. The closest he got was a 5-3 loss in the finals to Clarion State's super frosh Don Rohn. Stites was the top seed and Rohn upset Cal Poly's second seeded Larry Morgan 9-4 in the semi's to gain the finals.

Defending 142 pound Champ Tom Milkovich went into the Nationals with a shoulder separation and was consequently unable to wrestle for the last several weeks. He made it as far as the semi-finals where he fell victim to a cradle, courtesy of Brigham Young's Reed Fehlberg and was pinned in 5:20. Milkovich forfeited his two consolation matches and ended up sixth. The winner at this weight was the U.S. Naval Academy's Dan Muthler as he bested Fehlberg 9-4 in the finals.

Top seeded Jarret Hubbard did win at 150 in a replay of the Big 10 finals, only this time the results were reversed. Rich Lawinger of Wisconsin beat Hubbard in the finals of the Big 10 for Hubbard's only loss of the year. But in the NCAA Finals it was all Hubbard as he dominated Lawinger 8-4. The 158 pound class was also won by the top seed. Clarion State's super star Wade Schalles, won his third tournament in four weeks by beating Mike R. Jones of Oregon State 9-2. Schalles won both the NCAA Small College and University titles last year at 150, and repeated the honors this year, at 158.

Schalles' teammate Bill Simpson came from a third seed to upset the top seeded Keith Abens 12-5 in the semi- finals and then on to beat Doug Wyn from Western Michigan 7-3 in the finals. The 177 pound diadem went to Rich Binek of Iowa State, victor in an 8-3 decision over Gene Barber of Trenton State. Barber upset top seeded Jim Crumley of Oregon State in the quarter finals, 11-8. At 190 Greg Strobel spent the last :45 seconds of the first period fighting off a pin. Northern Illinois' Johnny Johnson suplayed Strobel right onto his back and was ahead 5-0 at the end of the first period. For the second time this year Strobel (who had to do the same thing in the East-West All Star Dual Meet four weeks ago) turned it on and came back to outlast Johnson 11-7, winning the title and the Outstanding Wrestler Award.

Iowa State's best bet in the Tourney, Big Chris Taylor notched his second straight NCAA Championship (to go along with a bronze medal he won at the 152 level) by scoring a 5-0 win over Oregon State's Ark Hagen. Taylor was the Most Pulls in the Tourney winner of Fred Assmy by pinning all five of his opponents in an aggregate time of 15:30.

But Baby, Look At 'em Now

From the Coliseum—Yeah, there was little enthusiasm that night in Morgantown. Very few knew there was sport in the city. It was supposedly an off year for West Virginia basketball. At best the 14,000 seat "Coliseum" would generally sit eight that night. The attraction was a young, nobody (more equal nobody) Massachusetts team that were viewed as having not one bad nothing but dreams . . . But baby, look at 'em now . . .

There was no snow in the city that afternoon. It was mild in the mining town. Basketball was everything. The Peach Bowl took prominence. And for that matter, so did the Bowlbreak Bowl. Both bid seasons were still in progress. Football was center stage as both schools had just season-long style. Nobody was ready for basketball, and there was question concerning the mean young men that live Allegheny west of the Appalachians. And how ready were they?

So Incarnate brought basketball and the University of West Virginia and at that time only At Massachusetts, an All Conference holdover, was definite. And one-third of his active Charlotte charges, then (we just didn't know each other . . . And they didn't. But time would change that. But time wouldn't save them at the Coliseum.

Billy Redman started. Jimmy Burke didn't play. Charlie Peters had at and night and John Murphy was in there and the Minutemen beat the Mountaineers on the hardwood by an 8-0 margin when the sportswriters talked over bets and coffee, the Peach Bowl still took prominence. The opponent could have been the Tasmanian National team. Nobody cared. The Minutemen were guests . . . That was about it.

But was the gallery of Southern guys and fine country homes and the newspapers that give up with Amy Vanderbilt about scarce. And it came down to Jerome Anderson. How could the Eastern team possibly escape the Southern duo of majority with victory. With one second on the clock and a one point margin in favor, Anderson went up from 18 with Mountaineer hands in his face.

Whether it went in or not was really not the question. For who was Jerome Anderson or any who was to have the upper hand. When he went up with his jumper perpendicularly, polished form, and desperate conditions, it happened to go in. And the youngsters who live on cellar plus to find out what fear not was all about, the finals wasn't the final.

The Arena immediately rose in triumph, saluting the victorious Minutemen. The band played "Dixie". Some Jack Lemmon was wrapped in the Rebel flag and John Murphy repelled the sling of coke cups was debut. As the Minutemen left the court and envisioned a Saturday night at home in Morgantown, the future was a spot clouds. They were 6-1 and still Wed Pierian had 6-1 as favorite dispute of . . .

You talk about sting your lip . . . You talk about picking yourself up by the bootstraps . . . With Monte injured due to a knee, and Gene now (hereafter) basketball was sure to get a late start on campus . . . There was question to the fact that would it ever get off the ground.

As they filed slowly out of the Coliseum, there was little concern over the Minutemen who just took a tough one right in the kisser . . . No one cared about what they had to live with, what was around the corner, tomorrow, next week, or next month . . . When Jack Lemmon exercised the Coliseum door in disgust as he left, no one believed, with victory in their pocket, to consider what the future Minutemen . . .

But baby, look at 'em now . . .

MDC & WMUA To Meet In B-Ball Contest

By MIKE STORY

It won't be the NIT, it will have all the nostalgia, and game and popularity and hoop fanfare for sure. Oxygen will be a necessity, it will happen (what quality can what is a year, only the name will be changed to protect the athlete involved). For you, the Massachusetts Daily Collegian staff has challenged the cast and crew from radio station WMUA to a basketball game.

The pre-game details will take place at 4 p.m. on the Boyden courts this Wednesday night. Pride is definitely on the line as Seven Two Undefeated Athletic Supporters meet under the leadership of Sports Editor Steve Cruse and Sports Director Rick Reid.

Beware MDC, Harrell says "he's ready".

Language Vote 'Inconclusive'

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

The results of a vote on the future of the College of Arts and Sciences language requirement, taken in February, have been called "inconclusive" by two of the Arts and Sciences deans involved.

The exact figures have not been released, but only "300 to 400" of the 891 Arts and Sciences faculty voted according to Mac Edds Jr., Dean of the Faculty of Natural Sciences and Mathematics, and one of three deans who drew up the ballot.

The other two were Jeremiah Allen, Dean of the Faculty of Humanities and Fine Arts and Dean Alfange, Jr., Dean of the Faculty of Social and Behavioral Sciences.

Officially called a "solicitation of opinion" the ballot was sent out at the request of the Arts and Sciences Curriculum Committee. The committee is presently studying a report recommending a change in the requirement.

The results of the ballot will be evaluated Thursday at a meeting of the deans of the College, according to the Assistant Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, Duncan Rollason.

Rollason, who called the vote "not overwhelming in either direction," said there were a number of options open to the deans; these included giving the results to the Curriculum Committee for a recommendation on future action or an outright decision on the requirement by the deans.

However Rollason said any change in the present requirement would probably not be made unless backed by a conclusive, and official, faculty vote. He added the results may be released to the faculty after the Thursday meeting.

No quick action on the results was predicted by Edds, however, who, referring to past experience, said a final decision was unlikely, at the Thursday meeting.

There were three choices on the ballot; the retention of the present requirement without change; "some modification of the present requirement," with space for suggestions; and simple "elimination of the requirement."

The faculty was asked to list their choices in order of preference and give their department an academic rank.

The push for the ballot came from the Curriculum Committee Rollason said, which has been studying a report from the Foreign Language Review Board, suggesting the creation of a "foreign culture" option to the language requirement. That option would permit students to take related courses on the civilization and literature of a foreign country in lieu of language courses.

The Curriculum Committee however, saw that proposal conflicting with the "C" courses required of all University students.

The committee, whose advice is usually followed by the College Rollason said, also wanted to know who wanted the requirement changed.

The present language requirement can be fulfilled by placement tests, passing the 146 level course in a language, high school credits, or, if approved, "language related study." According to College estimates almost two-thirds of all students in Arts and Sciences satisfy the requirement by prior study in high school.

Wounded Knee

Rally Draws 50

By BILL BALLON

A crowd of about 50 people gathered on the steps of the Student Union at 11:30 yesterday afternoon in response to a call by the Young Workers Liberation League (YWLL) for a rally to protest what one spokesman called "the genocide being started by Sioux at Wounded Knee".

The rally featured Bob Davidson of the YWLL, Joseph Salter of the United Farm Workers and an unidentified member of Vietnam Veterans Against the War as speakers.

The various speakers ranged from a plug for the United Farm Workers (which has spent much time in recent months) to a call for unity of all oppressed people in the country. The main theme, according to one of the speakers, will be used to "end Sioux at Wounded Knee".

Attending the rally were Irene Marquez, Cleo Fredrick, and Mary Quale, three Indian women from Arizona who are now attending Longmeadow High School as an exchange program.

In an interview Ms. Marquez accused President Nixon of "trying to force them out of Wounded Knee" and, if necessary, trying to "starve them out".

She added that "We've been pushed around long enough and we are not going to be pushed around any more. We won't leave Wounded Knee even if we have to die there."

Ms. Fredrick said, "This is our land and we've got more right to it than anyone else. They've taken it away before but now we have to get it back even if we have to fight."

Discuss Wounded Knee as a stepping stone to the Indians' fight to regain what they believe is rightfully theirs.

"This is the first move for the Indian," she said, "and from here on there's no turning back."

Ms. Quale said, "We don't want to be denied again."

As a result of the rally the Committee on Priorities announced that there would be a meeting at 4 p.m. Wednesday in the Colonial Lounge to form "some kind of support group for the people at Wounded Knee".

Standoff Continues

By JOHN LUNDQUIST
Associated Press Writer

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (AP)—An assistant attorney general resumed negotiations Tuesday with leaders of the Indians holding Wounded Knee and commented later there would be no attempt by federal authorities to enter the village while talks continued.

Asst. A.G. Kelley Cox, Harrington Wood said at a statement after the initial meeting that the gathering was "productive, friendly and reasonable."

"There will be no move to take Wounded Knee while negotiations are in progress," Wood said.

Wood said he expected to meet again Wednesday with the Indians, who have held this village for two weeks. He gave no indication that progress on specific issues had been made in resolving the two-week stand-off.

Kenton Bumbaugh, an attorney for the militant Indians who attended the talks, said the two sides had discussed many things but settled nothing. "If we can get some pressure on the Interior Department we might get some place," he added.

One of the Indians' demands has been for the Interior Department to suspend the Oglala Sioux tribal constitution and oust tribal president Richard Wilson.

Word was passed of the meeting by the Rev. John Adams, a Episcopal minister representing the National Council of Churches. A Justice Department spokesman said the meeting was arranged by

Farmer Meditates

Trances And Mark Twain

Elwood Babbit was the medium through which John Kennedy spoke last night in the Campus Center. (MDC Photo by Steve Goldstein)

By LARRY CARPMAN

Elwood Babbit, a 56-year-old farmer from Warwick, Massachusetts, put himself into a trance last night and brought back the spirits of Sam Clemens (Mark Twain) and John F. Kennedy.

Babbit spoke before an overflow crowd of 150 persons in C.C. 165. He is, as one of his friends said, "a very serious person living only to help people."

Babbit said he has "been practicing trance meditation since I first realized my capacities at the age of 13 when I was staring at a wooden bird in the kitchen of my house and the bird suddenly began to fly around the room."

Babbit's wife, Emily, spoke first and said, "I feel that I have everyone in the whole world. I can give love to so many people," Mrs. Babbit said, "everyday is like Christmas."

Mrs. Babbit claimed that she, through trance meditation, can visit any part of the world "even though I never gave anyone more than a dollar away from my purse." She said her favorite spot is "out and the "beautiful cathedrals."

Babbit, speaking of his first belief in reincarnation said, "Each of us has not someone else in this room before, at another time." He cited his example of a 12-year-old boy who "amazed the president of a stock exchange with his knowledge" and another case and boy who "played the piano."

Babbit continued, "I think the drug scene was a damn good thing because it made one look one's individuals and turn on to spiritual things. This is the only good thing and eventually drugs destroy the body cells. Once you get spiritually, give up drugs."

"Life," said Babbit, "is a very beautiful thing if you get your head out of the way. Everyone has a specific reason for living."

At 9:00, Babbit was ready to start his trance and explained what would happen.

"Trance is when all my energy is sucked away. There is an exchange of energy between myself and the entity I become."

Babbit went into his trance and his voice changed into that of Dr. Fisher, the "welfare guide" he uses during demonstrations. His lips moved distinctly with every person he spoke. Babbit spoke of religion and the spirit. "True religion answers itself in the medium of man's spirit. Be and know yourself," said Babbit.

At one point during his trance Babbit asked the questions from the audience. One listener asked a personal question dealing with his relationship with someone he had in mind. Another person stood up to ask two questions but before he asked the questions Babbit interrupted and answered them to the satisfaction of the participant.

As the Collegian went to press, Babbit was bringing back the spirit of Sam Clemens (Mark Twain) and John F. Kennedy. In an interview with Emily Babbit this reporter learned that Babbit "actually changes voices and uses the voice to Clemens of John Kennedy."

One man who said he had been a friend of Babbit for 10 years said, "Anyone Down in nothing conjured in thread."

Babbit produced his trance saying, "Respect me whether you believe or disbelieve."

The audience, some seeming to believe, did respect him.

Rent Increases

How To Explain It To Students

By MARK R. CYRON

Discussion of a proposed dorm increase at a proposed Food Services Advisory Board and the possibility of a mandatory meal ticket increase highlighted last night's Food and Fuel Committee meeting.

The unexpected rise in inflation and the decline in dormitory occupancy has forced an administration rent increase. The increase goes on top of attempts to cut the budget by freezing services and income funds. Will the rise explain it to students?

Amherst's operation raised the problem as to whether the university should "provide just shelter or more comprehensive services." A cutback in services would make rents more and more competitive with off campus apartment complexes, according to Chuck Hampton, Special Assistant to the Vice Chancellor for Administrative Affairs. The Committee feared that a cutback in services, such as area colleges and janitorial personnel, would create "turmoil" in both the student body and the university administration.

Mike Gorgey, Chairman of Rents and Fees, said that contrary to what was previously stated, area budgets will undergo reductions of their freedom in operating. "We made a mistake on this one, and we'll have to admit it," said Gorgey.

The proposed Food Services Advisory Board is a "watered down" version of the planned Food Services Board of Directors, which met with opposition by Joel Stoneham, Director of University Food Services. The purpose of the new Board will not be to "set policy" as the old left provided, but to merely "provide continuous feedback to Food Services."

Hall Coleman of Rents and Fees said, "Granted, that you had to water down the original proposal, but I think it's for the better."

Coleman said he was afraid that the new Board would be like "past committees—for weak." Members of Rents and Fees felt that the new Board should have more power than to review and make recommendations.

The committee feared that the new Board would be controlled by Stoneham. Coleman said, "Stoneham will go his own way and disregard Food Services Board as in the past." Stoneham, reached last night by telephone, said he "would be delighted to work with the advisory council."

Coleman recommended a compromise to make Stoneham a voting member of the Board, while retaining the power.

The committee accepted the Health Services budget, which calls for no increase in the present fee. It was pointed out that next year there will be an increase of approximately $10 per student for full health services. The increase is designed to help defray the costs of new services, which include a problem pregnancy counseling, new full time physician, staff minority therapist, and a new fringe menu.

A member of the Health Services Advisory Board said that future prospects include the hiring of a dental staff and "a good possibility that Amherst College will work with our (Mass.) health services."

Hampton talked to the committee about where to cut budget costs. Hampton cited the high Physical Plant utility costs as a major problem. Hampton said, "Students control their costs, and, if students want lights on 24 hours, then they will have to pay."

Hampton said he hoped the Plant's recent change from coal to oil would be more efficient and cut down pollution. Hampton said the change was an outcome of a "big study by consultants, and I assume they knew what they're doing."

Hampton explained that university admissions policy affects dormitory needs. Hampton said that "just stop the Admissions office cold to change the male/female ratio to include more women—the way an oil tanker begins." This failed when the

DVP Deadline Friday

The deadline for applications to serve as the Distinguished Visitors Program is Friday and so far few persons have applied.

DVP is a student organization which attempts to keep the University community in touch with contemporary issues by bringing guest speakers to the campus. In the past, DVP has presented such speakers as Senator Hubert Humphrey and Senator Mohammed Ali.

Anyone interested in joining the program may pick up an application at the Recognized Student Organization reception desk on the first floor of the Campus Center.

Afro-Am, Belchertown Budgets Reviewed

By BRUCE COLOE

Budgets for the Afro-American Society, Medical Emergency Loan Fund, Belchertown Volunteers were reviewed and passed last night at the Student Senate Budgets Committee meeting.

Representatives from the Afro-American group expressed dissatisfaction over the committee's action in reducing their budget. The group asked for an appropriation of about $10,000, but the committee recommended a $600.

Fred Dreyer, committee chairperson, said that the committee "is responsible to give groups enough money to uphold their purposes, but we also are responsible to the student body in general when we are spending their money."

Afro-American spokesmen, Frederick Brown and Joseph Anderson, complained about the lack of third world members in the group. At present, there are two in the 15 member committee.

They said after the meeting, "If you have third world people, you should have equal representation on any organization that will affect their lives directly or indirectly. The third world community will hopefully move to equate the situation in the future."

In other business, the committee appropriated $500 for the Medical Emergency Loan Fund, an organization which will be primarily providing funds for emergency abortions. The committee hopes the loan group will be self-sufficient by next year and will not need student funding.

Belchertown Volunteers, a group of students who go to the Belchertown State School on weekends to work with the patients, received $600.

The committee also approved the inclusion of Hoops, a group planning personal, vocational and career counseling, in low-income high school students.

Unions Near Agreement

In a closed-door joint meeting last night in the Student Union, the Executive Committee of the American Association of University Professors (AAUP) and the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) agreed on language for a Professional Duty agreement which will be presented to the membership at their respective chapters for ratification.

Spokespersons for the two unions involved would not elaborate on the announcement.

The unions have been active in seeking to represent the Umass teaching faculty.

Stoneham Answers Questions

By JOHN FARMAKIS

Appearing last night before the Food Services Sub-Committee of the Student Senate and five other concerned students, Joel Stoneham and Marie V. Coppolino fielded questions from the two chairpersons Tracey Carson and Diane McCarthy.

In a lengthy question and answer period, Stoneham, director of the University Food Services, and Ms. Coppolino, manager of Marketing and Vending Services, discussed the past, present and future of the Food Services.

Stoneham has been with the University Food Services since 1966. He has no degree, although he has some graduate credit which is renewable every year. He said he does not wish to have tenure, and stated that "If I was being such a lousy job and screwing things up on many students think, then they should get rid of me."

When asked by Carson about the possibility for the students to obtain a five, ten, or fifteen meal plan which would be transferable, Stoneham replied, "This would be possible in the future, but not without a board increase. Because of the transferability, the price of the meal ticket would have to be based on cash procedures." Commenting on the feasibility of refunds for unused chits, Stoneham expressed reservations. He did admit that this plan would take some time to work out.

Carson and asked Stoneham to explain the rationale behind the mandatory meal tickets for those students living locally and Stoneham replied that this was determined by the Board of Trustees. The money is used to help pay off the loans which were needed to pay for the buildings.

When questioned as to why students couldn't simply pay for the building without having to buy a meal ticket, Stoneham replied, "It is necessary to pay $8.00 and to not. Since most parents are paying for their children's education, I am sure they wouldn't like it and would object. We have to keep them satisfied."

Stoneham then cited the problems which he feels the town would experience if the mandatory meal plan were suddenly eliminated. "There are not enough supermarkets or parking spaces in town to accommodate the students," he said. "Even now, the stores in stores around this area are inadequately stocked. Also, there is not enough elevatory in residence halls to support the stores and the plans which would be needed."

Stoneham said he feels that in the future students there will not be a mandatory meal ticket plan. However, he said, the phasing out of the mandatory meal plan would have to be a slow, orderly process to be successful, and to enable the town and the students to prepare for it. Suggesting forming the Student Senate provide him with an Advisory Council, Stoneham said, "I'd be delighted to have one." He said that he would work with the Council but would not let it become a Governing Board.

Ms. Coppolino explained why only one-quarter of all Hatch Hall complaints were answered. Although she called students on the phone to discuss their gripes, she said, she found them to be irrational and unreasonable. Because she found no other way of constructive discussion, she decided to stop the idea.

In a final statement, Stoneham commented, "I would like to show the fact is all institutions that we are here to serve the students as best we can in a money-losing operation. There is no way that we can compete with a dorm like Bulfinch, where chef service only on weight a day. In my professional opinion, I think we do a pretty good job, although we do make mistakes. We are miles ahead of other schools. Take, for instance, our Super Food Plan, which we serve to approximately 500 students. I know of no other school which is willing to serve their students as much as we are."

Boston Chancellor Named

By BILL DENOMME

After a seemingly meeting lasting close to eight hours yesterday afternoon and evening, the Board of Trustees have named a 10-year old vice chancellor for academic affairs at the University of California Riverside as the new chancellor of the Boston campus.

Dr. Carlo L. Golino was chosen by Trustees last night after a closed session of the Colorado native arrived into the morning hours and was invited exclusively to the chasing of a new chancellor for the commuter campus with a projected student population of 4,000.

Golino was among the finalists for the post of Amherst chancellor last spring but was passed over by the board when Dr. Randolph W. Bromery was chosen for the post. Golino is a native of Italy and came to the U.S. at the age of 21.

He has a Ph.D. in Romance Languages and Literature from the University of California at Berkeley, and an M.A. in Italian from Columbia.

Three teachers for the post were selected from 100 applicants according to one member of the Boston campus search committee.

Each of the three was invited to Boston to view the campus and meet with faculty and students.

Golino explained Francis Broderick, who headed Umass-Boston for four years before being asked to resign, had told the President Robert C. Wood.

In the view interview where Broderick's resignation, the chief administrative officer of Umass-Boston has been acting chancellor William Hiss (Boston).

According to one administrative source, Hamilton never made it to the final round of candidates for the permanent position, possibly because he has a different view of where the Boston campus should go from President Wood," the administrator said.

women didn't show and the 100 minority office attempted more transfer students—who apparently don't reside on campus. The bias of these students must then be made up by students.

Hampton said a new shower head is under study that would cut water consumption. Some conservationist that less water be placed in toilets to save water and money.

Ramp Opens On I-93

DORCHESTER (AP) — A second ramp to the first million engineer of Interstate 93 linked the "road to nowhere" will be opened Wednesday, but urge police of the contractor will allow only buses onto the highway.

Traffic experts fear full use of the road would produce a permanent and inadvisable traffic jam on the main gateway to downtown Boston from the north.

Three years ago Gov. Francis W. Sargent approved completion of the project that would allow traffic to which from downtown Boston to the already completed portion of I-93 running from the outskirts of Boston into New Hampshire.

But within months of the governor's statement, the state arranged a major compromise—a tunnel over the Charles River.

Without the bridge, the only other way for traffic to reach the city was over the Tobin bridge into the crowded Central artery.

Last month, after some delay the new stretch was opened—after a fashion.

Inbound traffic utilized it well in Dorchester and wind its way through the city streets of Somerville into Boston.

But outbound traffic continued to use the old route through Somerville.

"Special Students" at the School of Ed. and yesterday, in search of a solution to the problem of the reduced number of openings in the graduate program. (staff photo by John Dorsey)

Special Students Plight Pondered

By CHERYL WALSH

Graduate-level Dean Marlowe H. Anders and Provost Robert C. Kluckhohn met yesterday to consider a solution to the problem of "special students" at the School of Education whose places have been discontinued due to budget cuts.

The solution suggested by assistant dean of graduate affairs at the school, Norman Dean Anderson, is to transfer one of the five slots for next year's special students to degree programs for the current year's special students.

According to a statement submitted by the special students to Anderson March 8, the University reduced the number of graduate slots for the School of Education from 100 to 50 in January, 1971.

The results of the meeting between supply and Kluckhohn were not known yesterday as a meeting with the special students. Anderson pledged her support to the special students.

Special students have said they have been characterized "into a tunnel, the dark closing in front of them." A petition by the special students to the School of Education recognizes the needs of the special students.

If a solution cannot be found within the Graduate School or from the Provost, the special students plan to seek some form of action directed at the legislature.

The students plan to meet Thursday March 18, in Room 19 of the School of Education at 7:30 p.m. A tentative meeting has also been planned for Tuesday, March 30.

The two men were accompanied by several guards from an Indian security and joined in the meeting and back to the subject.

As the bike mounted to the barricaded village, a federal grand jury in Sioux Falls, S.D., returned an indictment against Indians who took part in the takeover of the Southern Sioux Feb. 27. The grand jury report was ordered sealed by U.S. Dist. Court Judge Fred Nichol.

Although the federal representative visited the Indian village, government authorities maintained a tight blockade of Wounded Knee for the second day.

Wayne Colburn, chief of U.S. marshals here, told a news conference he marshals Pine Ridge that federal authorities hold no personal personnel captives in the protestors of the village.

Unions, Railroads Settled

By ROBERT A. DOBKIN
AP Labor Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The railroads and 15 unions announced tentative settlement Tuesday on a new nationwide contract increasing wages and benefits by more than 10 per cent for 500,000 railroad workers.

The settlement was unprecedented in that it was the first time in railroad labor history that the parties reached agreement before current contracts expired, and without strikes or any disruptions in service.

It also was the first of several major industrywide contracts to be negotiated this year and is certain to receive close attention from both labor and the Nixon administration, which is trying to hold down inflation.

Under terms of the agreement, wages and benefits would be increased by a total of 10.7 per cent over 18 months beginning July 1.

Spokesmen for the industry and unions said this would include a 4 per cent wage increase effective next Jan. 1 and a revised pension system which would add $42.75 in monthly take-home pay for railroad employees.

The industry would pick up the payments now paid by the workers into the separate railroad retirement funds covering rail workers in lieu of Social Security.

Although the total wage and benefits package is above the government's voluntary pay standards, industry and union negotiators expressed confidence the new contract would sit well with the Nixon administration.

They noted the 4 per cent wage increase, adding about 21 cents to the $5.31 average hourly rail workers' pay, falls within the guidelines, and that the overall package amounted to about 7 per cent a year.

A spokesman for the Cost of Living Council said it is likely that the council will review the tentative settlement.

The government's pay standard allows for wage increases of 5.5 per cent a year plus another 0.7 per cent in fringe benefits. But the council has indicated the standard will be applied flexibly on a case-by-case basis.

The agreement is subject to ratification by officials of the 15 unions, and in one case by a membership vote. Only the Sheetmetal Workers, the smallest union with 3,600 members in the rail industry, requires a membership vote.

Virtually all of the nation's 500,000 railroad workers would be covered by the improved retirement benefits, which must be approved by Congress as amendment to the Railroad Retirement Act.

Former Agent Mum On Mission Details

By DAN HALL
Associated Press Writer

NEW BRITAIN, Conn. (AP) — CIA agent John T. Downey, on his second day of freedom after 20 years imprisonment in Red China, said Tuesday he told the Communists most of what he knew.

But he refused to discuss with newsmen details of the mission that led to his capture.

When asked if he revealed any "secrets" during intensive interrogation by the Chinese, Downey said: "I would say I revealed about every bit of information I had" during the first nine months in prison.

Downey, 42, during his first formal news conference since his release Sunday night, said:

"I don't feel I would like to discuss" the type of information revealed to the Communists.

Downey brushed off the suggestion that any information he gave might have had lasting importance, calling it "such an ancient history."

In response to a reporter's question of whether he thought "what you were doing" was worthwhile, Downey said: "I'd say no. I'm not quire sure if I have gotten the ramifications of that, but as I say, I thought the 20 years for a large extent were wasted, and I don't see it benefitted anybody, Uncle Sam."

Speaking in a quiet, reserved manner, Downey said during the first 10 months after his plane was shot down over Manchuria in November 1952, he was kept continually in leg irons.

The Chinese subjected him to "pretty intensive questioning" and threatened his well being, but never beat him, he said.

The slightly balding Downey was released to be at the bedside of his mother, Mrs. Mary V. Downey, 75, who suffered a severe stroke Wednesday. She remained in critical, but improved condition, and visited twice with her son.

Flanked by his brother, William, and sister, Mrs. Joan Walsh, before a battery of news microphones and cameras, Downey was composed and joked occasionally about questions.

Asked about any possible value gained from his time spent in Green Basket Prison, he replied: "I wouldn't recommend it for character building."

Questioned whether he would remain with the CIA, he said: "At present, I would say not."

Brandt Is Worried About U.S.-German Strain

By ANTHONY COLLINGS
Associated Press Writer

BONN, Germany (AP) — The dollar crisis...slipping American popularity in Germany...German resentment at tough talk in Washington.

These are signs of new strain in U.S.-German relations, and Chancellor Willy Brandt is worried about it.

On the eve of Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz's arrival in Bonn for crucial money and trade talks with Brandt, West German officials are looking for U.S. help to avoid damage to the Western alliance.

In unusually outspoken remarks about the United States, Brandt said recently: "National egoism must be curbed."

The chancellor, one of the most respected European leaders and a staunch U.S. ally, added:

"In connection with the monetary crisis, certain quarters over there in America have used the poor slogan of 'let the Germans and Japanese sweat it out."

Brandt said the slogan was not representative of American public opinion.

"But," he noted, "there have been such voices."

Brandt softened his remarks by saying "national egoism" also has to be curbed in Germany and the rest of Europe. And he promised to do what he could to check the spread of anti-Americanism in Germany and avoid letting it damage the Western alliance.

But the unusual frankness of his words, in an interview with the pro-Brandt newspaper Neue Rhein Zeitung over the weekend, indicated how seriously he views the danger of possible U.S.-German tension over trade and money.

Brandt made his remarks before the decision Sunday night to make the German mark 3 per cent costlier and to join with five other European currencies in a float against the dollar.

This decision should work to the advantage of U.S. trade with Europe and hurt European exports to America. It was made after the Europeans reportedly got no word from Shultz on what steps Washington would take to prevent the dollar from falling so low that their exports would be further hurt.

Shultz is to see Brandt Thursday before continuing on to Paris for a second round of international money talks. Brandt hopes to get from him some idea whether Washington will now help the Europeans.

Truck, Train Collide; 19 Persons Injured

By F.T. MacFEELY
Associated Press Writer

HORTENSE, Ga. (AP) — A truck loaded with logs slammed into an auto-passenger train in dense fog here Tuesday, derailing 21 cars, killing the truck driver and injuring 19 Florida-bound passengers.

Spokesmen for Auto Train Corp. of Washington, D.C., said there were 318 persons, including 15 crew members, and 108 automobiles aboard the train.

State Trooper W.W. Manning said the truck hit the second of two diesel engines, overturning it and 21 cars, most of which were hauling automobiles that belonged to the passengers. One passenger car was overturned and one of the engines caught fire and burned until midmorning.

"It started to shake, like something was tearing apart," said Ersula Schneider, one of four hostesses from the Washington area who were in the car that overturned. "Then it came to a stop and, like in slow motion, it turned over on its side. We helped 15 people or so who were in the car climb over refrigerators, cabinets and the windows to the end of the car and climbed out."

Irish Peace Plan Threatened

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP)—Militant Protestant leaders assailed key parts of Britain's new peace plan for Northern Ireland Tuesday even before the secret proposals were published.

Roman Catholic extremists already have served notice little will satisfy them short of Irish reunion, which the British find impossible to contemplate at this time.

Taken together, these rival Irish postures—whether they are real or bargaining positions—threatened Britain's latest bid to pacify its torn province.

A politician who claims to speak for many of the million-member Protestant majority went even further Tuesday. He claimed that the outlawed Irish Republican Army, backed by many of Ulster's 500,000 Roman Catholics, would carry the insurrection into the British heartland unless they get their way.

War On The British

"There will be a new dimension in IRA activity," Vanguard leader William Craig forecast to newsmen. "The terrorists will extend their activity to the towns and villages of the United Kingdom with the aim of making the British people war weary and sick of the whole thing."

Craig's warning seemed intended to heighten the anxieties of the British after the flash foretaste they were given last Thursday of the sort of urban guerrilla warfare Ulstermen have been enduring since 1969.

As he spoke, a massive motorcade of police vans moved through downtown London with seven men and three women captives. The 10, from pro-IRA districts of Belfast and its suburbs, made a brief courtroom appearance on charges of plotting the bombings that rocked London, killing a man and injuring 243.

High Security

Security measures reminiscent of the war years were on display as the 10 accused, all handcuffed to each other, made their appearance at Bow Street Magistrates' Courts.

Magistrate Sir Frank Milton ordered the 10 to be held in custody for a week pending further investigations.

Lawyer Bernard Simons, representing the accused, protested to Milton he had been barred from seeing them for four days since they were pulled off a Belfast-bound airliner Thursday.

"When I saw them yesterday," Simons protested, "they were not even aware the explosions had occurred."

In the background, meantime, the dreary pattern of Ulster's violence wound on.

A soldier died and three others were wounded in a booby-trap which IRA Provisionals said they had set up near the border. A guerrilla was killed by troops using new night-sight rifles as he peered over a wall in a Belfast Catholic district toward an army post. A Protestant youth hurt in a street bombing earlier in the month died in hospital.

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D.—RANCHERS QUESTIONED—A member of the Oglala Sioux tribe at Wounded Knee, S.D. escorts two unidentified ranchers from the museum building where they were taken for questioning by AIM Indians after being found on the reservation. The men were escorted from the village and released.

Miner's Murder Ordered For 'Welfare of Union'

By GARY MIHOCES
Associated Press Writer

ERIE, Pa. (AP)—Paul E. Gilly, convicted in the Joseph A. "Jock" Yablonski murders, testified Tuesday that another defendant told him the United Mineworkers insurgent was ordered killed by UMW President W.A. "Tony" Boyle.

Boyle, since deposed as head of the union, reiterated that he had nothing to do with the slaying of Yablonski and his wife and daughters.

Gilly said he was told the killings had to take place because "it was preferred for the welfare of the union that Tony Boyle would stay in control."

Gilly's statement came during the third day of the trial of William J. Prater, a 53-year-old former UMW organizer whom the state claims was a conduit for the $20,000 allegedly paid for Yablonski's death.

Gilly, 38, a surprise prosecution witness, told the court of three meetings he had with Prater prior to the slayings. The Yablonskis were killed on New Year's Eve 1969 at their rambling home near Clarksville, in southwestern Pennsylvania.

Special prosecutor Richard Sprague asked specifically about a meeting between Gilly and Prater in October 1969.

"At this time," Gilly said, "I was told Mr. Yablonski was trying to break and destroy the union and also its pension fund."

"And did he say who wanted Yablonski killed?" Sprague asked, referring to Prater.

"Yes sir," Gilly responded. "Tony Boyle."

Boyle, reached by telephone at his Washington home, said: "I have denied repeatedly having any knowledge of the crime. I knew absolutely nothing about any of this. I don't know any of these people. I never saw any of them and I have nothing to say."

Gilly, a former house painter from Cleveland who was convicted of the slayings last year and subsequently sentenced to death, said Prater promised him that his father would receive a UMW pension retroactive to Sept. 1, 1969, provided he went through with the killings.

Hijacker Among POWs

By ROBERT LIU
Associated Press Writer

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP)—Another 108 American war prisoners, including a plane hijacker and an admiral's son, are heading home from Hanoi via this Pacific check-in point.

They are flying out of the North Vietnamese capital today in three C141 hospital planes at 45-minute intervals, with the first batch expected to touch down at Clark around 3:15 a.m. EST Thursday.

An Air Force C130 carrying a 20-member advance team of military officers, ground technicians, medics and interpreters took off for Hanoi at 6:38 a.m.—5:38 p.m. Tuesday EST—to pave the way for the hospital planes.

Awaiting the military prisoners is the same hero's welcome given three earlier groups of released POWs who stopped off at Clark for medical checkups before continuing across the Pacific to the United States and their waiting families.

The most prominent of the latest returning prisoners are Air Force Col. John P. Flynn, 50, the senior-ranking POW, and Navy Lt. Cmdr. John S. McCain III, 36, son of Adm. John S. McCain Jr.

Until he retired as commander of U.S. forces in the Pacific last year, Adm. McCain directed some of the heaviest air strikes against North Vietnam.

Sharing attention is Bobby Joe Keesee, the only civilian in this group. He hijacked a Thai charter plane to North Vietnam in September 1970 and was all but forgotten until Hanoi included his name on the list of POWs to be released.

The Texas native, whose sister said he dropped out of school in the eighth grade, was described in a Thai newspaper as "short, fat and crew-cut." He is about 39.

A State Department official will fly to Hanoi to escort Keesee to Clark. Officials said this is regular procedure whenever a civilian is freed. Military officials said they have no orders to jail Keesee, who has been identified as an Army deserter who went AWOL after 11 years' service and flew a rented plane to Cuba, where the Castro regime refused his request for asylum.

The 108 returning prisoners will be joined by two military pilots being freed by China on Thursday and 32 American war prisoners being freed by the Vietcong on Friday.

The pilots, Air Force Maj. Philip E. Smith of Roodhouse, Ill., and Navy Lt. Cmdr. Robert J. Flynn of Colorado Springs, Colo., were shot down during the Vietnam war when their planes strayed over Chinese territory.

FDA Regulates Labeling

By JOHN STOWELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—A second package of food labeling rules intended to prevent consumer deception and promote good nutritional practices was issued Tuesday by the Food and Drug Administration.

When fully effective in 1975 grocery shoppers will be able to learn:

—How much orange juice is in diluted beverages, which now ranges from 5 to 95 per cent.

—Whether frozen heat-n'-serve dinners meet a federal minimum and maximum of nutrients.

—That ingredient such as meats are not included in new convenient "main dish" foods.

—That many noncarbonated beverages do not contain, as they imply, fruit or vegetable juice.

—The percentage of sea food, shrimp, crabmeat, Greenland turbot or bonito in cocktail sauce. Federal officials said that presently such cocktails might contain 10 to 40 per cent of the characterizing ingredient but consumers have no way of knowing how much.

FDA general counsel Peter B. Hutt told a news conference that nutritional quality guidelines may prove to be more important to consumers than nutritional labeling rules announced two months ago. These nutritional labeling rules will tell consumers what vitamins, minerals, protein and calories are in food, while the new guidelines are an attempt to regulate nutritional quality.

Three Men Held In Stennis Shooting

By BOB GREENE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two brothers and an 18-year-old companion were ordered held in lieu of bond Tuesday in connection with the robbery-shooting of Sen. John C. Stennis, D-Miss.

The three men will have a preliminary hearing on March 23.

After carefully explaining to each defendant his rights, U.S. Magistrate Jean F. Dwyer set bond at $25,000 for John S. Marshall, 21; $50,000 for Tyrone Marshall, 18, and $10,000 for Derick Holloway 18, all of Northeast Washington.

They have been charged under Title 18, Section 351 of the U.S. Code, described by the FBI as a congressional assassination statute. It carries a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine

The 71-year-old chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Stennis was shot twice on Jan. 30 after parking his car outside his home in Northwest Washington. After lingering near death for days following surgery at Walter Reed Army Medical Center, the Mississippi Democrat is now considered on the road to full recovery.

Monday's arrest of the three young men climaxed one of the most intensive manhunts in District of Columbia history. Acting FBI Director L. Patrick Gray, III, in announcing the arrests, said Tyrone Marshall had been taken into custody earlier Monday on disorderly conduct charges. His brother and Holloway were arrested later by FBI agents and D.C. police.

At the arraignment, the prosecuting attorney said Tyrone Marshall had refused to appear in Superior Court "concerning another infraction". Although the youth, whose wife and 15-month-old child were in the courtroom, has never been convicted, he has several charges pending against him.

"For an 18-year-old," Magistrate Dwyer said, "he's either been very unlucky or very busy."

The prosecutor asked that a $75,000 bond be set for each defendant. But after a somewhat lengthy caucus of the lawyers with the magistrate, John Marshall's bond was set at $25,000.

Holloway, whose lawyer said had "minimal involvement with the case", was to be hospitalized with a liver ailment.

The Old Model T's Still There

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) — When America's highest-ranking diplomat in captivity returns home after five years, he'll find his yellow and black Model T Ford parked in the driveway.

Close friends said they sometimes doubted that Philip W. Manhard would survive the grueling years as a captive of the Communists. But they said Manhard's family always believed he'd be coming home and kept the classic vintage car "in perfect running order" waiting for his arrival.

"That car was Phil Manhard's pride and joy, but his family hasn't let it just sit around," friends said. "Peg Manhard uses it and the cat has had kittens in it twice. Phil should be home just in time for spring kittens."

He is to be released Friday by the Viet Cong.

Manhard, 52, went to the former imperial capital of Hue in September 1967 as a senior U.S. adviser to South Vietnamese officials. He was in his two-story white French colonial home when the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong overran the city at the start of the 1968 Tet offensive.

Manhard was next seen at a pagoda north of Hue being loaded onto a truck. His friends breathed easier because his medical history included recurring treatment for foot infections. However, a few days later another report arrived that Manhard and the other prisoners had been taken off of the truck and were seen marching north.

Like most of the 20 or so Americans captured at Hue, his fate was unknown for at least a year. Then State Depatment officials obtained information that led them to believe he was still alive.

Manhard's wife Margaret was always preparing for his return, friends said. She redid his study, kept the Model T running and talked about him freely.

"She'd talk about Vietnam and POWs," a friend recalled. "There wasn't any subject you had to pussyfoot around with Peg and her children. You never had to avoid mentioning his name."

Manhard joined the foreign service in February 1948 and was assigned to the Peking language school and then to T'ienching, where he closed out the American consulate after the Communist takeover. A colleague recalled that he was briefly held under house arrest during the takeover.

In 1951, Manhard was assigned to Korea and two years later he was embroiled in a prisoner crisis.

FBI Probe In Showdown

By JOHN CHADWICK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Judiciary Committee voted unanimously Tuesday to invite White House counsel John W. Dean to testify at its hearings on L. Patrick Gray's nomination to be FBI director.

President Nixon has said he would not permit Dean to appear for questioning about an investigation he conducted for the President of the bugging of Democratic headquarters at the Watergate complex here last June.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., told newsmen that hopefully Nixon will reconsider. But Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W Va., another committee member, said it appears "the President already has closed the door" to Dean's testimony

Byrd, the assistant Democratic leader, said that if Nixon is unwilling to let Dean appear, he should withdraw Gray's nomination.

However, Sen. James O. Eastland, D-Miss., the committee chairman, said he is confident of approval of Gray's nomination regardless of whether Dean accepts the invitation to testify.

Galbraith:

Pentagon Papers In Best Tradition

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP)—Former presidential adviser John Kenneth Galbraith testified Tuesday it is "inconceivable" that criticism of U.S. ambassadors and policies in Vietnam contained in the Pentagon papers could have harmed national defense interests.

Galbraith, testifying in defense of Daniel Ellsberg and Anthony Russo at the Pentagon papers trial, said that criticisms in three volumes of the papers are in the best tradition of America's "open society."

"The United States is an open society where a wide variety of matters are discussed every day, many of them critical of our government," said Galbraith, former U.S. ambassador to India. ". . . We do not conclude because many of the comments are critical of the government that they are damaging to the national defense." The comment by Galbraith came after he read to jurors several Pentagon papers passages which criticize U.S. officials' actions in Saigon between 1963 and 1967.

The passages showed that Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge supported efforts by the South Vietnamese government to silence criticisms by the American press corps. One passage quoted Lodge as saying, "The United States press should be induced to leave the new government alone . . . Extensive press criticism at this juncture would be disastrous." Turning to the jurors, Galbraith said, "Generally, these comments are criticisms of our ambassadors, who should not be immune to criticism . . . Since this goes on in the United States every day, I cannot think that the addition of the statements in these volumes would appreciably have affected the conditions of our affairs in Vietnam or elsewhere."

The tall, graying Galbraith added that not only was the material useless to an enemy by the time Ellsberg and Russo copied it in 1969, but it probably also was of little use if released "contemporaneously," when some events happened, in 1964.

Galbraith, now a Harvard professor of economics, was the third adviser to President John F. Kennedy to testify in defense of the men accused of stealing the Pentagon papers.

R.I. Approves Anti-Abortion Measures

By TERENCE HUNT
Associated Press Writer

PROVIDENCE (AP) — A strick anti-abortion bill was signed into law by Gov. Philip Noel Tuesday within an hour after it was approved by the Rhode Island Senate.

Noel said he still had serious questions about the bill's constitutionality but wanted to move quickly to fill the void created by the invalidation of the state's previous law.

The measure was adopted by the Senate on an overwhelming voice vote. Some lawmakers then requested that their vote be recorded, and the tally was 34-5 in favor.

Rhode Island's new law basically resurrects provisions of the state's 19th Century statute which was declared unconstitutional last month. It allowed abortion only when it is deemed necessary to save the life of the mother.

As originally drafted and approved by the Senate previously, the bill simply restated the old law and added a section declaring life begins at conception.

Walpole Guards Threaten Walk-Off

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP) — Guards at Walpole state prison threatened to walk off the job Thursday unless Gov. Francis Sargent "gives them back control" of the state's highest security prison.

The president of the guards' union local, Howard V. Doyle, said negotiations between the guards and the state Correction Department had broken down.

Doyle said Tuesday that the "breaking point came last night when we were told by Commissioner John O. Boone that they would grant all our requests providing we would allow the release of all prisoners in the segregated 9 and 10 cellblocks into general population."

Such a move, he said, was "ridiculous and totally unacceptable to the union."

The prison has been hit by repeated unrest and guard disputes since Boone became commissioner about a year ago.

Doyle called for Boone's resignation and demanded that the governor personally take over command of Walpole to restore order.

If Sargent refused, Doyle said the guards would not show up for work Thursday, and the governor will "have to use his police agencies to run the prison."

Doyle said prisoners now are running the institution, and inmates in the segregated units have threatened the lives of several guards.

Sargent responded that he would call in state police to run the prison if guards went through with their threat to strike. He vowed to bring order to the troubled prison.

"If an illegal strike takes place," Sargent said, "or if a further emergency occurs, I will not hesitate to order the full force of the Massachusetts State Police into Walpole prison to maintain and preserve order. And if that step must be taken, if the state police enter that prison, that force will remain as long as necessary."

The governor added, "No threat, from either side, will stay my hand. I will bring order to Walpole."

The governor said the prison "suffers from a polarization between guards and inmates heightened by the use by each side of a news media focusing sensational attention on a growing crisis."

Drug Prices

The Western Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) filed a bill in October urging the Massachusetts State Legislature to require the posting of common drug prices at Bay State pharmacies.

The proposed legislation, House Bill #2013, would require pharmacists to post prices of the one hundred most commonly prescribed drugs, and to give price information on request for other drug items.

Investigations conducted in October for WMPIRG by student volunteers revealed that almost 40% of druggists surveyed in Western Massachusetts were unwilling to reveal the price of a drug before a customer agreed to buy it. Furthermore, the group discovered price variations ranging from $2 to $10 for twenty capsules of a common antibiotic, depending on where it was purchased.

Testifying on behalf of the bill, Dr. Sidney Wolfe, the director of Ralph Nader's health research group, made a good point: "those hardest hit by high prescription prices are the old, the poor, and the disabled." Wolfe also argued that without readily available price information, consumers are forced to become "full-time investigators" in order to get well.

Other evidence in support of the bill includes the fact that the price of some drugs (example: Thorazine) are more than 100% higher in the U.S. than in Canada.

House Bill #2013 should be passed.

The Hots For Porno

It seems that anything that I like is either illegal, immoral, or expensive.

Since it has been released, Last Tango in Paris has been sold out for at least one month in advance. It is virtually impossible to sneak in through the back door of this theater (because there is none) and the usher at the front door refuses to be bribed. He's heard every excuse possible and me coming all the way to New York City from Amherst didn't seem to phase him in the least. Outside, the scalpers were bargaining for some token amount over the initial five dollar entrance fee. So much for sophisticated pornography; I want to see the real thing anyway.

But then again, I really don't feel like spending the afternoon watching some stag films either. Not because I don't do those kind of things, but purely for the reason that the stag films that you see are not made very well, and they're kind of hard to watch, and bad movies hurt my eyes. Besides, most stag film theaters have an age limit which I haven't reached yet.

Somewhere there should be some sort of compromise.

I have the dubious distinction of being able to say that I saw Deep Throat before it was considered too pornographic for the general public. (Before that, the movie was being shown for the benefit of perverted theater critics.) I loved it. It was one of the funniest movies that I've seen in a long while. There was no doubt to its being pornographic, if the exposition of an erect penis is the definition of pornography, but this movie was different. Sure, the addition of a plot here and there helped, but what made Deep Throat different from the usual porno flicks that you see is its atmosphere. I mean, here is a movie that was made as a pornographic film just for the sake of being pornographic. But more importantly, it is a new genre of pornography. Deep Throat isn't particularly stimulating, as is conventional pornography, but it is quite entertaining and refreshing. There is a lack of "dirtiness" in Deep Throat's pornography and perhaps it is this shallowness that makes this movie so enjoyable. The two old ladies who walked in with their grocery bags didn't seem to be embarrassed being in the theater. And, as my companion pointed out, there was a noticeable lack of baseball gloves and hats on the laps of the patrons in the theater.

There is really nothing wrong with pornography, if you take it at face value. It is only the people who get excited about it corrupting our morals, wherever they may lie, that makes pornography pornographic. Or why else would Last Tango in Paris be sold out for so long?

Pornography is like perversion. It is only what is thought pornographic in the mind that makes it pornographic on the silver screen. You have to take it with a grain of salt. Pornography in films is just another new toy to be occupied with, for the time being. The new type of pornography (such as Deep Throat and the Erotic Film Festivals) prove to us that it needn't be dirty or immoral to be good. The new wave of pornographic films is kind of fun, and it's wholesome because sex is a reality.

Pornography shouldn't be illegal, and it's really not immoral and if someone ever lowers the admission charge for Last Tango, I'll try and see it again.

The 500th Lynching

"Good evening. Today is March 14, 1975, and this is Howard K. Smutt with an ABC Special Report on this week's executions. As you already know, today the total rose to over 500, since the reinstatement of capital punishment back in 1973. ABC News anchorman Harry Reasonless is in Atlanta with a Special Report and an exclusive interview with the late Mr. Juan Moregone, who just this afternoon, became the 500th person to be executed in the United States during the last two years. Now we switch you to Harry Reasonless in Atlanta."

"Thank you, Howard. Well, this was the scene today in Atlanta, Georgia as thousands of spectators from all over the country gathered here to celebrate this momentous event. The beautiful weather only served to add to this carnival atmosphere, although Execution Officials had hoped for a slightly cooler day. There have been souvenir booths set up throughout the city for the past week, selling such items as 'Juan Moregone dolls' and bumper stickers reading, '500 down and more to go!'. All in all, the city of Atlanta was more than ready for this commemorative event."

"It was not until one month ago that Atlanta found out that it would host this celebration, and Execution Officials have done their best to make it a success. One topic of debate for the past month has been the method of execution to be used. Originally, the conventional electric chair was suggested, but the Execution Officials eventually decided on a hanging, much the same style as the executions earlier in Georgia's history.

"I spoke to Juan Moregone earlier today and here, on tape, is what Mr. Moregone had to say:

Reasonless: "Mr. Moregone, how does it feel to be the center of such a large celebration?"

Moregone: "Don't let them kill me!"

Reasonless: "Uh, well, then, do you have anything to say to our viewers?"

Moregone: "Don't let them kill me!!"

Reasonless: "Well, tell me Mr. Moregone—Do you regret your criminal actions?"

Moregone: "PLEASE DON'T LET THEM KILL ME!!!"

"Well, as you can see, Mr. Moregone was quite excited about this afternoon's festivities, and there was much to be excited about. In fact, the most exciting part of the afternoon occurred at about one o'clock when the parade stopped at the corner of Main Street and Fifth Avenue and Juan Moregone stood up in the open-top limousine that was transporting him and shouted 'PLEASE DON'T LET THEM KILL ME!!!" He was immediately ordered to get down or he would be shot. He obeyed and the parade continued calmly. The rest of the afternoon went completely on schedule and at exactly 3:18 PM, Juan Moregone, convicted in January, 1975, for robbing a corned beef sandwich from an Atlanta delicatessen, was hanged. This is Harry Reasonless in Atlanta."

"And this is Howard K. Smutt in Washington saying, Isn't it nice to know that our criminals are being sufficiently punished? Good night for ABC News."

Invisible Hitchhikers

By MARY KEANE

Even though there is an improved busing system operating on campus, there are still many people who must rely on hitchhiking. This is true particularly for students who live in areas not yet serviced by the new transit system, or who must leave campus at times when buses are not running.

Hitchhiking poses problems for both drivers and hitchhikers. Partially because of poor street lighting and partially because of styles of clothing, it is often almost impossible to see people in the road at night. On a foggy night, even a most cautious driver may not see a hitchhiker until he's less than ten feet away. North Pleasant Street, in particular, is narrow, slippery, and in general is less than adequate as a main traffic artery. While it is a frightening experience for a driver to suddenly have to swerve to avoid someone that five seconds later he might have hit, it is equally upsetting to stand in the fog and rain and wonder if the next driver needs glasses or new headlights.

The problem of invisible hitchhikers may gradually be alleviated by continued improvements in busing and by the institution of clearly marked pick-up stations for hitchhikers. Although these improvements should be coming soon, there are some simple and practical ways to avoid accidents until then.

It almost goes without saying that drivers should be particularly aware of people in the road, especially on unlit roads and in places they would normally anticipate seeing people thumbing.

Hitchhikers can do two things to avoid causing traffic confusion. First and most obvious is to seek thumbing spots that are well-lighted and spacious enough to allow drivers to pull over without causing a pile up. Secondly, hitchhikers could make themselves more noticeable by wearing some kind of reflective clothing. Blue jeans and air force jackets just don't make it with drivers' rods and cones. Any number of things—white gloves, white shirts, a scrap of an abandoned day-glo poster, or (distracting as it might sound) a small, hand-held mirror could help hitchhikers become visible.

Next time you're driving, don't think your hallucinating those shadows that don't quite look like trees. If you're thumbing, think about whether or not you can be seen. If you want to pick someone up or get picked up, you don't want to need a stretcher to do it.

Letters To The Editor

Life Begins Before Egg Meets Sperm

To The Editor:

Russ Sether is right: there has been a lot of nonsense lately in the Collegian about abortion. However, not even he has straightened it out.

The thing that gets me is all these people saying life begins with the meeting of the egg and the sperm, when it is obvious to any moral Christian that life begins before the meeting of the egg and sperm.

Doesn't the sperm continue to live after it leaves its producer? Doesn't the egg accept the sperm regardless of the wishes of the woman who produced it? This should convince all but the feebleminded that eggs and sperms represent human life independent of the men and women who produce them, and these people, then, do not have the moral right to deny continued life to their products.

The conclusion, too, is obvious. A truly moral person will spend as much time fucking as his health allows. We must do what we can to insure the continued life of our eggs and sperm. The inconvenience resulting is clearly nothing compared to the value of independent human life.

What if Einstein's parents were selfish enough not to fuck on the fateful day (or night) back in 1878? We would today be denied the theory of relativity and all of its benefits. And if Pasteur's parents had been mad at each other throughout 1822? The germ would never have been invented.

And if you wish to reject any of this, think about where you'd be today if your parents hadn't realized their duty nine months before you were born? Think about that!

The moral of the story, as I see it, is that it really doesn't do to distort others' moral views. We can discuss our positions, and maybe, if I'm lucky and clever enough, I can show you that your stand on abortion contradicts other views that you hold stronger, and bring you over to my side. In the end, however, you may still feel the fetus to have rights that you have the responsibility to defend (as proponents of child labor laws feel they have to defend the rights of children who would otherwise not speak out for themselves) at the cost of the mother's freedom. And I'll probably still feel that we've got enough to do worrying about rights of people who are already born. And only the facsimile of democracy that we have will decide who gets the right to live by his own morals.

Rights For Fetuses

To The Editor:

In accordance with the demands of the right-to-life advocates, that fetuses be recognized as people and given the rights thereof, I submit the following proposals:

1.) All fetuses shall be included in the federal, state, and local censuses. To determine if the conception of a person has taken place, all sexual acts between all persons of child producing age shall be reported to the town clerk and recorded. Failure to comply shall be punishable by fine or imprisonment.

2.) All women engaged in sexual relations shall submit to a menstrual check, by a doctor or a clinic, to determine if a fertilized egg has been expelled and the death of a person caused.

3.) All persons conceived outside of the United States must bring conception papers to the Department of Immigration and Naturalization to be allowed entrance to this country. Persons not conceived in this country must apply to be recognized as naturalized citizens, and will have alien status unless they pass the required naturalization test.

4.) Fetuses may sue and be sued for death, negligence, or wrongful injury; in the event of conviction, imprisonment or fine shall not be levied until after birth.

5.) Autopsies on all fetuses must be performed to determine cause of death; a death certificate must be completed in the usual manner and filed with the town clerk.

6.) Life insurance companies shall be directed to develop an affirmative action program designed to give full coverage to unborn persons and their possessions.

Compliance with the above regulations will be strictly enforced in order to compile accurate population statistics which will be of utmost importance in calculating state and federal aid to towns and cities; school and housing projections, and town planning.

Boycott Handi-wrap

To The Editor:

There are 165 courageous people at the Dow Chemical plant in Bay City which has been on strike for 14 months. They would like to enlist the aid of your newspaper and members of the student body so that we may survive. Dow Chemical is using its unlimited resources in an attempt to destroy us economically and eliminate the collective bargaining process of our Local Union which is 14055 of the United Steelworkers.

Many workers and their families have suffered unlimited hardships in the loss of income and personal property which they have had to sell in order to feed their families because Dow Chemical refuses to resolve an unjust labor dispute provoked by Dow Chemical and its local management.

In the interest of humanity we ask that you print this letter in your college paper and that the student body aid us by refusing to buy Handi-wrap plastic food wrap and Ziploc bags which are made at the Bay City plant.

If there are individuals or groups on campus who would like to aid us in this humane endeavor, please contact me at the address which is given below. We request that they boycott the above mentioned products which are produced by Dow Chemical in Bay City and by any other aid or activities which may aid our cause.

Meaning Of Murder

To The Editor:

In regard to the recent abortion issue: I feel that abortion is the termination of a human life. I also feel, however, that since man was given a free will and the intelligence to use it, he should come to that conclusion himself. What pisses me off are the people against abortion who try to run around and shove it up everybody's ass.

"But how do you condone murder?" the holy freak screams over a table in the Campus Center.

If I have not committed a murder, then I have nothing to condone. I value my free will highly, simply because I think it will be the only thing left of me after I'm dead and although I'm against abortion, I cannot knowingly usurp another's free will, for is that not a definition of murder?

TM Is Not Religion

To The Editor:

I do not wish to dispute Mr. Imperato's views on religion presented in his M.D.C. editorial on Monday, March 12. He is certainly entitled to his opinion on the subject. But I would like to answer one question he raised: "Doesn't Transcendental Meditation (TM) fill the same void as Buddhism, Islam, or Christianity?" The answer is No.

As Mr. Imperato pointed out, TM is a physiological process, but this process has effects exactly opposite to those implied in his editorial. The purpose of TM is not to transcend human activity, but rather to increase the ability to act efficiently. TM provides the meditator with deep rest. When a person is rested he thinks more clearly; clear thought leads to efficient action. Through regular practice of TM we naturally find that we are using progressively more and more of our full potential in activity. This enables the meditator to deal with the problems of everyday life on his own level, without reliance on a guru or celestial super-power.

In short, TM is not a religion but a scientific technique. Once the technique is learned, beneficial results begin to appear immediately, not through divine intervention but through a scientifically verifiable process.

Old Age Vs. Pregnancy

To The Editor:

This letter is in reply to Russ Sether's "proposal" to Exterminate Old People which appeared in Monday's Collegian.

First of all, Mr. Sether, I am dismayed to find that you think there are so many younger people who hate the elderly. I have not seen the evidence to confirm that such a prejudice exists. A majority of the neglect is due to our government and the manner in which society is structured. I am sorry that you do not enjoy the presence of older people in this country. Personally, I frequently prefer the company of older people to that of some women and men my age.

Secondly, your analogy between the issue of senior citizens and the issue of abortion is absurd, bordering on the ludicrous! How can you rationalize the comparison of a human being who has existed on this earth for decades to a cluster of cells inside a uterus! Someone who has been living for sixty years or more dealing with emotions and a conscience can hardly be classified in with a fetus having minimal, if any, perception of the world surrounding it.

In referring to your letter you stated: "Just as we never ask for a pregnancy when it occurs suddenly contrary to our personal planning, we never ask for the bickering and self-righteous interference of Old People."

1) Who is WE, Mr. Sether????? I am amazed that you feel justified to group yourself under WE with expectant women! There are many women who are not qualified to empathize with the dilemma of an unwanted pregnancy, yet you are at liberty to do so? Until anyone, woman or man, has had to deal with their own conscience and that of society in this situation, they should not feel justified in airing their "opinion" on abortion. As a woman was quoted to have written to the Pope in a letter:

"You don't play the game; you don't make the rules!"

2) Again, your analogies are ridiculous! To compare the physical and emotional anguish of an unwanted pregnancy to the bickering of an elderly person is incredible! Have you, Mr. Sether, ever woken up with morning sickness so nauseous that you spent most of the day gagging and vomiting your insides out? Or perhaps you become so emaciated and dehydrated after four continuous weeks of this little "morning ritual" that you can no longer sit up in bed? And even if you do feel like eating on some rare occasion you've lost so much weight (ten to twenty pounds) and your stomach has shrunk so much you really can't eat a meal. And then, of course are the back aches and breast swelling to mention a couple of side effects. No, Mr. Sether, these are conditions I would not wish for the most adamant protester of abortion. You see, there is a hell of a lot more to an unwanted pregnancy than the moral question. Few people think of that because their views are based solely on nice clean theories about what life is. Life is beautiful under the conditions one designs for it however, when there is an unwanted fetus, believe me, this is hard to consider as life!

I would like to suggest that the only people who should have the authority in dealing with the abortion issue on ANY level are:

1) those who have dealt personally with an unwanted pregnancy; and

2) those who are willing to support the right of a human being, and in this case, a woman, to deal with issues concerning her own body.

Issues such as pregnancy and abortion are not to be discussed and acted on in an objective manner! Their experience and consequences are purely subjective!!!

Look Before You Leap At 'For Sale'

By RICHARD M. HOWLAND

Spring heralds so many bright opportunities and prospects that each of us exhibits a tendency to explode in trusting optimism at every salesman's insinuating pedicel. The mind boggles at the scope and a variety of bounteous goods, services and pleasures for which one may freely contract with a witless smile, 18% interest (and your parents' signature).

It is said that in only eight days nearly all the world can be explored, luxury bestowed and enjoyed and a summer tan effected. In addition, you can cook every variety of vegetable in a Teflon paradise, sleep between 40 separate linen sheets, dry yourself with terry cloth madness and exude the odors of a hundred flowering plants for only $5 down and 400 payments thereafter.

Before signing any agreement or paying money to any person for a future receivable, whether it is a good or a service I urge you to check on what you are doing.

You should know:

1. Whom are you dealing with?
   a. Ask for solid identification not just a printed card:
   b. Where is the company located; and
   c. Where can this agent be reached and when.
2. What are you paying in reality:
   a. What is the cash price?
      1) Is there a discount for cash outright?
   b. What is the finance charge?
      1) In dollars; and
      2) In percentage?
   c. Is there a penalty for prepayment?
   d. Do the payments increase later?
   e. If you don't get the merchandise at first, how much must be paid before you do receive it?
   f. Are all the details spelled out clearly in a written agreement with no unfilled blanks?
   g. Does the agreement specify your right to cancellation at any time or at certain times?
3. What are you buying?
   a. If travel: where are you going; where will you stay; how will get get there and back; what do you have to do (visas, entry permits, passports etc.); what are the guarantees (demand written guarantees) and what happens when there is no return flight?
   b. If merchandise: what does the contract say you are getting; when; what quality; quantity; size; shape; material; how delivered; by whom; at whose expense; what happens when the goods are defective?
   c. Do you now know that you need what you are ordering?
   d. If a subscription or "club": what are you guaranteed to receive; who can substitute what; what must you buy to fulfill membership requirements; what if you change your mind?

Sometime ago, a student asked me to relieve him of a 90-year subscription to a photography magazine, a sports magazine and something else on which he had paid for three years. I doubt there would have been a problem if he had considered the odds on the continued existence of either himself or the publishers before signing this incredible agreement.

A group of women (several hundred) a year or so ago each individually ordered enough sheets, pillow cases and towels to open a motel which came in a cedar chest presumably after they returned from a "free" trip to Florida (for which they paid travel). There were 20 single bed sheets, 20 double bed sheets, 40 or so pillow cases, 20 bath towels, 10 bath sheets, wash clothes, sundries and free perfume to listen to the sales pitch. The contract said it was "non-cancellable and no refunds made". There are very few people at this University who legitimately anticipate the need for so many sheets and towels, even in 10 years. That alone should have stopped the salesman. All the contracts were revoked because of the non-cancellation clause which violates Massuchusetts law.

In Massachusetts you have the right to cancel a contract entered into at a place other than the salesman's home office or regular office (for instance in your dormitory) if the amount to be paid is more than $25 in four or more installments provided you give written notice postmarked within three business days of signing it.

Last year several travel bargains were offered on written contracts that looked grand. However, the contract specified "Round trip from Boston" and didn't indicate or have a space to fill in that said to where the trip was going! Ultimately it didn't even leave from Boston but instead left from Philadelphia. The promised hotels were cancelled and the whole mess nearly ended up sleeping bags (which would have been okay in Bermuda except unlawful). Furthermore, there was a last minute assessment due to under subscription which if unpaid meant you both could not go nor receive a refund.

Most of these problems can be avoided by demanding answers to the sensible questions you should have and demand them in writing from the principal company. If you don't get the answers or don't like them, spend more money on a more certain agreement or don't go. I realize that the prospect of paying a higher price at the outset is unpleasant, but usually the reputable operation stands behind its terms and the super opportunities turn out to be super rip-offs.

Of course, if you find yourself locked into a bad situation, whether you followed my suggestions or not, my office will help you salvage whatever I can. I think, though, that if you use some of the suggestions you will find that you won't need anyone's help and that it will work out the way you expected and demanded.

'Father, Son, Woman' To Premiere Here

The W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies will present The Black Repertory Theatre in a production of Fella Davis' "Father, Son, Woman" Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 3 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

This is an American premiere and the first attempt by the company to mount an African play.

"Father, Son, Woman", a Nigerian play, is directed by Esther Terry, a member of the DuBois Department. The play is about the internal conflicts of a Nigerian king, his son, and a captive princess as well as the resulting effects of a family crisis upon an entire kingdom. Because of the ritualism involved, some of the Nigerian students at the University have helped the members of the company to obtain a basic understanding of some traditional Nigerian customs. Costumes are as nearly authentic as the company could make them. Most of the costumes have been supplied by Nigerian students.

Tickets, $1.50 for students and $2 for non-students, may be purchased at the box office in Bowker Auditorium. Reservations may be made by calling 545-2149.

Matteos To Speak Saturday

The Party of African Independence of Guinea and the Cape Verde Islands (P.A.I.G.C.) Support Committee at UMass today announced that Salahudine Omawale Matteos will be on campus Saturday and Sunday to discuss Cape Verdean history. The test of the statement appears below:

P.A.I.G.C. was formed in 1956 in Guinea by Amilcar Cabral (a Cape Verdean assassinated on Jan. 20, 1973, in Conakry, West Africa). This Party was formed with the intentions of achieving the liberation of Angola, Mozambique, Guinea and the Cape Verde Islands from Portugal. To the time of Cabral's assassination, three-fourths of Guinea had been liberated.

A group of Cape Verdean-Africans have formed a P.A.I.G.C. Support Committee here at UMass. This Support Committee has been formed throughout the United States to unify our brothers and sisters by developing an awareness of the present and future conditions of the armed struggle.

Salahudine Omawale Matteos, a Cape Verdean-African who worked closely with Amilcar Cabral and the P.A.I.G.C., recently spent two years on a fact-finding mission to West Africa, doing research on Cape Verdean history and the African way of life. We, as Cape Verdean-African students, are proud to announce that Salahudine Matteos will be on campus on March 17 and 18 to discuss Cape Verdean history and our part in the P.A.I.G.C. The time and location will be posted later this week. We sincerely hope that all our brothers and sisters will meet with him and actively participate in the Support Committee. The following is our Letter of Intent:

"We, as Cape Verdean-African students of UMass, choose to recognize Africa as our cultural and political base as opposed to the imperialistic, colonial government of Portugal. Working from this premise, we feel that through education we will be able to identify with our true heritage politically and culturally, raising our level of consciousness.

"We are presently engaged in the process of uniting the Cape Verdean African student body on campus as to enlighten them to our cultural background and the present status of our people, for only a united people can stand up against an oppressor who has for too long spread the voices of disunity and confusion among our people. With the academic resources made available to us at the University, we plan to educate as many of our people presently enrolled at the University, and to open lines of communications between our association and others connected with the struggle for Cape Verdean independence. It is time that we as a people stop half-stepping and get down to the business of moving our struggle for recognition in the positive direction.

"In light of all this, we view it as imperative that we extend our support to this Party, and all other efforts directed to the liberation of our people. We would also wish to extend our services, morally and physically, if they are needed to help further the cause. "No Pinchta!"

Herbie Hancock To Play UMass

By TOM HICK

Herbie Hancock will appear at Amherst this Wednesday, March 14 at 8:30 p.m. in the Alumni Gymnasium. He was recently named Number One Jazz Pianist on the Down Beat Readers Poll for the fourth consecutive year. His peers in the music industry voted him the 1973 Playboy All-Stars' All-Star Piano over such notables as Oscar Peterson, Bill Evans, and Leon Russell. Michaelangelo Antonioni picked him to compose the soundtrack for the MGM movie Blow-Up. Bill Cosby chose him to score the Fat Albert television special. He spent eight years playing with great trumpeters, three with Donald Byrd followed by five with Miles Davis.

A man of such distinguished accomplishments must truly be renowned in his field and when it comes to jazz, Herbie Hancock is all of that and more.

Herbie's present group includes Eddie Henderson on trumpet and flugelhorn; Benny Maupin, alto flute, soprano and tenor saxes, and bass clarinet; Julian Priester, trombone; Charles "Buster" Williams, bass; and Billy Hart, drums and percussion.

Date: Wednesday, March 14, 1973

Time: 8:30 p.m.

Place: Alumni Gymnasium, Amherst College

Tickets: $3.00 available at Sound Ideas, Amherst, Del Padre, Northampton, Campus Center, UMass, and at the door.

(NOTE: For Amherst students with IDs advance sale tickets $2.00 between East and West dining halls at dinner.)

'Wacky' To Air Bulletins

WAQY, the "Wacky" rock sound of Springfield, has released details of a sponsored on-air college bulletin-board. Announcements of various events and happenings at all area colleges will be aired four times daily, Tuesday through Saturday, at 3:30, 5:30, 8:30, and 11:30. The sponsor of the program will be Anheiser-Busch, brewers of Budweiser Beer. Mail announcements on a card or letter to BUDWEISER COLLEGE NOTES, WAQY, East Longmeadow, Mass. 01028. It is important to address announcements properly and to mail them at least one week in advance of the event to insure that they will be aired on time.

WAQY, 102.1 on your radio dial, is the new 50,000 watt stereo rock station in Springfield.

N.E. Offers Colloq

The Central Area is offering, in addition to their other colloquia, a program in study skills.

David Bluestein, author of the "No Sweat Study Guide", is teaching the one-credit course which will meet at 3:30 p.m. on Tuesday and Thursday in Gorman House, Room 223.

College Recruitment Surveyed

College recruiting this year is continuing on the upswing at mid-season, according to Robert J. Morrissey, career planning and placement director at UMass which is one of the participating colleges in the ongoing salary survey of the College Placement Council (CPC).

The Council's initial report, released in early January, had indicated appreciable increases over the past two years in the volume of job offers being made by business and industrial employers. Two months later, the current report reveals further evidence of a return to the pattern of college recruiting in the late 1960s: students in the engineering and related scientific disciplines are being sought much more vigorously than those in the business, humanities, and social sciences disciplines.

This is particularly apparent at the bachelor's degree level where the volume of offers to technical candidates has advanced 82 percent over the figure of a year ago. In comparison, the number of offers to non-technical students is only 14 percent above last year's total.

Compared with last March, the volume of offers has increased at all three degree levels–at the bachelor's level by 46 percent, master's eight percent, and doctoral 23 percent, though overall volume is still considerably below that of the comparable period in 1969-70, the last year of intensive college recruiting.

The CPC survey is based on offers, not acceptances, made to male students in selected curricula and graduate programs during the normal recruiting period, September to June, as submitted by a representative group of 145 colleges and universities throughout the United States. Three reports are issued each year–in January, March, and July. A report on female students is also underway and will be reported in the near future. Despite the surge in demand for graduates in technical disciplines, the largest number of offers at the bachelor's level is still in a non-technical discipline–accounting, with 1,364 offers. Next are mechanical engineering, 1,000 and electrical engineering, 946. A year ago the order was almost the same: accounting, 1,122; electrical engineering, 541; and mechanical engineering, 524.

In addition to the increased volume, the current report reveals the first evidence in several years of increases above three percent in the average dollar value of bachelor's level offers. Some increases of up to four percent have been noted since the close of last season. Most of the engineering disciplines have experienced increases ranging from 3.5 percent for aeronautical to 3.8 percent for civil.

The top dollar averages at the bachelor's level are in four engineering disciplines: chemical, $954 per month; electrical, $918; metallurgical, $917; and mechanical, $196. Accounting, with a 3.7 percent gain from July, has risen to an $886 average, the same dollar average as for industrial engineering. One discipline not sharing the general upswing is the humanities, social sciences category. It has experienced a 23 percent drop in volume with 138 offers versus 179 a year ago, and its dollar average of $705 is up less than one percent from last July.

MBA candidates with a technical undergraduate degree have attracted average offers of $1,110 per month, the highest average for those master's programs being studied.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Aries women have striking facial features. The eyes of the Aries woman are magnetic, compelling. Gloria Swanson and Bette Davis are but two examples. The Aries man is unique, possessing a mystique which can win and dominate. Warren Beatty and Steve McQueen serve as examples. Man or woman, the Aries individual is independent, original and somewhat of an enigma.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Relationships are intensified. Nothing occurs in lukewarm manner. Romantic interests dominate. Member of opposite sex confides feelings. Be responsive. Your own style and policies are best—don't permit others to alter your principles.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Get down to basics. Leave speculation to others. What is needed now is working room, elbow room—a place not only to hang your hat, but to move about, to make appointments, decisions, to set goals. Libra and Cancer persons are much in picture.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) You can have fun expressing ideas, contacting relatives, settling disputes with neighbors. Sense of humor now leads to sense of fitness, awareness. The sky is the limit. Permit creative juices to flow.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Accent is on finances, personal possessions, what is of value. Be specific about details. Take nothing for granted. Get commitments in writing. Promissory note could be in picture. Study fine print.

LEO (July 23-Aug 22) Lunar cycle is such that you can safely take initiatives. Strive for greater independence, self-expression. Get ideas across in direct, forceful manner. Display qualities of leadership. This pays dividends.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept 22) Face fears. You will be amazed to find that you have number of allies behind scenes. Family member who seemed to drain you does about-face. You will be appreciated, flattered and loved. That's cause for celebration!

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You learn truth about hopes, friends, ultimate goals. Key is to face facts as they exist. Otherwise, you waste time and drain emotional resources. Pisces is in picture. Be selective. Don't sell yourself short.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Valuables, aspirations, ambitions—these are spotlighted. Sense of direction is sharpened. Some sacrifice may be necessary. However, you are going in right direction. There is room for you at more elevated position.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You "find" yourself. You come to terms with yourself. You know yourself and you are yourself. And this makes you more attractive to others. You gain added recognition. People are drawn to you. You are going to be happier!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): New deal where finances enter picture—this is highlighted. Mate, partner wants account. Be cooperative without giving up independence. Intensified relationship gives you new lease on life. Give and you also will receive. Leo is in picture.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Maintain low profile. Withhold final judgment. Special agreement is on agenda. Heed inner voice. Desires are subject to change. If you commit yourself prematurely, you suffer pangs of regret. Time is on your side.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Key now is to be flexible. One who shares your work, interests, requests a change. Go along with it. Granting a small favor now could lead to substantial repayment. Sagittarian plays prominent role.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are creative, analytical and you soon will have more freedom to engage in creative activity. August could be your most significant month of 1973. You draw to you many individuals born under Gemini and Virgo. You would be wise to develop your natural ability to write.

McWade And Syer Lead Skiers To Championship

The combined New England Intercollege Ski Conference Championships and the National Intercollege Alpine Tournament Races were run at Wildcat Mt. in Pinkham Notch on March 7 to 11 in fog, in rain, and on frozen and salted slush. Downhill practice was scheduled for Wednesday and Thursday and high speed practice downhill runs were made on those days with spring skiing conditions prevailing. At noon on Thursday before the nonstop runs the Competition Jury and the Technical Delgate decided that the snow could not be well enough prepared for a safe downhill race, and a long fast giant slalom was set by Coach Don McBrien of B.U. and salted on Thursday afternoon. Coach Bill MacConnell and the UMass Ski Team applied 95 pounds of calcium chloride to a slushy course smoothed out by other racers and coaches. Friday was warm and spring skiing conditions prevailed, but the race course was hard and fast.

Nearly half of the racers apparently thought they still had a downhill, went all out, and either did not finish or were disqualified. Bob Morrow of Northeastern won the race with a two run time of 207.41 seconds. Bob Singer of Dartmouth was second with a 207.80 while his teammate Tim Miner was third with a 208.58. Each team skied six men, the best four to count, and since about half of the racers either did not finish or disqualified the team results were a shambles. Little Babson College from Boston skiing only five men was first with a total four man time of 925.61, UMass was second with 929.35, Boston U was third with 935.00, Northeastern was fourth with 973.03, Merrimack was fifth with 977.69, Amherst was sixth, Dartmouth seventh. New England College was eighth, U. Maine, Farmington was ninth, St. Anselm's was tenth, and University of Wisconsin was a game eleventh. The longest G.S. Wisconsin had ever skied in before was 30 seconds so they had some trouble with a 2 run G.S. with over 100 seconds in each run.

On a team basis everything was inverted; powerful Dartmouth was 114 seconds out of first place, New England College, 123 seconds out and U. Maine with a very strong team was 133 seconds out. The more conservative southern New England schools were out front and the powerful snow country schools had to play catch up ball; but how to catch up over 100 seconds in two remaining ski races.

At the end of the day Friday Colby Bent, the Dartmouth coach, set a second long G.S., the racers smoothed out the wet snow, and Mother Nature cooperated by freezing it up over night. Saturday stayed cold and a long fast G.S. was held, and the strong Northern schools made good use of it. The UMass team decided to ski conservatively and protect their lead. Dartmouth finished first with a team time of 957 seconds, U Maine was next with 964, N.E.C. was third with 996, and UMass was fourth with 998 seconds. Babson put themselves out of it with 1072 seconds. Other schools in theorder of finish were Amherst, N.U., Merrimack, Babson, B.U., St. A's and Wisconsin.

In their game effort to catch up Dartmouth gained 41 seconds on the conservative UMass. Bob Singer of Dartmouth placed first with a two run time of 233.40, Steve Hodgkins of U. Maine was second with 239.23, Lelane Stacey of Dartmouth was third with 239.58. U. Maine gained 33 seconds and N.E.C. 7 seconds. Barring a disaster for UMass it looked like the championship was in the bag, but the next race was a slalom and disaster is always at your elbow in slalom. UMass again elected to play it safe while Dartmouth, Maine and N.E.C. had to go for it. Going into the slalom UMass had 185.0 percentage points, Dartmouth 179.6, U. Maine 177.4, B.U. 177.1 and N.E.C. 175.0.

Sunday was very warm and the snow was again salted on the top part of the Wildcat trail where the slalom was located. Bob Morrow of N.U. won the two run slalom with 87.1 seconds. Lex Scourby of N.E.C. was second with 91.1, Mike Waddle of U. Maine was third with 91.2, Leland Stacey of Dartmouth was fourth with 91.3, while Dick McWade of UMass was fifth and Steve Tonelli of the same school was sixth. Kurt Syer was eighth and Dave Rutter was seventeenth to round out the UMass four who won the race with a total team time of 376.7 seconds. Dartmouth was second with 377.8, U. Maine was third with 379.0. In spite of playing it safe to win the championship, UMass won the race and placed all six men inside the top thirty.

The combined team results determined the New England Intercollege Ski Conference Championship and the National Intercollege Alpine Tournament, and the UMass Minutemen won them both by solid team performance over three days of racing.

In the combined individual results Lex Scourby of N.E.C. was first, Bob Singer of Dartmouth was second, Dick McWade of UMass was third, Chris Green of N.U. was fourth and Kurt Syer of UMass was fifth.

For the series of three races UMass amassed 280.8 percentage points, Dartmouth 275.1, U. Maine 272.6, Northeastern U. 265.91, B.U. 258.7, Merrimack 258.4, Babson 256.6, Amherst 254.9, N.E.C. 246.5, St. Anselm's 281.6, and Wisconsin 217.15.

It was too bad that warm weather and rain forced the cancellation of the downhill race because Wildcat Mountain had groomed the Wildcat trail so that it was immaculate for that event.

Red Sox Cage Tigers, But Lose To Astros

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP)-Orlando Cepeda drove in three runs with a homer and a single as Boston's designated hitter Tuesday and the Red Sox split a pair of exhibition games about one-hundred miles apart.

Cepeda, who has four hits, four RBIs, two walks and a sacrifice fly in four exhibition games, unloaded in a 7-2 victory over the Detroit Tigers at Lakeland.

The Red Sox, who agreed to split their squad to play the Tigers, didn't fair so well at Cocoa, collecting only four hits and dropping a 4-3 decision to the Houston Astros.

At Lakeland, Reggie Smith and Tommy Harper also hit homers against the Tigers who originally had an open date. Smith, Cepeda and Duane Josephson had two hits apiece in a 10-hit attack.

Rookie Steve Barr blanked Detroit on one hit for three innings pitched. Dick Pole allowed two hits, including a two-run homer by John Gamble in the middle three innings, while veteran Bob Veale checked the Tigers on one hit the rest of the way.

At Cocoa, the Red Sox had to play catch up as young Mark Bomback, a nonroster pitcher from Fall River, Mass., was nicked for two first inning runs on a walk, a two-out double and throwing error by shortstop Juan Beniquez.

Rookie Rick Burleson hit a line homer over the left field fence for the Red Sox in the fifth, but Houston added two more runs in their half of the inning on a walk and Cesar Cedeno's long homer off Bill Lee.

The Red Sox scored two unearned runs in the sixth on a couple of walks, two errors and a single by Rico Petrocelli, but were checked the rest of the way.

The Red Sox, now 4-3 in preseason action, travel to Daytona Beach Wednesday for a game with the Montreal Expos. Boston Manager Eddie Kasko named Marty Pattin, Lew Krausse and Ken Tatum to share the pitching.

J.V. Hockey Finish 7-7-1

BY JAY LUPPOLD

"I feel that we accomplished what a junior varsity team is designed to do and that is to find out who can do the job and who needs more development"-Coach Russ Kidd.

That just about sums up this past Junior Varsity hockey season in which the JV's compiled a record of 7 wins, 7 losses, and 1 tie.

It took the team close to 2/3 of the season to put everything together, after trying to cope with sickness, and the varsity shuffling players back and forth, an ever-present malady for any junior varsity squad.

The turnaround came Feb. 17 against the JV team from Harvard, where UM tied the supposedly superior Crimson 5-5. The Minutemen went on to finish the year out with three very impressive wins over Boston State, Boston College, and Yale.

As for the player development, Coach Kidd feels that he had at least three players tabbed for future use on the varsity squad for next year.

Steve Dee and Dave Alesandroni shared the scoring honors on the team with 17 points each. Dee tallied 10 goals with 7 assisty, and Allesandroni scored 7 goals along with 10 assists.

SCORING	G	A	TD

Alex Johnson Presenting New Image

(AP)-Alex Johnson, who has had a reputation as a malingerer, is hustling to show the Texas Rangers that he can regain the form he had in 1970 when he won the American League batting championship.

Johnson, obtained from Cleveland, arrived at the training camp of the Rangers over the weekend and Manager Whitey Herzog said he is planning to use the slugger as a designated hitter.

Johnson said, "My image probably isn't too good. That's a reflection upon the inefficiency of the sports system. It's difficult to defend yourself. But I get my satisfaction from playing well. That's what I want to do r "hat's what I'm here to do."

Johnson and Ranger owner Bob Short reached agreement over the telephone on salary terms after Johnson held out against the Indians.

Johnson said of his problems with Cleveland: "Let's just say it boiled down to money. That's all I want to say about it."

Willie Still The Greatest

COCOA, Fla. (AP)—Leo Durocher still believes Willie Mays is the finest baseball player ever to swing a bat, wear a glove or steal a base. Now he thinks he may have another Willie.

"Cesar Cedeno is better than Mays was when I first managed Willie with the Giants in 1951," says Durocher. "At 22, Cedeno has the same great qualities.

"Few baseball managers are fortunate enough to handle one Willie Mays in their lifetime," he said. "Now I have at least some chance to manage two of them."

Willie is pushing 42, a gimpy-legged veteran with the New York Mets who is deciding whether to keep playing. He has a .304 lifetime average and 654 home runs, but not much steam left. Meanwhile, the vibrant Durocher is managing the Houston Astros in his 49th year of professional baseball. He turns 67 in July.

Leo has a word of advice for Yogi Berra, manager of the Mets, if Mays decides he is physically able to play at major league velocity. "If Mays could play half the time, just 75 games, I'd have to put him in my lineup. If he's physically fit and adequately rested, Willie can still perform like a 20-year-old. He'll beat people in a dozen ways."

Durocher sees many of the Mays traits in the 6-foot-2, 190-pound Cedeno, a native of the Dominican Republic who hit .320 last year with 22 homers, 83 runs batted in and 55 stolen bases.

"Like Willie, he has the five things needed to make what I call a superstar," Durocher said. "He can hit, hit with power, run, throw and field. There's nothing else to ask."

Durocher, working with the eagerness of a rookie, forecasts bright things for the Astros. If hot-hitting Bob Watson works out in a shift from outfield to catcher, Durocher says, "Houston will have the best hitting team in the National League."

"We're solid," he said. "My mouth waters when I think of the lineup that's possible if Watson can catch for us. It'll have everything-speed, power, and average."

UMass Snubbed in YanCon Picks

By MARTY KELLEY

From the Desk of Jack Leaman - The Boyden party line in front of him kept ringing for most of the afternoon. Transfer Joe Artime was in to nag him about a scholarship loan. It was 2 o'clock and still he was unsure of practice space for his NIT team. Yet Jack Leaman smiled through the frustrating proceedings of a typical day in an NIT week. But his face was slapped again. This time it was the All-Yankee Conference selections, and he held his calm no longer. I can't blame him a bit....

Accolades such as being selected to an All-Conference team may measure the competence of the man, but often hides the performance of the system. And in this sporting vein, Jack Leaman was robbed, both politically and statistically. Al Skinner repeated as an All-Conference choice, but as you gaze at the rest of the two team field, you have to wait for Minute...Man.

"How can a championship team have but one man (Skinner) on the All-Conference team and none on the second team?" asked Leaman. "It's got to be political. Either someone's underestimating our program or I just did one helluva job of coaching. I wouldn't trade our backcourt (Pitino and Endicott with a touch of Burke) with anyone. We proved on the floor that we can win in places that no one else has (Orono, Me.)."

If I were Leaman, I wouldn't have a helluva lot of respect for the rest of the coaches in the Yankee Conference. For it's those statistical crazed fools who obviously look at the scorebook to pick their squads. As a matter of fact, not too much deliberation goes into the mass selection process. And that's where Leaman, as well as Billy Endicott, John Murphy, and possibly Rick Pitino get hurt...And on the eve of the NIT, they did...They were overlooked.

Jack Leaman was a winner in the Conference this winter. He did it his own way. But the selections don't bear this fact out. It's high time selectors looked for something more than a guy like Al Weston who as a frosh at UConn, played less than half the season, scored 43 points in a circus matinee with always defensive-minded Boston University, and got on the second team. Against Massachusetts Mr. Weston shot a putrid 5-20 from the field and his Huskies were blown out of the Cage...and early at that.

Yeah, you had your one-on-one stars such as Wayne Morrison, who could do what he wanted on offense at UNH as a frosh, and the playground kids, Kerry Walker and Ken Boyd from BU, those artistic "it's my turn to shoot" players, on the second team. And who beat out John Murphy for a corner? Cal "Weston doesn't give me the ball" Chapman from UConn. Boyd, by the way was injured most of the season. John Murphy wasn't. That's one of the mjor reasons why the Minutemen bought the Conference after New Year's...

And the first team. Well, you knew that Peter Gavett had to make it with a 23-point average. (11 and 12 against UMass in sterling efforts!!!)...But how the hell did frosh Bobby Warner of UMaine slide through? Steve Rowell of Rhode Island? No problem. Choked against UMass at Keaney this season but should be steadier in the ABA next fall. And James Garvin...I suppose he muscled through rebounds to deserve the same recognition that no one could take away from Al Skinner...

Well, if UMass needed individual performers, they sure as hell wouldn't be in the NIT...You see a lot of these All-Conference hacks couldn't play Leaman's game...Nor match his NIT wristwatches...

"Missoura" Coach Respects UMass

By EARLE BARROLL

The number was 882-6656, area code 31. The voice at the other end was long and drawn and Southern. There was no pungency in the verbs. No abrasiveness in the adjectives. The only distinguishing feature was an "a" in place of an "i" when it mentioned its place of residence.

The deliverer was an All-American guard in 1956 at the university he is currently coaching at a top-20 level. In that year and the previous one he captained his team to 16-5 and 15-7 records. His name appears five times in this season's brochure under all-time 30 point-scores.

Saturday night at Madison Square Garden the guy on the other end of the line will finally meet Jack Leaman. And Leaman and a dozen athletes and 5000 UMies will get their first taste of Norm Stewart, the guy who pronounced an "a" like an "i", Missouri like Missoura, and who just happens to be one of the brightest young coaches in the game today.

During the fifteen minute transmission, Stewart followed suit with the other N.I.T. coaches who had gathered Monday afternoon in New York City for their annual "we think the world of each other session".

He said the things you'd expect to hear. Nothing hot and bent on ruffling feathers. If Minnesota's assistant coach can say that his war-machine had all the respect in the world for Rutgers; if Ken Trickey, the Orals Roberts coach, can call his team a sacrifice for North Carolina; then Norm Stewart can say his piece.

He said that he had all the respect in the world for Massachusetts and that he was very impressed with their 12-game win streak, the people they've defeated and their "highlight of the season" verdict over Penn at the Palestra.

"From the reports we've gotten on UMass", he said, "they have a strong defense, play the team concept of basketball, control the tempo of the game and use many players during the course of the game."

He mentioned Al Skinner, comparing him favorably to his own all-American John Brown who made the Olympic team but had to withdraw due to a broken foot. "Both players lend their talents to the team," he said. "They play within the confines of team basketball and are exceptional in so doing."

Stewart's cagers are making their second consecutive trip to the Gardens. Without question he would rather the N.C.A.A., but Kansas State won the Big Eight and thus the trip to the Mid-West Regionals. In the meantime, "We don't look at the N.I.T. as a second choice tournament," he demanded. "It is a very prestigious tourney and we're pleased to be returning."

He described his team as "physical, not tall' disciplined and most of all a good tournament team", alluding to the Tigers' Big Eight and Volunteer Classic wins earlier in the season. In fact, Tennessee, whom Missouri defeated in the finals had won their own tournament something like ten times in 12 tries before this year.

"This is our fifth winning season," he added. "We've played a very representative schedule, traveling to the West Coast, the South, the East and just about every part of the country. We feel that we have a very competitive ball club."

The rhetoric will continue up to tourney time. Maybe the press will be lucky and uncover some controversy that will scar an otherwise unpocked battlefield. Many fingers have probably been crossed when the verbiage has been spouted. Athletes are most likely speaking to the contrary. There are probably a great deal more people saying "Oh, really?".

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — Goalie Eddie Johnston turned in his fifth shutout of the National Hockey League season last night as the Boston Bruins blanked the New York Islanders 3-0.

Johnston stopped 22 shots and the Bruins grabbed a quick lead on first period goals by Wayne Cashman and Ken Hodge. Boston shelled New York goalie Billy Smith with 21 shots in that period and 36 in the game.

Hodge and Phil Esposito assisted in Cashman's 26th goal of the year at 6:12 and then Hodge scored his 33rd on a power play at 10:51.

It stayed 2-0 until the final four minutes when Ferd O'Donnell converted breakaway. That goal was the 321st surrendered by the Islanders this season, an NHL record.

NIT Ticket Correction

8 p.m., Thursday is the deadline for tickets to the NIT. According to Ticket Manager, Wally Novak, the first order of about 4100 tickets is just about depleted and a couple of thousand more are being ordered. Of these 4100 tickets, Novak estimated that 3,000 were students.

Novak said that tickets in all groupings were selling well with an average of 700 tickets per day being sold and that "we expect it to pick up."

As of 3:00 o'clock yesterday afternoon the Campus Center announced that four buses (close to 200 students) had already been filled for the NIT.

Senate Endorses Indians At Wounded Knee

Committee Formed To Study Faculty Union

By STEVE FINE

The Student Senate created a steering committee last night that would try to articulate for students the effect of faculty unionization on University academic policy.

The committee would speak for the student body in the matters of faculty unionization and try to assure that student interests are reflected by University academic policies.

In other action, the Senate voted to telegram its support of the Indians occupying Wounded Knee to Senator George mcGovern (D—S.Dakota), to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and to the Indians themselves now in the South Dakota town.

The motion to create the steering committee came from a proposal by Nick Apostola, Chairperson of the Academic Affairs Committee and Laura Emmons, a member of the committee.

Ms. Emmons said the committee would be empowered to negotiate with the various unions presently seeking to organize the faculty, and both the administration and Board of Trustees.

One example that Ms. Emmons gave on the power of a faculty union would be their ability to negotiate working conditions:

"It is possible for them not only to negotiate conditions such as lighting, but also class size and student participation on faculty curriculum committees."

"One area we think unionization may have an effect on is special programs like BDIC, she added.

Presently, the faculty is in the process of choosing a union to represent them in collective bargaining. The two organizations vying for this post are the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) and the American Association of University Professors (AAUP). A hearing for a collective bargaining agent for the faculty will be held on March 27, and the election will be on April 25.

Ex-Senator Gail Sullivan, co-sponsor of the Wounded Knee bill, said its purpose was to have the Senate take a stand in support of a policy against genocide.

Ms. Sullivan said the Senate is a social action organization and was right to handle political legislation, such as the action passed.

In additional business, the Senate made ramifications in the contract of Student Attorney Richard Howland.

These changes include: (1) making a him an employee of the students rather than the Board of Trustee; (2) making it a breach of contract to receive money for referrals to students lawyers, tow companies, etc. (3) making it a breach of contract to receive money for duties that would conflict with his duties as Student Attorney.

The Senate also passed the budgeting rationales for the Black Students Psychological Association and Ahora.

The rationale of the Black Students Psychological Association, which was defeated by the Senate's Budgets Committee earlier, states the purpose of the group is to help black students interested in understanding themselves. The group believes that in terms of the Black Community Today, "it is imperative that psychology be made more meaningful and attractive to Black Students."

Gilberto Stologo, a spokesman for the "Ahora" group, said that the Ahora's effectiveness had been proved in the past year:

"We have gone out and recruited spanish speaking people for the University and established a spanish speaking TV program over at the School of Education" he said.

In other action the Senate voted to:

—accept the referendum making the election of the Student Government President by electoral college;

—appropriate $1,800 to the Orchard Hill Area Government for the purpose of helping fund an area governments concert to be held April 28; —to permit the purchase of alcoholic beverages by Recognized Student Organizations (RSO).

The Student Senate voted last night to create a steering committee to discuss faculty unionization . . .

. . . and the possible effects that it might have on the students of the University. (MDC Photos by Steve Quigley).

Amherst Town Meeting

$15,000 OK'd For Sewage Improvements

By ED FOGARTY

The Amherst Town Meeting voted to appropriate $15,000 to alleviate the sewage problems of the Leverett Road residents last night. This was a reconsideration of Article 18, which had been defeated in Monday night's Town Meeting.

In other action, the Town Meeting voted to implement the Select Committee on Goals' recommendations; Eric Walgren's proposal for the establishment of a Law Enforcement Study Committee was passed; $87,000 was appropriated to purchase the Elizabeth Ball Cowan estate; and the flying of the UN flag on the Town Common was approved.

Selectwoman Nancy Eddy said that after Monday's vote not to appropriate money for the Leverett Road area, she had received many calls notifying her of a health problem in the area.

A citizen of Leverett Road, Mr. Bell, said at the Meeting that "the eminence of the health problem is very clear." He said that his children often come home mired in sewage overflow.

Carl Winieski of the Board of Health added the likelihood of typhus is increased "a hundred-fold" under these conditions.

The opposition to the proposal said that the sewage line could just as well be run down State Street at a later date if it were necessary. They also questioned the seriousness of the health problem.

Strong feeling was also expressed that the line would draw developers to the area and promote town growth.

A committee was also formed to investigate alternate solutions to the health problem on Leverett Road. The Town will decide according to the committee's findings whether to continue the line up Leverett Road.

After considerable debate the Meeting voted to appropriate $19,500 to hire a part-time coordinator to implement the Select Committee On Goals (SCOG) recommendations.

Robert Garvey, Selectman and opponent to the Article, proposed that the amount be reduced to $5000. "My question with Article 28 is whether the town has the professional expertise without going outside the town."

Garvey advised that the Planning Board be used to implement and coordinate SCOG.

Selectman Michael Sullivan argued that the Planning Board did not have the necessary manpower to handle any more responsibilities.

The use of a paid coordinator would "change the SCOG report from goals to proposals to be brought to Town Meeting for a vote," said a SCOG representative.

Eric Walgren leader of the Tea Party presented to the Meeting an article proposing the establishment of a Law Enforcement Study Committee. The Meeting voted to establish the Committee by a two-thirds majority.

The Committee will search for ways to improve communication between the police and the citizens.

"It is important to have a police not alienated from the society in which they live", said Walgren.

A second article proposed by Walgren to promote better distribution of election information on dates and places of election was defeated.

Walgren pointed out that in the last election, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian never received the press release.

"The mode of notice for people to participate in the Amherst elections is outmoded", said Walgren.

The Meeting voted to fund $87,000 to buy the fourteen acre Elizabeth Ball Cowan Estate off South Pleasant Street.

The house of the estate and 3.5 acres will be sold for not less than $50,000 and the remainder of the land will be kept and maintained by the town as a public park.

A second piece of land along Hurst Road was authorized to be purchased by the Meeting at a cost of $21,500. The estate is expected to reimburse 50% of the cost. The land may be developed or used as a water shed protection area.

After heavy debate as to the merits of the United Nations, the Meeting voted to fly the United Nations' flag on a separate pole on the Town Common. The money for the pole will be supplied by subscription.

TRAIN 'Sign' Raps UN

By NANCY BASMAJIAN

"Get US out! of the UN" reads a billboard on the side of a barn on Route 9 in Hadley.

In smaller print below is the name and address of TRAIN (To Restore American Independence Now), an Ad Hoc committee of the John Birch Society.

The man responsible for this sign locally is Alex Newhall, an active John Birch member who operates a non-commercial reading and research library in Northampton. He had approached area society members in quest of a local conservative willing to provide space for the sign, eventually gaining use of the barn in Hadley.

According to Richard Benoit, a member of the TRAIN Committee, the meaning behind the billboard is that the UN is founded and controlled by Communists, and that it poses a serious threat to the United States. "All people have to do is look into the UN and find out how it's made up and what just it stands for. Check on the charter members. See the people who've structured the charter. The UN charter and the Soviet constitution are just about identical."

Benoit added that there are 375 "Get Out" signs on bus stops in Los Angeles, and countless others are riding on bumpers and hanging on buildings all over the country.

As for reactions, Benoit said, "We ran a poll at the Oklahoma State Fair and 50% said they wanted out of the UN." In Northampton, reactions to the billboard have been varied. "We've gotten everything from 'about time' to 'tear it down,'" he said.

The Ad Hoc train committee has become active in a national campaign to "Get US Out" since Nationalist China was expelled from, and Red China admitted to, the UN.

The January, 1972 issue of the "John Birch Society Bulletin" printed: "And the ultimate function of the United Nations is to serve as the initial framework of a Communist world government, into whose clutches the United States will be persuaded to surrender its national sovereignity and the indivual freedom of its citizens." Comparing the UN to a "Trojan Horse," Benoit agrees that "getting the UN out of the US would be the next thing."

Benoit and Newhall explained that a part of the fear of Communist involvement in the UN is the Red Chinese drug offensive against the United States. They offered documentation of the real source of money from US—Chinese trade–heroin. They further indicated the silence of Nixon and the press on the issue, saying, "We're not Nixon fans at all."

The campaign began in January of last year with the sending of letters, post cards and telegrams to President Nixon, urging him not to make his visit to Peking. Next was the distribution of bumper stickers and billboards, of which the Northampton sign is one. Letters to editors, congressmen, and friends have also been urged. Literature has been compiled, and a book, The Fearful Master: A Second Look at the UN by G. Edward Griffin, has been written.

The distribution of literature and information is Newhall's concern. The library, located at 161 South Street, in Northampton, is used largely for research purposes. According to Newhall, it is a "shoestring operation." It is one in a national chain of libraries, most of which are commercial. The second nearest John Birch Society library is in Thompsonville, Connecticut.

Responding to the idea that being a Bircher in the Five-College Area, he might find himself in hostile territory, Newhall replied, "I'm a former liberal so I'm acquainted with the opposition. My family is from the left —my grandmother was supposed to be a Socialist authoress. My father was a socialist, not very active politically."

Newhall went on to explain the circumstances of his conversion from such a family background into an avid John Bircher. "To prove how liberal I was, I was invited to a Bircher Seminar," at which he argued and then bought literature and several books. At the time he was reading these books, there appeared a press attack on the John Birch Society containing "deliberate distortions" of the same books. Says Newhall, "It astounded me that they (the press) would lie so brazenly. This started me exploring further and further." Eventually, Newhall became a John Birch member adding, "My father wanted to throw me out."

As for response from the local college communities to the John Birch Society, Newhall says, "There seems to be a lot of apathy," but that "more youth are gravitating toward us. We (Birchers) have a lot more young people than expected." He cited the median age in some areas as being 22 years. However, Newhall added "We're incredibly weak here."

The John Birch Society is chartered as an educational association, and has its own publishing house, Western Islands. The Society produces books and pamphlets, and also the works of independent publishers. The John Birch Society puts out a monthly (American Opinion) and a weekly (the Review of the News magazine.

'Grass' Decision Needs Input

By NANCY BASMAJIAN

A legislative committee considering marijuana decriminalization is hoping for more input from Massachusetts residents before making a recommendation.

The Joint Legislative Social Welfare Committee heard from several hundred at a public hearing in Boston March 7.

The hearing was attended by 14 UMass students. Steve Newman, who represents the Committee for a Sane Drug Policy, and who provided impetus for the lobbying effort, said that this "was a disappointment. We rented a bus and only nine persons took it."

The legislation consists of three bills. They would limit enforcement of marijuana laws to the federal government, and would look into ways of distributing marijuana if it is legalized.

Originally there were 500-600 people present. When the marijuana bills came up for consideration 3 1/2 hours later said UMass student lobbyist Brian Maxfield, "There were 50-70 people there."

Backers of the legislation gave about four hours of testimony, preceded by the presentation of an 800-signature petition by Maxfield. Testimony came from Dr. Lester Grinspoon of Harvard and Middlesex County Sheriff John Buckley, who pointed out that by making laws against drug users, they are turned into criminals and eventually lose respect for the law and its enforcers. John Finlater, former deputy director of the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs, also spoke. Said Newman, "They (the committee members) have plenty of information to back the bills, "Maxfield added, "The facts are definitely on our side."

However, Newman did say, "Seven (committee members) were there at the most," and due to frequent roll calls in the legislature, "maybe two or three at a time out of the 21 member committee." Newman continued, "I was surprised. It's the first hearing I've been to."

The outlook for the bills seems to depend upon their popularity throughout the state. After speaking with Alan Sisitsky, state senator from Springfield, Maxfield said, "I spoke to him to try and influence him. He thought it would be political suicide. That was his first reaction. He's not even sure of the merits of the bills."

Due to the lack of committee attendance at the testimony, Newman said, "It sounds like the decision will be a reading of the attitude of the state, not a reading of the information." He further said that any clear indication of the bills' fate would depend upon a strong reaction from the committee members' constituents and that, "I don't think there will be that response."

Newman is opening a branch of the Committee for a Sane Drug Policy in Amherst. Temporary headquarters will be his office in 129A Grad Research Center. He says, "We're always looking for people to help out. For the next three weeks (while the committee considers the bills) the issue is still letters of support to the committee. If they report unfavorably, it's (the legislation) very likely not to be voted on."

13 Indicted At Wounded Knee

By TERRY DEVINE
Associated Press Writer

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (AP) - A federal grand jury returned 13 indictments against 31 persons on Wednesday in the takeover of Wounded Knee. Talks between Indian and government representatives were bogged down by a late winter snowstorm.

U.S. Attorney William Clayton in Sioux Falls said the grand jury had recessed until Monday when it will resume deliberations in the takeover of the village 15 days ago.

The charges specified in the indictments were burglary, larceny, conspiracy and civil disorder. Clayton said no indictments on kidnaping charges were returned although several of the 11 hostages taken during the Feb. 27 takeover testified before the grand jury.

Clayton said the indictments had been sealed and none of those named would be identified until warrants have been served.

He said the arrest warrants would be served as soon as possible regardless of the outcome of talks between the militant Indians and federal authorities.

Ladd To Challenge Student Athletic Fee

By JERRY LAZAR

In a memorandum to the Athletic Council, SGA President Larry Ladd asked the Rents and Fees Committee of the Student Senate to hold public hearings on the athletic fee and its utilization, inviting members of the council and the Athletic Department to justify their use of the student fees.

Ladd also asked the Student Senate to explore means to remove jurisdiction over the fee from the council, "in order to place the fee under the auspices of a group that is responsive and representative."

Ladd introduced a Student Senate proposal at Monday's meeting of the Athletic Council, calling for "a plan to phase out the financing by the student athletic fee of all University intercollegiate sports programs, other than those on a club or intramural level." The proposal was defeated.

Ladd said he will challenge the athletic fee when it comes before the May Board of Trustees meeting.

Paparazzo Sues Two Profs.

By ED FOGARTY

A suit totaling $1.5 million is being sought against UMass professors Ellsworth Barnard and Dana Snyder. Although both are professors (Barnard in English, Snyder in ecology), the suit is unrelated to their faculty positions.

The suit, filed by Otto Paparazzo Associates, charges Barnard and Snyder with "malicious abuse of lawful process," resulting in the loss of "large sums of money." The plaintiff also claims its reputation "has been injured, all to its great damage."

The suit asks $500,000 from each man and $500,000 from the organization which they direct, the Amherst Growth Study Committee (A.G.S.C.).

Otto Paparazzo Associates is constructing the Amherst Fields Development on Belchertown Rd.

Barnard's and Snyder's 'abuse' is an appeal to the State Court of Appeals to reconsider an earlier decision of the Middlesex County Superior Court. The Superior Court had decided on Feb. 17, 1972 that the A.G.S.C. had no legal standing to appeal the decision to the Amherst Zoning Board of Appeals to allow Paparazzo to build.

In a decision of Sept. 30, 1971 the Amherst ZBA had refused to permit Paparazzo to construct. Later, on Dec. 23, 1971, the ZBA reversed its decision and granted Paparazzo permission to build.

The A.G.S.C.'s present appeal is for legal standing so they may file action to stop construction by Paparazzo by appealing the ZBA decision.

John Williams, Paparazzo spokesman, said that the A.G.S.C. was bigoted and the suit was aimed against "out of town construction companies and the name Paparazzo". He claims that local construction companies were not harassed as was Paparazzo.

Barnard said that their action "was not aimed at any one company, but at stopping any construction in the Amherst Area" which would result in commercialization of the area.

"We have taken action against the Hampshire Village Project on Rte. 116", said Barnard. "We found that they had not complied with certain Town by-laws, and have written to the Dept. of Natural Resources."

Snyder said that the town is not able to handle the added demands placed upon the services and resources of the town by the project.

"At the present time the Sewage treatment plant for Amherst is projected to be completed at the earliest by 1976. Paparazzo would add to the town's problems much before this."

The present sewage treatment plant is not able to handle the sewage in Amherst. It overflows regularly into the Mill River.

Snyder added that the development would add considerably to the traffic problem of Amherst and that the project is being constructed near an underground water supply area. No study has been done as yet on the impact of the project on the water supply.

In defense of the Paparazzo project Williams pointed out its interior design. "Our philosophy is to build within the matrix of the community." "The reason that we came to Amherst was that it was a well planned community". Williams felt that Amherst Fields would be welcome by the academic community because of its "good internal design".

Barnard said that he does not doubt that Amherst Fields is well designed internally, "the point is that Amherst does not need another development."

A.G.S.C. expects a decision of their legal standing "around the 20th of this month."

WMPIRG Charges Berkshire Highway Planned

By BILL DENSMORE

The Western Mass. Public Interest Research Group (WMPIRG) Monday renewed charges that a north-south "intrastate" highway is being built in the Berkshire region of the state.

In a letter to Secretary of Transportation Alan Altshuler, the Nader-style consumer organization claims that the Department of Public Works (DPW) has "purchased the four-lane rights-of-way to expand two sections of Massachusetts Routes 7 and 8 near the Connecticut state line."

The letter claims that the DPW has completed "corridor studies" for four lane roads from the Connecticut border to Stockbridge, and from Pittsfield to the Vermont border, joining route 2 at Williamstown.

Altshuler said in a letter to WMPIRG head Ronald Bogard during February that "there is no possibility of a new Interstate highway in western New England," but Bogard claims that Altshuler is toying with semantics and charges that an "intrastate" highway is on DPW drawing boards.

Alshuler, contacted yesterday morning at his home outside Boston said the DPW "certainly hasn't bought any new right-of-way in recent years," although he said the Department may have acquired rights for routes 7 and 8 some time ago.

Bogard's student-funded, Amherst based group issued a report during February which claimed a north-south superhighway "is being planned, approved and built under the guise of 'town by-passes' and 'local highway improvements.'

The group's report claimed that the four lane-improvements in separate locations were part of a new limited access four-lane highway spanning the three states of Connecticut, Vermont, and Massachusetts."

In his letter to Bogard, Altshuler chastizes WMPIRG for not consulting "any of the knowledgeable planning officials of Berkshire County" before issuing their report.

Altshuler's letter said there is no plot and there is no effort to foist a new expressway by stealth upon western New England."

Altshuler said in the letter that federal funding was sought by the Commonwealth last year for western Mass roadbuilding, but that the funds would be used, in part, for an environmental impact statement of roadbuilding in the Berkshire's. He said the funds could be returned to Washington unused if the state exercised a "no-build" option.

Karl Hekler, director of the Berkshire County Regional Planning Commission (BCRPC) said Tuesday night, "I don't believe that there's a conspiracy between Vermont, Connecticut, and Massachusetts," but added that "most of their (WMPIRG) report I'm in agreement with."

According to Hekler, "there has to be a joint decision between Berkshire County and the state" on any road improvements in the region.

He said that if the BCRPC decides to cooperate with the state in asking for more federal funding this year it may "hypothetically say that routes 7 and 8 will be built to Interstate standards."

According to Altshuler's letter former Secretary of Transportation John A. Volpe determined "recently" that a western Mass. four-lane road "would not be eligible for Interstate funding, because Vermont is not improving route 7 to full Interstate standards."

Hekler says that no construction is currently going on in Berkshire county on four-lane roads although a by-pass of downtown Pittsfield is in the final stages and is expected to be approved soon.

According to Hekler the last four-lane construction in Berkshire county took place in the "mid-1950's" on a 2 to 3 mile section of route 7 "near Lenox."

He says that public hearings on the Pittsfield by-pass were held in 1963 and it is expected to be completed by 1974.

"But even that is up for the 'no-bid' option," says Hekler.

UMass-Amherst professor of Geography and Regional Planning said in a report titled "Perspectives on a Berkshire Freeway" last month that neither population figures nor traffic levels on parallel existing routes are sufficient to warrent new road construction.

Dr. Rutherford Platt, Jr., who is also a lawyer with degrees from Yale and the University of Chicago, said in the report that such a freeway "would be totally unjustified from the standpoint of population growth or traffic demand within the region."

In his report, based on recent Census figures, Platt says that between 1960 and 1970 the population of Berkshire County grew by only 4.8 percent, while the state grew by 10.5 percent.

The report said that present traffic volume on routes 7 and 8 "represent something between 'free flow' and 'stable flow' on a rural two-lane road."

Downey Refuses Private Interviews With Media

NEW BRITAIN, Conn. (AP) - John T. Downey, the CIA agent who was released Sunday by the Communist Chinese because of his mother's illness, will refuse to give private interviews to the media, his brother said Wednesday.

Downey was released after more than 20 years imprisonment on an espionage charge.

"Due to the great number of requests for private interviews, either in person or by phone, with John and other members of the family, it is impossible for any to be granted at the present, and there's no intention to conduct private interviews at any time in the future," said William Downey.

"The family have been under great stress and, of course, we are still concerned about our mother," William Downey said.

John Downey, who held a lengthy news conference Tuesday in which he said he told the Chinese about all he knew, was flown from Hong Kong Monday to New Britain General Hospital.

His mother, Mrs. Mary Downey, was admitted to the hospital after suffering a stroke last week, and an appeal by President Nixon resulted in Downey's release.

A hospital spokesman said the 75-year-old Mrs. Downey's condition remained stable Wednesday, and that she was conversing with her family.

"Her condition is still critical and will remain so for some time," the spokesman said.

John Downey, 42, who appeared in robust health, was also a patient at the hospital, where he was undergoing observation and debriefing.

YWCA Working For Women

The YWCA, that staid old lady of women's organizations, is back in the battle for sexual equality.

Consciousness-raising sessions and courses on female sexuality and job discrimination are taking their place beside cooking, exercise and sewing classes at YWCAs across the country.

"We're trying to change the conservative image of the Y, but it's really not a change of interests," says Dr. Claire E. Fulcher, director of the National YWCA Resource Center on Women in New York.

"We've always been concerned about the problems of women. We just want to be more relevant to their needs today."

YWCA officials point out that the Young Women's Christian Association was formed in 1855 to champion the cause of women working in the factories of England. The Y fought protective legislation for women workers in the United States through the 1930s.

Congress Approached

Nixon Asks For Death Penalty

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon asked Congress Wednesday to reimpose the death penalty for certain federal crimes and set rigid guidelines under which it would be applied automatically.

Calling for a massive overhaul of federal criminal laws, Nixon sent to Capitol Hill the sixth in his series of State of the Union reports urging that:

—Stiff minimum sentences be required for heroin traffickers, ranging up to mandatory life imprisonment without parole for repeated big-time drug violators.

—Tighter restrictions be placed on allowing drug traffickers free on bail while awaiting trial or sentencing.

—The "unconscionable abuse" of the insanity defense be eliminated by allowing it only in cases where "the defendant did not know what he was doing."

—The federal government reassert its interest in "protecting our citizens from pornography," although his message gave no specifics on this point.

The tone of Nixon's message was tough, reflecting the content of the legislative package he will start sending to Capitol Hill on Thursday

Decrying "a growing sense of permissiveness' which he said led to rising crime in the 1960s, the President declared:

"The only way to attack crime in America is the way crime attacks our people-without pity."

He asked for immediate congressional action to reinstate capital punishment for such federal crimes as war-related treason, sabotage and espionage, for the murder of federal officials or law officers, for "murder for hire," and for kidnaping and hijacking when death results.

The Supreme Court ruled 5-4 last June that the death penalty was unconstitutional as it was applied under present laws. One of the court's principal objections was that it was being imposed "arbitrarily and capriciously."

After the court's decision, Nixon ordered Atty. Gen. Richard Kleindienst to come up with a statute that would allow capital punishment while meeting the court's objections.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Henry Peterson, who headed the Justice Department effort, predicted that six of the nine justices on the Supreme Court would agree that the proposal being sent Congress by Nixon was constitutional.

Here, according to Nixon's message and Peterson's White House briefing, is how the new statute would work:

After conviction on a capital offense, a jury hearing would be required to determine "the existence or non-existence of certain rational standards which delineate aggravating factors or mitigating factors."

The death penalty could not be imposed if the jury found one or more of these mitigating factors-that the defendant was under 18 years of age, that "his or her mental capacity" was linked to the crime, or that "the crime was committed under duress."

But the death penalty would be mandatory and automatic if the jury found that no mitigating factors existed and that there were one or more "aggravating factors"-such as "a grave risk of danger to the national security," to the life of another person in cases where explosives were used, or the killing of another person in a kidnaping or aircraft piracy.

Peterson said the death penalty would not be applied in kidnaping or hijacking cases in which no one was killed. He explained that the government wanted bargaining power to give a hijacker or kidnaper "a chance to back off" before murdering anyone.

Juries have been required to make a recommendation, but Peterson said there have been no specific legislative guidelines on whether the death penalty should be imposed. With the guidelines written into law, he said, the "arbitrary...indiscriminate use of the death penalty" will be overcome-thus meeting the Supreme Court's objections.

Dean Declines FBI Offer To Testify At Hearings

By JOHN CHADWICK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Presidential Counsel John W. Dean Wednesday turned down an invitation from the Senate Judiciary Committee to testify at its hearings on L. Patrick Gray's nomination to be FBI director. But he said he would answer relevant detailed questions in writing.

His letter to Chairman James O. Eastland, D-Miss., left the next move up to the committee, which invited Dean to appear for questioning by a 16 to 0 vote Tuesday.

Eastland told a reporter he favored accepting Dean's offer. "We can give it a try and see what information we get," he said. "It's better than getting nothing."

But Sen. John V. Tunney, D-Calif., who made the motion to invite Dean, and some other Democrats on the Judiciary Committee termed Dean's offer completely unacceptable.

Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W. Va., the assistant majority leader, took the Senate floor to appeal to the Senate and the Judiciary Committee to stand by the invitation to Dean to appear personally.

Sen. Philip A. Hart, D-Mich., another committee member, said he would support a move to subpoena Dean, but both Eastland and Republican Minority Leader Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania predicted that he could not be compelled to testify.

Dean, in his letter, said that in accord with Nixon's recent statement on executive privilege, "I must respectfully decline the invitation of the committee to formally appear and testify."

Nixon previously had said that no president could allow the White House lawyer to testify before a Congressional committee.

This was a view echoed by Sen. Roman L. Hruska, R-Neb., the ranking minority member of the Judiciary Committee. He said Dean is "the alter ego of the President and for him to appear before the committee would be the same as for the President to be there."

"Suppose the President demanded that the chairman of a Senate committee come to the White House to answer for a vote or a speech," said Hruska.

Eastland said he has no plans at this time to call a committee meeting to consider Dean's letter . He said the committee will resume its hearings Tuesday with further questioning of Gray.

U.S. To Be Rapped At UN

PANAMA (AP)-The U.N. Security Council is opening its special Panama meeting today and the United States is expected to get harsh criticism from several Latin-American nations.

The session is the council's first in Latin America and will provide a first test for John Scali, the newly appointed U.S. ambassador to the United Nations.

Panama invited the council to meet here so its members can see what this country calls U.S. colonialism in the Canal Zone. Other Latin-American countries with anti-U.S. grievances are expected to add their complaints.

Scali and the U.S. delegation were prepared to defend U.S. positions on at least four key points in hemisphere relations:

—Retention of the U.S. naval base at Guantanamo Bay in Cuba.

—Opposition to some Latin-American nations extending territorial rights and controlling fishing 200 miles offshore.

—A proposal that Puerto Rico be given independence.

—The activities of multinational companies, specifically ITT and Kennecott Copper Corp., concerning Chile.

Mexico was also expected to press the United States, France, the Soviet Union and China to ratify the Treaty of Tlatelolco which creates a nuclear-free zone in Latin America. The United States agrees to part of the treaty but exempts the U.S.-owned Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico as being vital to U.S. defense.

POWs: Release, Return

107 Leave Hanoi...

By JOHN BREWER
Associated Press Writer

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP)-A quiet group of 107 U.S. servicemen and a dropout civilian savored their first American meal in years Wednesday after flying away from their North Vietnamese jails.

They gulped down second and third helpings of ice cream sundaes at the windup of a steak and eggs dinner, and many headed for the telephone to place calls to their families in the United States.

As they began undergoing medical checkups, Operation Homecoming headquarters here prepared to welcome more men heading home from Communist prisons.

These are two U.S. pilots being freed Thursday by China and 32 American war prisoners being freed in Hanoi Friday by the Viet Cong.

The American prisoners released Wednesday by North Vietnam in the fourth such turnover were mostly Air Force, Navy and Marine flyers shot down during raids over the North in 1967 and 1968. They were accompanied by one civilian who was imprisoned by the North Vietnamese in 1970 after allegedly hijacking a Thai charter plane and landing on the North Vietnamese coast.

Bobby Joe Keesee, the 39-year-old accused hijacker, ducked welcomers by exiting into a hospital bus through the tail door of the C141 that brought him from Hanoi. The bus whisked him into seclusion at the Clark hospital.

"He didn't want to see anyone until he gets things sorted out," explained his State Department escort.

Two well known pilots were among the freed prisoners. The first, Air Force Col. John P. Flynn, 50, of Shalimar, Fla., was the senior-ranking officer of the POWs and commander in chief of the "Allied Prisoners of War Wing," which the POWs called themselves.

The second, Lt. Comdr. John S. McCain III, 36, of Orange Park, Fla., is the son of the admiral who planned and directed much of the heavy bombing of North Vietnam. He hobbled down the red carpet favoring his right leg.

Though his face was youthful, his hair was white and he had a mouthful of discolored teeth.

"I'm fine," he told a newsman, adding later: "I'll have to have some operations on my leg."

The POWs arrived aboard a trio of specially equipped C141 hospital planes. A military spokesman said the meeting with the North Vietnamese at Hanoi's Gia Lam Airport went ordinally and the men smoothly filed off buses and into the planes. They gave cheers and V-for-victory signs as the plane left Hanoi.

HANOI (AP)-The North Vietnamese officer called out to each group of American pirsoners arrived at Gia Lam Airport for their flight to freedom: "Step forward when your name is called and go home."

One by one they obeyed, 107 U.S. fliers and one American civilian.

They saluted or shook hands with American officers in Hanoi to pick them up and then walked into one of the three U.S. Air Force C141 transport planes that carried them to Clark Air Base in the Philippines for the first stop on their way home.

Only one of the POWs, Lt. Cmdr. John McCain III, son of an admiral, had difficulty getting out of the bus. He walked with a heavy limp but went unaided to his evacuation plane.

The POWs wore loose gray shirts and baggy trousers issued by their captors an hour before. The men seemed tense when they got off the small camouflage-painted buses at Gia Lam. Unsmiling, some with their facial muscles trembling, they lined up and were marched to a roped-off area outside Hanoi's bomb-shattered commercial airport terminal.

A crowd of several hundred North Vietnamese soldiers and civilians stared at them in the glaring noon sun.

Then they walked past the officers of the Joint Military Commission and the International Commission of Control and Supervision.

Only when they spotted the American escort officers did most of the men break into wide grins. Tension and stiffness gave way to relaxation. There was shoulder-slapping, and again and again the words: "My God, it is so good to be back. It has been such a long trip."

None of the prisoners talked to the large crowd of Hanoi-based and visiting newsmen. North Vietnamese soldiers kept newsmen away from the three evacuation planes.

As the POWs were transported from their last detention camp in downtown Hanoi to Gia Lam Airport they drove by scenes of the damage inflicted by heavy B52 raids late last year.

The downtown area was clogged Wednesday morning with a traffic jam of thousands of trucks, carts and and bicycles. Almost all the vehicles appeared to be involved in round-the-clock reconstruction work.

Bomb craters in rice fields near the airport have been filled in and already replanted. Wreckage from railroad cars, trucks, tracks and steel girders are used to repair the damaged roads downtown.

Tempers Rise With Prices...

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Orders from food chains for wholesale beef have shown a sudden decline in the first hint that consumers may be rebelling in large numbers against higher beef prices.

Supermarket industry spokesmen said food chains are ordering less because consumers are buying less, but they cautioned the decline might only be temporary.

At the same time, the Cost of Living Council said it has prepared a detailed study of how livestock and meat prices could be frozen at levels recorded earlier this year.

The food industry's advisory committee, named by President Nixon to watch over food prices, rejected the idea of a meat price freeze after receiving the study, but a spokesman said the idea could be revived at any time.

The National Association of Food Chains, a trade group, said that in a telephone survey last week of 16 food chains, 15 reported they were ordering less beef than before.

A spokesman said the average decline was 3 to 4 per cent, although one chain order was down 10 per cent. He said he felt the decline was significant in reflecting reduced consumer demand.

"But the real question is whether this is going to continue," he added. "A one-or two-week decline is not going to have any appreciable effect on the wholesale market."

The Washington, D.C., division of Safeway Inc., confirmed there was lower consumer demand for beef in its 240 stores in Washington, Maryland, Virginia and Delaware.

Prices are going up," the spokesman said, "and people are looking for substitutes. The consumer is definitely looking around."

Timothy McEnroe, a spokesman for the National Association of Food Chains, warned against jumping to conclusions that the decline in demand would continue or that it would result in lower prices.

He noted that choice cattle were reported as selling for $45.50 per hundred weight at Omaha, a record high, and that choice beef carcasses were selling at 70 cents per pound in Chicago, also a record high.

He said that in order for the consumer to benefit, the lower demand, "has to go all the way back to cattlemen."

...Hopes Rise With Dollar

By ANTHONY COLLINGS
Associated Press Writer

BONN, Germany (AP)-The dollar soared in unofficial trading in Europe on Wednesday, continuing its comeback as preparations went ahead for further international monetary talks.

Treasury Secretary George P. Shultz flew into Bonn from Moscow and consulted his top monetary aide on the eve of his trade and money talks with Chancellor Willy Brandt.

Along with the rebounding dollar, hopes rose that the latest crisis would end when official foreign exchanges reopen Monday after a two-week shutdown.

The key question was whether Shultz would commit the United States to support buying of the dollar to prevent it from falling so low below floating Common Market currencies that European exports to American would be hurt further.

Although it dipped near the end, the dollar closed in Frankfurt at its highest price since exchanges closed March 2.

The final dollar price in Frankfurt bank-to-bank trading was 2.8200 German marks, up from 2.8150 Tuesday. This was above its new equivalent central rate of 2.8158 marks, based on a mark now revalued upward by 3 per cent.

At least some of the dollar's new strength was attributed to growing confidence that the worst of the recent dollar storm was over.

Some of those who had dumped dollars last month were now buying them back, deciding that the time had come to take their profits on the more valuable marks they held.

Meanwhile, the outcome of a second round of U.S.-Canadian European-Japanese talks Friday in Paris remained uncertain.

In London, the dollar improved as the British pound slipped to $2.4645, down from Tuesday's closing of 2.4685.

Gold fever cooled, too, as the dollar began looking better.

London gold closed at $80.50 an ounce, unchanged from Tuesday.

There were other hints of dollar strength.

Silver, platinum, lead and copper-metals which had boomed when the dollar looked weak-slumped further on the London metal exchange.

U.S. stocks continued strong in London.

Boyle Link Sought In Murder Payoff

By GARY MIHOCES
Associated Press Writer

ERIE, Pa. (AP)-Government prosecutors sought Wednesday to link ousted United Mine Workers President Tony Boyle to money allegedly used to pay off the murderers of Boyle's archrival, Joseph A. Yablonski, and Yablonski's wife and daughter.

The prosecution in the trial of William J. Prater, a former field organizer for the UMW's District 19, introduced into evidence two letters sent directly to Boyle asking for a total of $20,000 for union organizing purposes.

The government maintains the money was earmarked instead to pay for Yablonski's assassination.

Prater, 53, of LaFollette, Tenn., is one of two District 19 officials facing state murder charges in the slayings.

Low Cost Abortions Urged

NEW YORK (AP)—The president of the Rockefeller Foundation said on Wednesday that in the wake of the Supreme Court abortion decision, government and the health system must see that early abortions are made widely available at low cost and with a minimum of red tape.

Dr. John H. Knowles, former director of the Massachusetts General Hospital, said that society must take direct action because the free market system cannot be relied upon to provide a safe abortion system.

"Laissez faire may be fine for soap and cars," Knowles said, "but not for health services.

"The free market has not provided accessible services to the poor . . . and it has placed too much emphasis on ability to pay, as contracted with need, as the prime determinant for receipt of these services."

Knowles spoke at a meeting of the national advisory council of Planned Parenthood's Center for Family Planning Program development.

"The public policy objective of making certain that abortions are performed as early as possible requires that abortion be available at low cost with minimum red tape and administrative delay," Knowles said.

Dr. Knowles also said it would be wise to avoid confrontations with institutions which have religious objections to abortions. Alternate facilities should be established, he said, in communities where religious institutions provide the only existing health facility.

"In sum," Knowles said, "the Supreme Court decision offers the U.S. Health system a unique opportunity to demonstrate its ability to respond to social need in a systematic fashion and to enhance its understanding of how to meet societal requirements in other health areas."

State Police Mobilize For Walpole Duty

BOSTON (AP)-Secretary of Human Services Peter Goldmark said Wednesday night Gov. Francis W. Sargent has ordered state police at the Foxboro barracks to mobilize in preparation for taking over at Walpole state prison today.

Goldmark said he was not at liberty to discuss the number of officers the governor had mobilized, but said the governor had told the department to make use of all forces available to control Walpole, which he said could include the calling out of the national guard.

"The problems we are seeing in Walpole are happening at the most difficult section of our correctional system," he said.

"There we have the most difficult inmates and the most rebellious guards."

Goldmark said the decision on whether or not to have the state police enter the prison will be made Thursday morning.

"On the scene will be deputy Commissioner Joseph J. Higgins and Commissioner John F. Kehoe of the Department of Public Safety. Commissioner Kehoe will be in charge of the state police nearby."

Goldmark said Norman Holt, of the state Advisory Commission on Labor Relations and Howard Doyle of the guards' union would be meeting "through the night if necessary to avoid the strike."

"They will either go to work or not, and if not, then a force will be drawn from the Department of Correction and the state police capable of running the institution," Goldmark said.

Goldmark said Corrections Commissioner John O. Boone indicated to him he did not believe tensions among inmates had been heightened at the institution.

Earlier in the day, Commissioner Boone declared a state of emergency at the prison and warned guards they would be fired if they failed to show up for work Thursday.

At the State House several legislators, testifying at a day-long hearing that drew an audience of several hundred prison guards and their wives, pleaded with the officers not to walk off their jobs.

Boone said he declared the emergency "because of an unusually large number of Walpole correction officers reporting sick, along with the serious problems created by trying to operate the institution under abnormal conditions."

He said "delicate negotiations" were continuing with both the guards and the leadership of the so-called inmates' "union," the National Prison Reform Association.

The commissioner said he sent individual telegrams to every guard and staff member at the prison warning them "that unauthorized absence from work will result in dismissal."

He said guards claiming to be sick would have to show medical certificates "of sufficient detail and weight to justify absence during this emergency situation," and absence for "sickness or other family problems" would require special permission from the superintendent.

Dominic Presti, president of the guards union, said at the State House, "We say we'll withdraw all of our forces from the interior sections of the prison and refuse to make contact with the inmates until the situation in there is under control."

He said there was no firm deadline for a walkout, which he declined to describe as a strike, and would not discuss the guards' plans.

Researches Question Link Between Coffee, Heart Disease

BOSTON (AP)—Medical researchers are arguing anew about whether that extra cup of coffee you have today will increase your chances of developing heart disease.

Duke University Medical Center researcher says that the recent Boston University study linking heavy coffee drinking with a high incidence of heart disease is invalid.

Dr. Siegfried Heyden, professor of community health sciences at Duke, said recently that his studies confirm earlier findings that there is no such relationships.

Dr. Heyden's study was published in a German medical journal in December, about the same time as the Boston University study appeared in the Lancet, a British medical journal.

At the time their study was published, Drs. Hershel Jick and Dennis Sloan, associate professors at the Boston University Medical School, said the results of their statistical survey were preliminary and incomplete.

Dr. Jick said Wednesday that a larger study has been completed and submitted to a medical journal for publication. He declined to reveal any of his new data.

"But I can say that in this second, larger study, we were able to take care of many of the deficiencies of the first study," Dr. Jick said.

The first Boston study said that "people drinking more than five cups of coffee per day have about twice as great a risk of having an acute myocardial infarction heart attack as people drinking no coffee at all."

In that much publicized study the Boston researchers compared 276 heart attack patients with 1,104 people in a control group. The researchers ruled out a direct link between caffeine and heart disease because tea drinkers in both groups showed no higher incidence of heart attacks. A cup of strong tea has as much caffeine as a cup of coffee.

The Boston report did suggest an indirect relationship between coffee and heart disease in that "coffee drinking might be a feature of the striving, competitive personality which some research workers believe to be characteristic of those prone to coronary-artery disease."

But no causative link, if any, is known.

In his criticism of the Boston study, Dr. Heyden said, "There's common sense missing in that whole article."

He said 25 per cent of the control group had also suffered from heart disease similar to acute myocardial infarction and could not be used for a valid comparison. Also, he said, the statistics were based on too few people.

This is stretching statistics to a completely undigestible point," Dr. Heyden said. "It only helps to deepen the gap between statistics and clinical medicine."

Students Wanted To Improve Dorms

Volunteers are wanted to complete a team of undergraduates who are involved in a project to improve on-campus living.

Interested students should call the Counseling Center at 5-0333 as soon as possible.

Academic credit is offered to those who participate.

TM Lecture

An introductory lecture is being given tonight at 7:30 in Thatcher Dormitory. Anyone wishing to begin meditation, or simply to learn more about the technique, is invited.

Transcendental Meditation is a simple, effortless technique which its practitioners claim allows any man or woman to reach a state of restful alertness.

Northeast Area

Women's Center Boasts Library, Film Series

By STEVE RUGGLES

After a short debate Tuesday evening, the Northeast Area Government passed a section of the Northeast Area Resource Program establishing an area women's center which will be housed in Lewis.

The idea for the center arose from the recent Women's Weekend. As stated in the proposal, "A realistic beginning for this semester would be a library and referral service in Lewis, and a film and speaker series."

Passed as part of the bill is the creation of a sex education library, and a Women's center co-ordinator's position. A sum of money was alloted for films and speakers.

In other business, the Government set up a committee headed by Sue Howard, to plan the annual "Spring Day in the Quad". At the time of the meeting, plans for the Spring Day were very flexible in light of the Orchard Hill Concert proposal.

Five area colloquia received additional funding. The instructor of the colloquium to train personal adjustment and problem solving counselors will receive a $50 salary, as will the exercise and conditioning, and the wine tasting colloquia instructors. A combined total of $45 was allotted to the interdisciplinary and to the silver smithing colloquia for supplies and tools.

As a result of so few nomination papers being turned in for election of area government officers, nominations are being held open until March 21. Elections will be April 5, with officers assuming their duties on April 16. As of Tuesday evening, only the offices of President and Secretary had candidates. Nomination papers may be obtained from Mike Duffy in Dwight House.

Not Impossible

On Monday, the Athletic Council rejected a Student Senate proposal to "develop a plan to phase out the financing by the Student athletic fee of all University intercollegiate sports programs other than those on a club or intramural level . . ."

Frank McInerney, Head of the Athletic Department, complained that "substantial reductions in the athletic fee means substantial reductions in the athletic program." He said that he could see "no possible way to maintain the level of excellence" of UMass sports, if the fee was to be cut at this time.

However, Larry Ladd, chief spokesman for the proposal, suggested several viable alternatives for the athletic fee, alternatives which should not be ignored. Ladd's suggestions include making UMass athletics self-supporting through promotion of the intercollegiate programs, and making the athletic program supported totally through state funds.

We are not calling for an immediate rescinding of the levying of the athletic fee. Rather, we ask that it be phased out gradually, while alternate methods of funding be looked into.

The Student Senate's motto is "The idea that no solution exists never occurs to them, and therein lies their strength." The Athletic Council should keep this in mind when they meet again April 9, and seriously consider alternatives to the student athletic fee.

Big Government

Of all "revolutions" in history, the achievements of the American Revolution were, by far, the most unique. In other political upheavals, both recent and ancient, the net result of the takeover would be the disposal of one set of tyrants and the installation of another. Except for the new slogans, banners, and uniforms, the political climate would usually remain equally, if not more, totalitarian.

The Founding Fathers of our country were a different breed of revolutionaries. Since they were intransigently individualistic, they were concerned less with ways of wielding power and more with ways of limiting power. According to them, liberty was far too precious a birthright to be entrusted to the good will of a "benevolent" despot. They sought to provide a framework which would provide for the requirements of nationhood, and simultaneously safeguard the fundamental rights of the citizenry.

The product of that quest was the Constitution of the United States. According to Harvard historian Samuel Eliot Morison, our Constitution is "the most original contribution of the United States to the history and technique of human liberty." Liberty, rather than unlimited State power, was the primary political value of the Founding Fathers. The lesson that history taught to them was that the greatest single threat to individual freedom lay in the hands of those who possessed too much power.

In the early years of our Republic, our leaders generally adhered to the designs of the framers of the Constitution, and scrupulously refrained from any actions which would decisively enlarge the scope of Federal power. And all while our government remained within the constraints laid down by the Founding Fathers, our nation underwent an unprecedented transformation from rural agrarianism to industrial prosperity, from backwardness to development, from wilderness to civilization.

It wasn't until the Twentieth Century that the concept of limited government received its first serious challenge from American intellectuals. Inspired by the collectivist doctrines of a decaying Europe, American Liberals, who had previously been among the staunchest supporters of laissez-faire, suddenly raised the banner of Big Government. Through a series of Square Deals, New Deals, Fair Deals, New Frontiers, and Great Societies, America's once limited government became larger, more all-encompassing, and more bureaucratic. In the past forty or so years, power has flowed away from the people and local governments, and toward Washington. As the government grew bigger and more bureaucratic, the amount of personal freedom possessed by the people decreased.

The key to the entire relationship between the size of the government and the amoun The key to the entire relationship between the size of the government and the amount of personal freedom is the government's power to tax.

Originally, the government's taxation power was severely limited. There are special taxes on various endeavors, but this was kept under control. In 1913, however, Congress opted to institute a Federal taxation on personal incomes. This was a drastic departure from the status quo. Never before had the Federal Government placed personal income under taxation. Once this decisive "reform" was instituted, it wasonly a matter of time before the Federal Government would take control of more and more of the wealth of the citizenry. The Road to Serfdom had clearly been laid.

Presently, the average American must relinquish approximately 43% of his or her income in real or hidden taxes. Clearly, this level of taxation is not consistent with anybody's concept of individual liberty. An individual who is forced to work for the Federal Government for 43% of his working hours, is certainly not a free individual.

There are those who would have us move in the direction of more government. Generally, these people are Liberals who believe that the solution to every perceived problem is to pass a law or throw dollars at it. But in order to throw dollars at a "problem", the Federal government must first go out and soak a few bucks from the taxpayers.

President Nixon is currently undertaking a drastic program of reform, designed to reduce the level of Federal spending, and ultimately Federal taxation. Despite the oversentimentalized propaganda put out by the Liberals, it is vitally important to the future of American Liberty that he succeed in this undertaking. If he doesn't, we can look forward to more taxes, more bureaucracy, more corruption, and more inflation.

Keep The Athletic Fee

Well, folks, we have been witnessing an application of one of the characteristics that make up a "liberal" I am referring to the recent attack made by Larry Ladd and Don Glickstein on the Athletic Department.

Ladd and Glickstein are two of a kind. They both tend to go off into some kind of a dream world where things that they imagine can be true become true, even though these things cannot fit into a world of reality.

To be honest, I don't think that either one of these two know anything about the way athletics on the college level operate. Glickstein, in his four-part series, tried to scandalize the Athletic Department as though they are guilty of the practices that North Carolina State, Duke, Southwest Louisiana and the like carried out to a point where the NCAA disciplined them.

No, Don, believe me, the situation UMass faces is not at all like that. Right now, we have an Athletic Department that serves the students one helluva lot better than most any other college of comparable size with the same caliber of varsity athletics. You don't read about the athletes in "big time" colleges who never graduate, or do you? It's safe to say that most of the athletes recruited here do graduate. For instance, 42 out of 43 basketball players recruited here by Coach Leaman have graduated. The only one who hasn't is Julius Erving who has been attending school during his off season in order to obtain his degree.

The fact that Ladd and Glickstein believe that an alternate solution exists to financing athletics, when such a solution does not exist, i

The fact that Ladd and Glickstein believe that an alternate solution exists to financing athletics, when such a solution does not exist, is an example of the dream world in which they, like all "liberals", live in.

But let us examine the ulterior motives behind these two. All they are doing is using this athletic fee business to gain power for themselves and their kind. If they really want to save the students money, let them go and fight the needless tuition increase, rent increases, board increases and raising of the Campus Center fee. This would be much more worthwhile than fighting the Athletic Department.

But their motives go even further. They DO want to destroy athletics, they are anti-jocks. But the next step is that, since they pay tuition, they'll want to entirely control the entire university and apply their dream world to it. And since their dreams cannot work, the University would fall into utter chaos and become a hippie haven.

They ought to accept reality. No, the athletic fee cannot be reduced without eliminating some of the programs entirely financed by that fee.

Glickstein put too much of a slanted emphasis on the so-called stealing going on when, in fact, the fee is a tax and really is not the property of the Student Senate. He did not even mention the fact about the thievery that does occur. Some examples of this are: 1) Student thievery in the University Store; 2) the student who receives a "barber" and doesn't go out for an athletic team; 3) the teacher/professor who, upon receiving tenure, turns into a lousy teacher and ends up teaching the intro course in his department because that is where he does the least harm. Just examples, Don and Larry, just examples.

They gave the proposal a gallant try. It was defeated and rightly so. For athletics here on campus have never, and should never, come into the hands of power-hungry demagogues like Glickstein and Ladd. And there is no other way to keep our athletic program with a football team capable of beating Boston College, a lacross team that is No. 1 in their division, a basketball team that can play in the N.I.T., and the like without the athletic fee. I wouldn't want UMass to get like the Big Ten or Notre Dame but, damn it, the athletic program here is fine and should not be tampered with.

So, Don and Larry, don't act like crybabies. Accept the defeat like men. Don't spew off a lot of garbage attacking athletics because you don't like them. And last, but not least, if you really want to save the students money, put your time and energy into trying to stop the tuition, rent, and board from increasing. It would be much more worth your time.

NIT Sports Special

Players Reveal Thoughts Concerning 36th Annual NIT

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

For the third time in four years UMass is going to the National Invitational Tournament. More than just an extra week of practice and a chance for sportswriters to sound off, this year's trip means quite a bit to many. The fans are confident and flocking to the city for St. Patrick's day. Even Assistant Coach Fan Gaudette was on the Andy Muser show, nationally on CBS radio, to offer his thoughts on UCLA (a tournament coach knows all).

Coach Leaman is being besieged by the media for his opinions and is quite willing to offer them. This time though, the players will have their say and Leaman will have to follow.

The players had this to say about playing in the NIT:

Chuck Olsen, senior reserve and bench jockey, "It means more to me now (than his first appearance as a sophomore against North Carolina). I want to leave here winning, not like our 5-11 freshmen team. Charlie Peters and I used to dream about this (being in the NIT), since our freshmen team was so bad that people would laugh at us."

Al Skinner, junior and this year's Coaches' All New England guard who plays forward, "It means a lot to us. Ever since the beginning of the season we've wanted to go down and play (in the NIT). Since the beginning playing in the NIT wasn't mentioned, but it was an unwritten rule which was understood (as a goal)."

Bobby Powers, who has been to every NIT with UMass as a manager, "I'll be surprised if Missouri beats us. Missouri started with 12 in a row, but we ended with 12 in a row. In my mind it will be an upset if Missouri does win.

Greg Duarte, the J-Vs leading scorer who is going to make the trip, "I think its a big affair. With UMass one of the best teams in New England, I think we'll do pretty well."

About going to NYC Duarte said; "I was just waiting not sure that I was going, then (Tuesday) Coach Leaman said that he had permission to take me. I was surprised."

Comparing this team to past teams the players said:

Charlie Peters, senior starting center, "All the guys are closer this year. There is no division by class or race. As a team we work together pretty well—much better than last year's team. The depth is greater than ever before. The team with Julius had only six (who contributed a lot), while 10 are playing a great deal this year."

Powers, about the team which played against North Carolina, "This team is a much better team. They are better balanced with more scoring from everywhere and have more confidence in themselves as a team."

Skinner, "Attitude is the main difference from last year, we're thinking more as a team."

A lot more was said by the few who took their time in leaving practice Tuesday evening, but it was more in the vein of comedy, especially the comments of Jim Burke, who besides antagonizing the opponents on the court, stayed around to offer his comments on the big men (Austin and Peters), which of course are unprintable.

Skinner said this about Missouri, "If their size is like they say, I just hope they are not quick."

Coach Leaman mentioned his game plan as "We hope to make it a fast game. We will try to get the ball up quick and then on defense we will press to not allow them to set up."

It's Easy To Fear No One; Missouri To Find That Out

By MARTY KELLEY

In The Shadow Of A friar—They walked in no man's footsteps for the better half of four months . . . There was a time for heart . . . a time for soul . . . And most definitely character . . . Although the Friars from Providence couldn't chase them out of the Civic Center, they tried like hell . . . And the Tigers of Missouri will have their shot in the 36st Annual National Invitational Tournament . . . It's a long crawl home to the Mason Dixon Line . . .

Although Missouri stopped Nebraska by 17 on Saturday, no matter how you want to rationalize their mental and physical state, you can't sidestep twelve in a row . . . Don't try it . . . And if that's not a true caricature of what 1972-73 has been for the Minutemen, nothing else should sit in opposition . . .

And there was a time when Jack Leaman sat alone with thought on the lower bleacher at Curry Hicks Cage preceeding his last workout before he flew his then youngsters out to Detroit for the Motor City Classic . . . He was 3-2 then and still didn't know who wanted to do what with his newly named Minutemen quintet . . .

Eastern Michigan upped Leaman to 4-2 and with a once impending 18 point lead in the first half with Detroit in the title game, the team for the first time was to collapse. It was to be the last . . .

The Palestra turned it around . . . Sure as hell did . . . But what happened to this struggling 4-4 team that was, shall we say, destined to go back to visit the pretzel man on the corner and the school's third NIT excursion in four years?

Well, Tommy Austin didn't hurt . . . Neither did Tom McLaughlin's judgment. But you know, you simply can't single out anyone. Although Chuck Olsen didn't play a physical role, we wouldn't be in New York this weekend without him . . . But how about Jack Leaman . . . He was nearly headed for another 14-12 headache, but unlike most teams that make it to the NIT three out of four years, Jack coached his club . . .

Discipline and defense did it. When he received that standing ovation from a throng on 6,000 on pick on Fordham Night, he knew why. Somehow he got Tommy Austin to play the most inspired ball of his career on the press (Boston College and UConn wins) found what to do with Jimmy Burke (literally had a hand in every win) and gave Billy Endicott the offensive freedom he needed (24 at Rhody and the NIT trail kept blazing).

And Dr. Al Skinner . . . How many future pro ballplayers in the country (and I'm talking exclusively Black) play defense like Skinner . . . Few and far between. Dwight Lamar gets the name, the sore wrist, and the money under the table, but Al Skinner gets you into the NIT. . . .

Endicott will get you with his playground stare, but Rick Pitino will just plain get you. With Rickie, they used to say where's the mustard and relish. Rick has sold his hotdogs. And as all the writers and I'd like to meet you type guys gathered around Ernie "D" in the Providence locker room, they quivered so god damn much, they forgot about the integrity of a Massachusetts team that denied them twice and made if respectable (91-78) against the Friars. But Ernie, skinny little Italian, was honest to me . . .

He said he couldn't catch number 22 and not once did the Friar press rattle Pitino

. . But let the NIT speak for itself . .

"Let's Go Back; Listen To The Radio"

By MARTY KELLEY

Editor's Note: We take you back live to the studios of student station WMUA to Saturday night, March 17th . . . It's a quiet sort of night, not too many rock jocks hanging around . . . Almost a solid third of the campus visits New York City this weekend . . . Yet thousands caress their radios and the dial is affixed to 91.1 F.M. With the help of a major New England hookup by radio station, WHDH in Boston, WMUA goes New England wide . . . Here's the reason why . . . Let's go back to that historic night . . .

AT THE WMUA STUDIOS

(Rock jock in a soft, almost whispery voice) . . . I some sweetness from an old friend, Jethro Tull, from his latest release, Aqua Lung . . . Well, man . . . In just a few minutes we'll be taking you to . . . (rock jock a bit unsure at this stage) ah, I think it's a place called Madison Square Garden and for all you basketball groupies out there we'll have some basketball... Our guys (kind of a chuckle for what would he care about basketball) are playing this team called Marquette in I guess it's the NI . . . ah, T, tourney" . . .

(His voice slowly fades into the microphone and sure as hell offers MUA a quick acid rock special) . . . . . The cut slowly ends and the rock jock retires for the evening . . . With a tough assignment WMUA calls in their solidest engineer. His name is Sheldon Katzman and in just a second Sheldon plays the station name intro . . .

Katzman is now a nervous wreck. He's all but completely sweat through his shirt. He's nervous as hell. If he blows this one, the station will be on his ass even at Homecoming five years from now . . . But Sheldon has confidently completed the patch . . . (You now hear a rubble sound in the background . . . it's faint, but it sounds like a crowd mingling restlessly. Now a voice . . . It's play-by-play man Hal Dash . . .

(High pitched, excited, and over-reacting)

"From Madison Square Garden in New York City, it's the 34th Annual National Invitational Tournament. Tonight, the University of Massachusetts will meet the tournament's top seeded entry the Warriors from Marquette University . . . Ken Horseman (color man) . . . Do you believe it?. . .

(Ken, in a screeching, near delerious shout) . . . "Hal, I don't believe it . . . I don't believe it . . . And the echo continued.

Some Thoughts:

On Hypocrisy, Ernie "D", And 30 Second Clocks

By EARLE BARROLL

The campuses at Chapel Hill and Minneapolis are still licking their wounds today from the injury to insult that two cellar-dwellers inflicted on them last weekend. And in New York this very minute a group of grown men are basking in the adversity that has followed two groups of young men for 24 hours, each day, of the last week.

There is an innate hypocrisy that manifests itself in the chemistry of the N.I.T. Is it cruel? Not exactly. It is a business, to make money, to bring the people in, to find leftovers who bring with them a glamorous past or present, to put that dollar-sign before everything else.

"We're sorry you lost," they say. And then amongst each other they shake hands and decide who will be the one to notify the Garden of this great news.

North Carolina and Minnesota have not received sympathy cards. They shouldn't. They lost fair and square, although Wake Forest and Northwestern are nothing to lose about. But it happened. The line on the Tar Heels before the season was "young and we'll wait", on the Gophers "U.C.L.A. here we come." With a bid to the N.I.T. this is all a forgotten past.

In Basketball Weekly a paragraph on Minnesota read, "The Bill Mussleman adventures during the past two years have gone down several bizarre routes, but barring the unforeseen he'll get a shot within the next few weeks at the team he really wanted to upstage all along, UCLA. And, protests to the contrary, his team can play with the Bruins . . ."

Now they have to play with Rutgers in the first round, Alabama or Manhattan in the second, probably New Mexico in the semi's and most likely North Carolina in the finals. It would be a fitting end to the maelstrom that has been Minnesota basketball for the past two years.

It would also be a fitting end for the grown men in New York.

In the entire sixteen team NIT field there are only three that were ranked in the UPI's final top-20 national poll released yesterday. As expected the NCAA gobbled up most of the biggies leaving the above mentioned Minnesota (9th) and North Carolina (12th) and Missouri (17th) for New York.

Feel like getting sick? Check this out. Pennsylvania (which turned the season around for UMass) via a first round NCAA regional victory over St. John's jumped to 20th in the national polls. Syracuse, victors by only three over the Minutemen were 14th and headed for a showdown with Maryland tonight as part of the Eastern Regional semi-finals that will also pit Penn and Providence in the second game of the doubleheader.

With the exception of P.C.'s magnificent Ernie DeGregorio and Marvin Barnes no other New Englanders were named to any of the post season all-American teams, including the honorable mention list. In the UPI team Bill Walton of UCLA garnered 389 out of a possible 390 votes. Where is that one idiot?

One last thought on Ernie "D". Early in the season there were many detractors to what Ernie was all about. I for one didn't believe the "greatness" tag. But since that time I've seen him perform on a number of occasions and am now an Ernie "D" believer. Over the last month of the season he was perhaps the best guard in this country, including Dwight Lamar, Kevin Joyce, Ed Ratleff and the rest.

Did you know that the Big Eight has been playing all its games this season with the 30 second clock, that is used by the American Basketball Association. Missouri coach Norm Stewart explained that 21 out of his teams 26 games were played with this rule and since the beginning of February when the Tigers began their Big Eight campaign this 30 second clock is all they've played under

"The major distinction between no clock and a 30 second clock," Said Stewart, "is that with the latter there is no five second rule. With this as the case most of this week has been for teaching the pros and cons of no clock to the team to get them ready for the N.I.T."

How much does the five second rule affect a game. "Very little," said Jack Leaman. "From what I've seen this year referees have not been calling it closely and so it shouldn't make too much of a difference for Missouri or for that matter any team involved in the tournament."

Seniors: Just For The Record

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

Four years ago, according to Coach Leaman, the NIT bound team was listed as "four guys named Joe and Erving," but now if one pays any attention to the All Yankee Conference picks, it seems like it is eight guys named John and Skinner. Avid UMass fans probably will remember the other guys on past teams such as Ray Ellerbrook, Ken Mathias or John Metancourt.

They will probably remember some of the past games such as Providence in the Cage, Syracuse in the Cage or Marquette at Madison Square Garden. For the record, here are some of the thoughts of the seniors.

Chuck Olsen said, "I was sad and upset when Senior Night came around, because I knew if we didn't go to the NIT, it would be my last game." With four years of college basketball behind him, Olsen who is going to be the assistant J-V coach next year said, "The biggest thing that I learned from basketball was to have perserverance and persistence."

Charlie Peters said, "I liked playing on Senior Night, because there was a big crowd, but I didn't like fouling out, though it was a fitting note for me to end on." Reflecting on the past he continued, "I came here as a walk-on for a losing freshmen team and in four years I got to be a starter by hook or by crook on a NIT team. I guess it was because I hustled."

Tom Austin was reluctant at first to talk about the past, saying that Charlie had said everything, but he relented to say, "Five years of practice in two sports (also baseball) is a long time. At least I will have a free spring. I probably won't know what to do with all the free time."

Speaking about his own career as a starter, Austin said, "The Palestra was the turning point. It was the first time that I started shooting from the outside with confidence."

Captain Tom McLaughlin, who hails from the Bronx, and transferred from Tennessee to join the second NIT bound squad midway through the season, said this about Senior Night, "It is a great feeling to be part of a team which made a lot of people happy."

Comparing this team to past NIT teams, McLaughlin said, "The first two times we played teams that were really great. This time we are going down with the feeling that we are the team to beat, which is the same type of feeling as before the Penn game-a lot of confidence."

Mac had plenty to say about the coaches and credited them for the change this year from last year. He said, "I think that Coach Leaman has matured into a great coach in the last year and is learning now to handle people."

McLaughlin also credited Coach Gaudette's "knowledge of the offensive game" and Coach Wilson's "being a class person and a very personal guy–nice to have around," as helping the win-loss record.

Coach Jack Leaman wears his NIT watches with pride. The timepieces are given to all players and coaches who participate in the annual Madison Square Garden classic. To Leaman, the watches signify his greatest achievements as a basketball coach; two successive trips to the NIT.

In a recent interview, Leaman confided that he wears his 1970 watch more often than the momento from 1971. "That", he said, "is a result of the outcome of the tournaments."

A look at the record bears out Leaman's point. In 1970, a Redmen team led by captain Ray Ellerbrook and super-soph Julius Erving sporting an 18-6 season's record lost a hard-fought first round game to Marquette, a team that, at the time, was ranked second in the nation. The tables turned in '71 as the Redmen, 22-3, played a strong North Carolina team and got pressed right back up the Connecticut River while being handed a 90-49 setback.

"Marquette was the type of team we played well against. They played a disciplined type of game, the same as us, and we were able to hang in there well against them." And hang in there is just what the Redmen did.

With Erving and Ellerbrook paving the way with 18 and 14 points, respectively, UMass threw a scare into the Warriors (who, incidentally, were the eventual winners of the 1970 NIT). The game was tied at 27 at the half and it looked as though the young upstarts from Amherst might make Marquette sorry they hadn't accepted their bid to the NCAA tournament (Marquette turned down the NCAA offer because they would have had to play in the Midwest bracket instead of the easier Mideast, where they thought they rightly belonged).

The nationally-ranked Warriors eventually proved their superiority, but, more importantly, UMass proved they could leave their friendly confines of New England and compete with nationally ranked teams on an even basis.

Then came the disaster. In 1971, North Carolina was rated by many as the team most likely to beat UCLA, but they never even made it to the NCAA tourney. In the annual circus, more commonly known as the Atlantic Coast Conference playoffs, North Carolina fell victim to arch rival South Carolina in a bizarre slow-down game. As a result, South Carolina went to the NCAA and the Tar Heels, settling for second place, headed for New York to work out their frustrations on anyone who stood between them and an NIT title. The Redmen were the first victims.

Coach Leaman probably summed up the outcome of that game the best. "North Carolina blitzed us. Julius Erving did not play a good game. John Betancourt got hurt in the first half. The game was played at 11 o'clock in the morning and that made it hard for us to get ready. Overall, North Carolina was vastly superior to any team in the tournament that year."

North Carolina wasted no time in flaunting that superiority. Their first round game against the Redmen (as again UMass had the misfortune of playing the eventual winner in the first round) was never in doubt. The Tar Heels came out pressing, put the clamps to Julius Erving, and ran away with a 90-49 victory. Erving, who fouled out with 16:40 to play, finished with 13 points and 9 rebounds, well below his season's averages of 26.9 and 19.5. No other Redman finished in double figures. An added sidelight to the affair is that three members of the North Carolina team (Bill Chamberlain, Dennis Wuycik, and Steve Previs) are presently playing pro ball.

The two NIT trips had a great effect on the basketball program at UMass. In Leaman's words, the basketball successes were "a step forward; something to put us into the national picture. It gave the University something above and beyond what they were used to."

Leaman also credits the NIT's for helping in subsequent recruiting drives. After the NIT appearance in 1970, Al Skinner and Rick Pitino decided to attend UMass, as did Bill Endicott, John Murphy, and Jim Burke after the Redmen appearance in the '71 classic.

As this year's NIT is fast becoming a reality, all that Leaman has left from the first two are memories and the watches. The coach confided, "The watch is important; it's something they can't take away from you." Well coach, they can't take away the memories either. Only this time let's hope they're a little more pleasant.

Ray Wilson-On The Road To '74

By MIKE BROPHY

And a long road it is too. All the way from the northern tip of Maine down the Atlantic seaboard and into the metropolitan Philadelphia area. This is the road that assistant basketball coach Ray Wilson follows in search of that new life for the Minuteman basketball team. Wilson is the chief recruiting man on the UMass basketball staff and is out on the road from mid-October until late March in search of the athletes that will replenish the graduating seniors, thusly keeping the UMass program always on the rise.

You will not ordinarily see Wilson on the bench next to Leaman as he has other obligations to fulfill for the betterment of the program. In order to insure that the right choices are made in recruiting he must see each athlete at least twice and hopefully three times. "With our limited number of scholarships we cannot afford to make mistakes," he says. "The bigger schools that get ten men a year can afford to miss out on one or two, but in this league we simply can't. It's too much money down the drain.

"So, we have to limit ourselves and go after the kids we are reasonably sure we're in the running for. That's why we like to be told early if he is not interested in us. It keeps us in waiting like a pregnant mother."

Seeing the former Redmen and now Minutemen play in Madison Square Garden is perhaps one of the biggest assets in selling the UMass program to young men from the city who are still in high school. "Boys look at the teams in the N.I.T. as teams of a certain national prominence among all the schools that play basketball. Only sixteen make it to the NCAA Tournament and the same number to the N.I.T. Therefore it is reasonable for them to think of us as one of the top 32 teams in the land. And that means an awful lot to a kid when choosing a program."

In recruiting boys at the N.I.T., however, UMass runs into competition from the bigger schools that have larger programs and consequently bigger scholarship bundles. "We would have trouble satisfying a boy from the ghetto who can get a full ride at some other place and we realize if Wilson noted, "The people we have to appeal to are those who can afford to put their son through school. Those who can afford him $10 or so a week to live on," said Wilson.

What UMass uses then to sell its program is its well rounded academic situation and the lovely location of the school. "A boy can come here and earn a respected degree and play a good brand of basketball if he is willing to work for both. We are not a basketball factory for the pro ranks. We know it and we tell the kids," he said emphatically.

What does the NIT mean to Coach Wilson? "I feel very much like the players in that playing, or coaching, in the Garden generates a different feeling within oneself than playing in any different arena. It is the place to be in the middle of March. In the sense of recruiting, it allows boys who have not been able to see us play to have a chance to see us now that their respective seasons have terminated."

If, and please remember that despite all appearances that is the biggest word in the English language, UMass can land three of the fifteen to twenty athletes that they are seeking Ray Wilson will be a satisfied man. All his travels will have been worth it. Recruiting is a dog eat dog business and it is Ray's job to see to it that the Minutemen are well fed each year.

Them Ol' Parking Lot Blooz

To The Editor:

The ticket said 10:15 a.m.

O great God of parking lots be mercyful. It was wrong. Lego says it was. It was wrong to park in front of the Student Union this morning.

There's one other ticket issued by Lego in the desk drawer. Nice looking little old man. Seems like he could be a sweet grandfather. But he's "only doin' his job" when he writes thirty tickets a day.

A little mathematics.

In the desk drawer there's one ticket dated November 28th. Its number is 156,994. The one Lego handed out today is number 169,488.

Now Miss Maxwell, a fourth grade teacher about ten years ago at a school in Worcester would be gratified that this editorial writer still knows how to subtract -- 12,494 tickets in three months.

There are three different tickets handed out by the UMass police: $2, $5, and $10 tickets. Figuring on an average of $4 a ticket, that means Lego and his friends have generated a potential $63,000 in scholarship money since that November ticket.

But that's individual tickets. The problem is the little paradox everyone blithly throws around about how there are half as many legal parking placed on campus as their are registered vehicles. Actually it's worse than that.

About 6,000 spaces (legal, that is) for 16,000 registered vehicles.

If that ratio is accurate, then the University parking office, every semester, knowingly registers at least twice as many cars as it has room for in the lots on campus.

Its a conspiracy, you see. If you have a sticker that subjects you to all the pains and penalties of not parking in the right lot and the parking office knows full well they'll be getting at least half the registered vehicles on parking violations if they so desire.

Take two, try it again.

It's a conspiracy, you see. Whether you pay the registration fee for your car every fall or not, you still get fined $2 for parking in the wrong lot. So if you can't ever get a space in your lot because its assigned to 110% of its capacity, you might as well not have registered in the first place -- it was a waste of money.

Meanwhile everyone goes on complaining as if its a fact of life. David Johnston, the Director of Security says he spends more time on parking than anything else.

Rumor is that parking control is going to be taken out of his hands and put in another department. I'm sure Dave won't be upset. Police are supposed to be community service people not cardboard toting meter maids.

So we all have this splitting headache that begins every day about 7:30 a.m. and doesn't go away until 4:30. Then it barfs all over the streets of Amherst before evaporating for the night.

Bufferin's "fast pain relief" won't get rid of this one.

There's no money for parking lots, and no one wants to be the person who is banned from having a car on campus. There aren't enough tow trucks to tow away all the violators each day.

We could all ride horses, except Stockbridge School doesn't have enough to go around.

I'm going to take a bus.

Athletic Fee

By LARRY LADD

At its meeting on March 12, the Athletic Council sought to avoid exploring genuine alternatives to a compulsory athletic fee, ignoring a nearly unanimous vote of the Student Senate and ignoring the increasingly unbearable financial burden placed on students by such a fee. The eight faculty members on the Council, who voted to maintain the fee and who collectively earn more than $165,000 per year, feel free to impose a fee on students without their consent, and refuse to look at possible alternatives. Such hypocrisy and insensitivity indicates that the reforms instituted last year were insufficient, and that the interests of students cannot be adequately represented by a group that serves primarily as a faculty front group for the Athletic Department. We cannot tolerate a wealthy faculty majority imposing its agenda on students at our expense.

The student fee is quick and comfortable way to fund athletics. As long as students can be forced to pay it, the Department and the University will feel no real need to explore serious alternative sources of funds. The alumni of this university contribute little to the program (yet their representatives on the Council voted to force students to pay). The faculty on the Council scoff at a faculty fee. No one wants to find ways to make the program self-sustaining. Few questions whether the program is worth the present investment of resources.

Since the faculty majority on the Council seem primarily interested in protecting the current exploitative fee structure, I shall ask the Student Senate to take the following actions:

(1) The Rents and Fees Committee will hold public hearings on the athletic fee and its utilization, inviting members of the Council and the Athletic Department to justify their use of student fees.

(2) The Student Senate shall explore means to remove jurisdiction over the fee from the Council, in order to place the fee under the auspices of a group that is responsive and representative.

(3) The Student Trustee will challenge the athletic fee when it comes before the May board meeting, documenting the fact that the athletic fee is the only student fee imposed without the consent of students.

We had hoped that such action would not be necessary. Unfortunately, faculty and alumni behavior on the Council has not changed from past years. We thought our actions had reformed the decisionmaking process in the Athletic Department, but it appears that we merely constructed an illusion of change.

Larry Ladd is SGA President and Student Trustee.

Who's Responsible

To The Editor:

Mr. Sherman in his letter (3/13 MDC) used the same old argument that has been used by ROTC proponents in the past, the ROTC officer has a liberalizing effect on the military.

Mr. Sherman has overlooked one point. Where did the generals who served in Vietnam, namely Westmoreland and Abrams, come from? West Point, of course. These are the men who established all of the military policy, not the lieutenant j.g. from the ROTC program.

Mr. Sherman further states, "Denying academic credit to ROTC is a step in the direction of ending the citizens' war-making power." This statement is simply an exageration of the fact. What about those "good" citizens running the Pentagon? Our memories aren't that short, are they? Do we forget the McNamaras, Bundys, and Rostows who are responsible for the carnage in Vietnam? Mr. Sherman, these men were citizens and did an "excellent" job in war-making.

Females Only

To The Editor:

Last week the Collegian carried an article about rape which, among other things, announced the time and date for a conference in North Amherst on that subject.

Rape is an extremely serious issue of public concern; public discussion can only be beneficial. The media have an obligation which is directly related to this and other important community concerns.

However, in the above article, the last line clearly stated that while the press was welcome, only female reporters would be admitted.

Such action as this is, in my opinion, nothing but blatant sexism. Recently I have come to see an undercurrent of emotional and reactionary thinking regarding such volatile issues as rape. As a male, I cannot avoid feeling that some segments of our wonderfully liberal community are looking at me and other males as "potential rapists", as someone who can't be trusted, an "enemy" as it were who should be prevented from infiltrating the inviolate ranks of feminism. I am prevented from attending such a meeting, an "open" public meeting, no matter how honorable my intentions, for one very simple reason--I am male, not female.

I am asked to leave part of a dorm talk on rape, given by Ms. White of the UMass Police, and publicly advertised as an official function of the police, because that part (on self-defense) can "easily be overcome" by those who are aware of the techniques. In short, I am asked to leave because I happen to be a male.

By no means am I trying to castigate the particular people involved in the above examples; rather, I am trying to point up a larger concern.

For too long women have been second-class citizens; rape and the way it is handled illustrate this perfectly. But now some, who would seek change, are making the classic mistake--substituting their own sexism, or racism, or whatever type of prejudice it might be, for the original evil. Excluding males from such events is as patently fraudulent as it would be for Nixon to exclude Democratic reporters from his press conference.

Some will charge that I have a fragile ego, that I should be wise enough to understand the necessity of such action. If that were the extent of it, no real issue would exist; however, my concern is that such behavior has no place in the free society we are supposedly striving for, and that the move for women's integrity is only doing itself a disservice by this antagonistic type of attitude.

Excluding any reporter is contrary to every concept of freedom of the press that this country has sought to live up to. The Establishment press has not given women a fair shake in the past, but the time is ripe. Ideas must be judged on their own validity and drawn from a free flow of information.

I can only come to the unhappy conclusion that equality and concern for PEOPLE are not in the forefront of many of our efforts. Too many groups, under the guise of betterment for all, are engaging in the same old shit--self-aggrandizement and self-interest.

Try Being A Janitor

To The Editor:

It is Glen Poster that is not familiar with the janitorial service on this campus. Mr. Poster seems to be accussing the janitors in the Sylvan Area for being responsible for the janitorial cutback of last year. Poster should realize that the cutback was caused by the administration in their attempts to save money and not the janitors.

If Glen Poster is sincere in what he says then he and other Sylvan residents should petition the administration to bring back the janitors. In the meantime, Poster might use ashtrays in the lounge instead of the floor and wastepaper baskets for his beercans and other waste instead of the hallways. He might also try being a janitor for a while and then he can really feel what being a janitor is like.

Bicycle Statutes May Be Revised

MASS. (AP)—No opposition was voiced Tuesday to three bills filed by a state senator to revise state statutes dealing with the operation of bicycles.

Sen. William L. Saltonstall, R,-Manchester, said the bills he filed would require bicycles to follow the rules of the road for automobiles and would establish a non-criminal ticketing system to punish violators. The tickets, like parking tickets, would levy fines payable by mail, he said.

In addition Saltonstall supported his legislation to set up a statewide bicycle registration system. The system would be voluntary, he said, and the state would contract with a private firm to operate it.

He said the cost, which he estimated at $1 per year per bicycle, would be borne by the cyclist, but he called it "a small price to pay for a reliable form of theft insurance."

The senator told the joint Committee on Public Safety that 15,000 bicycles were reported stolen last year in Massachusetts, and three times as many thefts went unrecorded. He said the total estimated loss in bicycle thefts totalled $2.5 million in the state.

He said requiring cyclists to follow automobile driving rules would cut down on accidents because "both driver and pedestrian would know what to expect of the cyclist."

He said the non-criminal ticketing system for violators would replace the existing "unenforceable" system, which provides that violators appear in court. The maximum fine, however, is one dollar, he said, and last year there were only four known prosecutions in Massachusetts for bicycle violations.

He said 160 police chiefs favored the ticketing system he proposed.

National Easter Seal Drive Underway

WASHINGTON (AP)—First Lady Pat Nixon Wednesday greeted the National Easter Seal Child and received a sample of this year's Easter Seals.

Ralph Edwards, star of the television program "This is Your Life" and this year's national Easter Seal chairman, presided at the ceremony in the White House library.

The child, Peter Ross Stinson of Sacramento, Calif., was born with a defect of the spinal canal which requires surgery as well as extensive training to enable its victims to walk.

The boy, whose father, James Stinson, is an employe of the Sacramento Union's circulation department, has received extensive physical therapy since he was two years old and now walks well with the aid of short leg braces and forearm crutches. His parents were present at the White House ceremony, along with National Easter Seal Society President Thomas C. Teas.

This year's Easter Seal campaign opened March 1 and continues through Easter Sunday, April 22.

Next From OH-NE: Mighty Joe, Koko

The Orchard Hill-Northeast Area Music Series will present its 10th event of this school year Friday and Saturday.

Chicago's Mighty Joe Young and Ms. Koko Taylor will play one show each night starting at 9 in the Recreation Room of the Eugene Field Dormitory on Orchard Hill. A $2.00 cover charge will be made.

Mighty Joe Young is a former guitarist with such notable black artists as Johnny Otis and Willie Dixon. Young's latest album is "Blues with a Touch of Soul" on the Delmark label.

Ms. Taylor recorded on the Chess label not yet a well known performer, nonetheless she is considered by some one of the finest blues vocalists.

Both events will be dance-concerts. According to publicist Joey Baron, "We are calling these events dance-concerts because the word 'boogie' cheapens and lowers the value of these people. These people are artists. They are exciting. They are real. And they are probably the finest band you could ever dance to.

AAUP Meeting

There will be an AAUP (American Association of University Professors) meeting on Tuesday, March 20 in Hasbrouck 134 at 7:30 p.m. The amended version of the Professional Unity Agreement for collective bargaining will be presented for discussion and vote.

LOSE 20 POUNDS IN TWO WEEKS!

Famous U.S. Women Ski Team Diet

During the non-snow off season the U.S. Women's Alpine Ski Team members go on the "Ski Team" diet to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. That's right — 20 pounds in 14 days! The basis of the diet is chemical food action and was devised by a famous Colorado physician especially for the U.S. Ski Team. Normal energy is maintained (very important!) while reducing. You keep "full" — no starvation — because the diet is designed that way! It's a diet that is easy to follow whether you work, travel or stay at home.

This is, honestly, a fantastically successful diet. If it weren't, the U.S. Women's Ski Team wouldn't be permitted to use it! Right? So, give yourself the same break the U.S. Ski Team gets. Lose weight the scientific, proven way. Even if you've tried all the other diets, you owe it to yourself to try the U.S. Women's Ski Team Diet. That is, if you really do want to lose 20 pounds in two weeks. Order today. Tear this out as a reminder.

Send only $2.00 ($2.25 for Rush Service) — cash is O.K. — to Information Sources Co., P.O. Box 231, Dept. ST, Carpinteria, Calif. 93013. Don't order unless you expect to lose 20 pounds in two weeks! Because that's what the Ski Team Diet will do!

OLD STURBRIDGE VILLAGE OSV

WALLPAPERS and FABRICS by Old Stone Mill

Handprinted Wallpaper & Fabrics

The Old Stone Mill in Adams, Massachusetts, is where you want to go if you are looking for authentically reproduced Colonial American wallpapers and fabrics.

They handprint their screen papers in a mill that is over 100 years old, and, delightfully, they welcome visitors during working hours. There is also a mill retail store that offers seconds and overstocked patterns. Might well be a bargain or two to be found here.

We would specially commend you to their booklet on their line of "Old Sturbridge Village Wallpapers and Fabrics."

You write to or go to (and a trip to Adams is great)

SECTION I WHAT IS IT WORTH — AND

Fine Period Furniture — Designed, Reproduced, Restored

"Do as little as necessary to an antique and when in doubt 'don't'." Darn good advice from Harold D. Margolis — a man who knows what he is talking about.

Another bit of his philosophy concerns an original Chippendale chair.

"The owners wanted me to strip off the finish," he said, "but I wouldn't. After all, you don't refinish a Rembrandt painting if it's cracked."

Harold Margolis also makes fine reproductions to order. One of his finest works was a Duncan Phyfe dining table and 20 chairs for the Connecticut Governor's Mansion.

By appointment only.

Atiasta Farm Restorations

Restoring other people's precious antiques and lamps has become a full-time business for Maryanne and Ernie Smith.

Work on furniture ranges from complete restoration to French polishing. Lamp work is primarily wiring of old lamps for electricity, but done in such a way that oil and kerosene lamps can be easily returned to their original use.

Since the work is so highly individualized, it is difficult to give price information, but free estimates are gladly given.

FACTORY STORE GUIDE To All New England

Eugene Indjic

Piano Soloist At Amherst

Eugene Indjic, prize winner of two major international piano competitions (Warsaw, Poland and Leeds, England) will be featured in a solo piano recital on the campus of Amherst College on Saturday evening, March 17th, at 8:15 p.m.

Mr. Indjic, a native of Belgrade, Yogoslavia, emigrated to Springfield, Massachusetts, when he was four years old. He began his musical studies in Springfield with Liubov Stephani and the late Benjamin Kalman. Following his public school years in that city, Mr. Indjic attended Phillips Academy and graduated with honors in 1965 and was accepted at Harvard University as a student. During his years at Harvard, Mr. Indjic continued his piano studies with the late Alexander Borovsky in Boston and with Mieczyslaw Munz and Lee Thompson at the Juilliard School in New York. Mr. Indjic has also studied with Professor Laurence Berman of Harvard, Mlle. Nadia Boulanger at Fontainbleau, Clifford Curzon, Arthur Rubinstein and Leon Kirchner.

Tickets to the March 17th concert are priced at $1.00 for full-time students and $2.50 for others and may be purchased through the Department of Music, Amherst College; UMass Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall; The Music Seller, 15 Pleasant Street, Amherst, or in Springfield at Blodgett's Music Shop, 203 Worthington Street. Mail orders accompanied by a stamped, self-addressed envelope may be directed to Commonwealth Concerts, 39 Northampton Road, Amherst, Mass., 01002. Remaining tickets will be available at Buckley Recital Hall, Amherst College, one hour before the March 17th recital.

Tropical Farming Lecture Offered

The Center for International Agriculture will offer a lecture on soils of West Africa and farming and cropping systems of the tropics.

Dr. Martin Weeks, a member of the Department of Plant and Soil Sciences with two years of experience with farming in the tropical regions, will report on the major differences in cropping between our, and the warm, regions of the world. The informal presentation will be illustrated by slides and followed by a discussion. Future Peace Corps volunteers, prospective candidates and interested students are invited to attend the meeting in Stockbridge Hall, Room 113, tonight at 7:30 p.m. Refreshments will be served.

Senior Committee Meeting Moved

Because of the N.I.T., a meeting of all seniors interested in working with the Senior Committee has been moved to Monday, March 19, at 7:30 pm in Room 174 Campus Center.

The meeting will discuss the class gift and senior day.

The Committee has a budget of $14,000, of which $5000 must be used for future alumni expenses. The remainder will be allocated in yet undecided proportions, to senior day and to the class gift.

The Committee will also decide who the student speaker at commencement will be. Nominations for student speaker will be accepted after vacation.

Chairperson of the senior committee is Jack Drane. Secretary John Hogan, Vice-chairman is Lisa Mandell.

'Stop That Thief'

"Stop That Thief," a practical workshop on control of customer shoplifting, will be given in two sessions at UMass on Tuesday, March 27.

Designed for retail merchants and their employees, the workshop will be run from 9:30 to 11:30 a.m. and then repeated from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. Both sessions will be in Mahar Auditorium.

Sponsors are the Chambers of Commerce of Amherst, Easthampton and Northampton, the Small Business Institute of the UMass Division of Continuing Education, and the Small Business Administration.

After a film on shoplifting, a panel discussion will include UMass food economist Theodore W. Leed, speaking on shoplifting and profits; Stop and Shop security director Ben Pesky, causes and prevention of shoplifting; UMass Public Safety Director David Johnston, student shoplifting; and Hampshire-Franklin District Attorney John M. Callahan, apprehending and prosecuting shoplifters.

After the panel presentation, a question and answer session will be held and following that panelists will be available to discuss problems individually with those attending.

The registration fee is $5 per person. Organizations enrolling more than one person are charged $5 for the first, and $3 for each additional, person. Advanced registration through Division of Continuing Education, Campus Center 920, UMass, Amherst, 01002 is recommended.

New Library To House Past Court Records

Court records from the 17th and 18th Centuries in Massachusetts will be available on microfilm when the new library opens.

The 1,289 folio volumes of original records (called Court Files Suffolk) kept by the State Supreme Court are being microfilmed by the Genealogical Society of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints (Mormons), and a copy of the microfilm will be stored at UMass for use by students and other scholars.

In microfilming such records, the Society gives the "owners" of the original material a copy of the microfilm—in this case the owner being the Massachusetts Supreme Court. Chief Justice Joseph G. Tauro of that court, Clerk of Court John E. Powers, and UMass History Prof. Hugh Bell were instrumental in the decision to store the microfilm in the UMass-Amherst library. Prof. Bell specializes in pre-Revolutionary law.

Court Files Suffolk contain 250,000 items which in the 17th and 18th Centuries involved County Courts, Courts of Assistants, General Sessions, Common Pleas, and the Superior Court of Judicature. The earliest record is dated 1629 and the latest 1797.

The filming is part of a world-wide effort of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints to preserve genealogical documentation. UMass will keep its new gift in the microfilm room of the new library, scheduled for opening by fall, 1973.

Fine Arts Council

Spanish Musicians Perform

Amherst, Mass.–Zaj, an avant-garde group from Spain, visits the UMass, today, March 15, and tomorrow, March 16, for a workshop and a performance, under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council. Members of the group are Juan Hidalgo, Esther Ferrer, and Walter Marchetti, all from Madrid and followers of John Cage and Marcel Duchamp.

Although they are all musicians, their imagery is not confined to music. Everything may become part of a performance: noises, gestures, movements, objects and the audience itself.

Zaj will perform in Mahar Auditorium at 8 p.m. tomorrow evening, and tickets are $1 for UMass undergraduates and $1.50 for all others. Tickets may be obtained by contacting the University's Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, Amherst, until 4 p.m. Friday. Remaining tickets will be available at Mahar Auditorium one hour before the performance.

The workshop will be tonight at 8 p.m. in Herter Hall 227.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

Leo persons come to terms with themselves in 1973. Many born under this dynamic zodiacal sign will be dealing in real estate, land sales and purchases. Many others will be active in television. Some new entertainment stars on the horizon will be Leos. The months of March and December will be especially significant—by October, the single Leo may seriously be considering marriage.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Social activity increases. You make significant changes, some involving opposite sex. Young persons play paramount roles. Sagittarian is much in picture. This is time for creative thinking. Shake off self-doubt.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Be aware of specifics. Leave speculation for another time. Be frank, direct. No beating about bush. What appears to be opposition could be healthy challenge. Realize no one is handing you anything ort proverbial silver platter.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Flexibility serves your best interests. Means be versatile without scattering your forces. Relatives figure prominently. Do what you do because of you, not to please or impress relatives. Virgo individual is in picture.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Money, budget, special purchases are featured. Come to terms with one who attracts you. Strive for greater maturity. Family member deserves benefit of doubt. If diplomatic, you gain. Otherwise, you could be torn apart emotionally.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Be selective. Some persons appear to throw themselves at you. But try to remember that no one gives you something for nothing. Check the price. Message should become increasingly clear. Pisces is likely to be involved.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Older individual may lack enthusiasm. Key is to have faith in your own capabilities. Financial situation will improve. Look behind scenes. Don't judge by surface indications. Capricorn is in picture.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Friendship may be on line. Stand up for principles but don't rule out intelligent concessions. Finish rather than begin projects. Find better ways of distribution. Aries could provide hints.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Assert yourself. You can impress professional superior. Key now is to know what your goal is and to take steps which aid in attaining it. Originality is a keynote to success. Means be your unique self.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Favorable lunar aspect now coincides with "journey of the mind." Means you can successfully reach beyond current situation, present limitations. You perceive. You know what to do and when to do it. Act on what you know!

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Avoid trying to do too much simultaneously. Cooperative effort is necessary. Confide in mate, partner. Money position deserves special consideration. Don't take on more than you can handle. Check policies, accounts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Emphasis is on how to deal with one who holds opposing view. You can't force issues and win. You can listen, observe and offer suggestions. Applies especially where one close to you is concerned. Special relationship is tested.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You may be too concerned over minor matters. Key now is moderation. Guard health. Cement relations with co-workers, those who share your interest. Gemini, Virgo persons figure prominently. Moderate approach is essential.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you can do much with your voice. You can accumulate money because you are talented and can bring together those who hold divergent views. Your domestic situation will be more solid this year—June should be your most significant month of 1973.

Weightlifters In Nationals At York College

By KEN KNAPP

One of the faster developing organizations on the UMass campus is the weightlifting team. Best known of the lifting team is Doug Cooney who last year placed fifth in the nation at the national collegiates. This weekend Doug will represent UMass at the nationals this weekend which will be held in York, Penn.

As a freshman Doug quickly established himself as a top competitor when he won the Junior New England Championships. His sophomore year was equally exciting having placed third in the Senior New England Championships. A case of bad knee's slowed progress but a hungry and determined lifter worked his way back. While a junior he made his best showing ever, taking fifth at the collegiate nationals. The momentum continued into his senior year as he recorded some very impressive lifts in training. He culminated the fall season by placing second in a New England open.

When asked his feelings about the upcoming nationals he replied, "I'm looking forward to them (the nationals), though I wouldn't say that my whole life revolves around my performance." Doug add's, "I wouldn't call myself a weightlifter but rather a person who happens to lift weights". Doug doesn't like to be regarded as a student-athlete either. "I don't let lifting interfere with my social life" he says. "If I want to go out on the weekend I will". "I'm thinking of those individuals who portray themselves as student-athletes. That's their value standard." Personally I have a different approach to life. For instance I'm more socially oriented than most of the people you see around UMass. Next year weightlifting may not even be in my life. There are greater challenges in life than weightlifting presents."

In his four years at UMass Doug acknowledges that lifting has brought another dimension to his life. "Besides teaching me much about myself in terms of discipline, says Doug, the road trips presented many good times. At last years collegiates, Adam Cohen added considerably to his mug collection in the celebration that followed."

Doug will be graduating this June while majoring in sociology. During his four years he has maintained a 3.5 average in his major. Doug hopes next year to return to UMass to do graduate work in sociology. He eventually would like to teach on the college level.

Anyone who talks to Doug for any length of time soon discovers he has a unique philosophy towards competition. "I've become "inner directed" in recent years". "That is, I'd set my own goals as to what I would like to attain. I've found that if one continually tries to be the best in his sport he can easily become discouraged. Therefore one should set internal goals rather than always trying to be the best. That's my value standard and you can put your own value judgement on that. If I came in tenth at the nationals but did my best lifting I'd be pleased with myself".

Along with Doug has emerged a great interest in olympic lifting. Freshman Bill Riley and Junior Chris Gomes may accompany Doug to the nationals if finances allow it. These three form the nucleus of the team which includes sophomore Chris Calawa, Freshman John Donnelly (who just missed qualifying for the collegiates), Junior Dave Chambers, and Sophomore Wayne English.

Thus York College of York, Penn. will set the stage for the top college lifters in the country. It is there that the UMass delegation will be fighting for top honors. Most anyone else would describe the situation as tough, but as Randy Smith said, Doug is exceptionally a happy man.

Celts 111, Bullets 107

BOSTON (AP)-The score was tied once the stage was set for another amazing clutch performance by John Havlicek of the Boston Celtics.

With two seconds left on the 24-second clock and 13 seconds remaining in the game against Baltimore Wednesday the Celtics' captain let go from the corner with a leaping, twisting desperation jumper that somehow went in and broke a 107-107 deadlock.

The Bullets' Elvin Hayes brought the ball down court but missed a shot. Havlicek grabbed the rebound, was fouled, sank two free throws and Boston won the game 11-107.

"I still don't believe it went in," Baltimore Coach Gene Shue said of Havlicek's tie-breaking shot.

The victory for the Celtics, their eighth in a row and the 16th out of their last 17 games, moved the magic number to one. One more victory by the Celtics or one more loss by second-place New York will give Boston the National Basketball Association's Atlantic Division title. The Celtics now own a 60-13 record, best in the league.

As expected, the visiting Bullets were difficult to beat.

"I wasn't surprised at Baltimore's performance because they're always tough," Coach Tommy Heinsohn said.

Down most of the fourth quarter, Baltimore charged into a 105-101 lead with 3:06 remaining as Mike Riordan put together a three-point play.

Jo Jo White, who tied with Havlicek for team scoring honors with 27 points, hit a jumper and sank two foul shots to tie the score. After Hayes and center Dave Cowens exchanged baskets, Havlicek clinched the victory for Boston.

Riordan led Baltimore's attack with 34 points, 15 coming in the final period.

Boston plays the Bullets again Friday in a game at Baltimore.

BoSox Topple Expos; 7-6

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla. - AP - Cecil Cooper and Ben Oglivie combined for some late inning slugging and rookies Mike Guerree and Rick Burleson contributed timely hits Wednesday in rallying the Boston Red Sox to a 7-6 exhibition victory over the Montreal Expos.

Cooper, battling for the first base job, led off a two-run seventh with a homer over the fence in right center. Then he grounded a sharp single to right for two more runs in the decisive eighth.

The Red Sox continue on the road Thursday, playing the Detroit Tigers at Lakeland.

"UMies" Psyched For NIT

By GEOFFREY KURINSKY

About 9000 UMies know what it's like. The feeling of being in the "Big Apple", watching their basketball team at center stage in the Garden, Madison Square that is, in front of a throng of 15,000 and in the eye of the national sports scene. The NIT (National Invitational Tournament) is what it's all about. For the Minutemen it's playing on the same court with the country's best, quite an achievement for a team from New England, where collegiate athletics are tabbed "inferior" to national standards. This is not so at UMass, as the Minutemen (alias Redmen) head down to New York City for their third visit in four years, hopefully to fare better than in past excursions when on both occasions they drew the top seed in the opening round and were defeated.

For UMass fans who have made the 175 mile jaunt down the skyscraper city for the NIT, good times were had by all, almost all that is. This year the fans seem confident, strongly believing that this Minuteman squad could (without the Redmen jinx) make it past the opening round. The consensus seems to be that this team is overall a better squad than the two previous entries and, adding this to the slightly weaker opposition it all adds up to a good showing for UMass basketball. (No spite is intended toward the Tigers. The Minutemen will be playing a good team, but not the second best team in the country (NC, Marquette).

To a tall female senior from JQA it was "simply super watching our basketball team on the same court with such name teams. Then, going around the corner into a bar and seeing so many familiar Amherst faces. It was like we took over the town. I wouldn't miss it again for the world."

"It was my first time in New York City and the Garden", sighted Joe Sheeby of Pi Lambda Phi Fraternity. "It was just a great weekend. Hell, so we lost. I'm heading down this year and hell, we're gonna win."

A sophomore going to his first N.I.T. had this to say: "I know we'll win, but it'll be worththe trip just to give the team a standing ovation when they come out onto the court."

Just to show you that students thoughts are not all wine and roses, Arnie Rochford had this to add. "The atmosphere was cold, there were so many empty seats. UMass got bombed and they'll get bombed again. These teams are like semipro outfits with all the money they spend on athletics. They should be able to beat a UMass."

A tremendous delegation of UMass fans (6,000-9,000) will be on hand for the 7:00 tap-off Saturday. This has to make a big difference with the tremendous cheers everytime Skinner, Endicott, Murphy and company put the round orange ball through the hoop for UMass.

Tom McLaughlin, captain of the Minutemen basketball team puts one in against Rhode Island enroute to a 85-73 victory that was instrumental in gaining the Yan-Con crown for 1973. He will be appearing in his native New York at Madison Square Garden Saturday evening. (Alan Chapman Photo)

Kraft Takes URI Job

By HOWARD ULMAN
Associated Press Writer

PROVIDENCE (AP)—After a 26-year coaching career in his native Philadelphia and coming within six points of a national championship, Jack Kraft was named Wednesday head basketball coach at the University of Rhode Island.

Armed with a four-year contract at an undisclosed salary, the 52-year-old former coach at Villanova immediately launched a personal effort to land two of the top players in Rhode Island.

Kraft, who also spent 14 years as a high school coach in Philadelphia, switches jobs at a time when the basketball fortunes of both Villanova and Rhode Island are at their lowest points in more than a decade.

Villanova, which lost to UCLA, 68-62, in the finals of the 1971 NCAA tournament, posted an 11-14 record this season, its worst in Kraft's 12 years at the helm. It was the first time in that period that the Wildcats did not get a post-season tournament bid.

Kraft's Villanova teams won 243 games and lost 95. He was selected eastern coach of the year three times and national coach of the year in 1971.

At Rhode Island, he succeeds Tom Carmody, whose Rams compiled a 7-18 record this season, the poorest in 14 years. Carmody announced in the middle of the season that he would quit after the campaign, his fifth at Rhode Island.

Kraft admitted that his recruiting chores could be made more difficult by the "reputation" of nearby Providence, the nation's fourth-ranked team.

But he said he would meet "within 48 hours" with Rick Santos, a star for Rhode Island Junior College, and Joe Hassett of LaSalle Academy in Providence, the top schoolboy scorer in the state this year.

Pat Keenan All American

BOSTON (AP)-NCAA tournament-bound Denver University and Notre Dame dominated the west and Boston University had a pair of players on the All-East team as the American Hockey Coaches Association announced its All-American hockey teams Wednesday.

The College Division teams were:

All-East: Bill Cantwell, Norwich, goalie; Mark Petit, Merrimack, and Brad Cooke, Vermont, defensemen; Richard Donovan of Bowdoin, Pat Keenan of University of Massachusetts and Pat Wright of Vermont, forwards.

Track Spotlights Varsity M

By MDC STAFF

"I'd like to announce that we are having eight bus loads going down to our first home track meet this year," quipped Coach Ken O'Brien at the Varsity M Club Luncheon yesterday. O'Brien gave a review of the unspectacular indoor track season and a forecast of the coming spring outdoor season.

O'Brien explained that the winter season is viewed as a warm-up for the spring season. The trackmen are the defending Yankee Conference Outdoor champions.

Also on hand were assistant coaches Gideon Ariel ("weightmen") and Errol Prisby (sprinters) and co-captains, Tony Pendleton and Steve Levine.

Steve Levine came up with an interesting thought on the coming spring season. "With the new NCAA ruling allowing women to compete in non-contact athletics, Tony Pendleton will be getting some trouble from Kathie Lawson because the rule clearly states that the first person with their chest on the line wins it."

WMUA 31-24

The WMUA Marauders upset the Collegians 31-24 last night before a packed crowd of ten at the Boyden Gym. Sports Director Kent Best scraped up a dazzling 9 points to lead the winners and "mike mate" Don Gorsky stole another 7. Steve Ferrara (6) and Ken Sulin (7) were high scorers for the Collegians.

A major factor in the game was the play of Collegian Marty Kelley. (0-18 from the field). "Marty turned the game around," said Captain Steve Crowe after the game, "We were tied when he came into the line-up and when he went out again, we were eight points behind."

Earle Barroll

The "Hardship" Cases

(Note: The following editorial does not concern UMass and the basketball coaching staff. It is true that Julius Erving left after his junior year for the Virginia Squires, but the atmosphere that UMass basketball players confront is an entirely different one from the ones that cagers at the "major- major" universities are faced with.)

At the end of this collegiate basketball season and, for that matter, possibly right now if history is an indicator the professional flesh market known as "hardship" signings will stun the basketball world once again. Without question the coaches from where the bodies are bought will rise up and demand for sympathy from the national public.

Don't waste your time listening. In every closet in every major-major and major-minor college in America there is a skeleton. Winning and losing is the only thing with the former a must. When schools are in competition for the high schooler who can turn the program around, or keep it on a national level no holds are barred.

We read of Southwestern Louisiana being hit with 124 recruiting violations ranging from paying their athletes a weekly salary to keep them happy to doctoring student transcripts to get them into college. We saw last year that Marshall was hit with 300 plus violations in all phases of their program.

Today it is not what the school can do for you as far as getting an education and possibly a solid background in basketball. It isn't any of this. Rather, it's what the school can give you. Cars, clothes, money, plane trips, free girls for the weekend, positions for parents at the school, materials, materials . ..

Who does it? These same coaches who cry when the pros take their prize possessions. These are the same guys who offer young men out of high school what the pros are offering them when they're in college.

When Lefty Driesell of Maryland blasts the pros he might as well be looking into a mirror. When Southwestern Louisiana's coaches say "who, us?" they're stabbing someone in the back.

Read the book Foul by David Wolf that goes into the traumatic life of Connie Hawkins. You'll see how subjugated college basketball players were then and how money controls their every movement. You'll also read how Red Auerbach of the Celtics told Hawkins he'd pay for him to go to Providence College so Boston could have the territorial rights to him in the draft.

Major college big time coaches and professional basketball people are two of the same kind. One's greed feeds the other. They've perpetrated a system revolves around lucrative offers and expectations of grandeur. I do not blame a high school athlete for taking what he can get. I do not also blame an undergrad or a grad for taking what he can get.
taking what he can get.

What does bother me though is that the guys who are giving are the ones who cry the loudest in the end.

BSS Honors Bromery

By NATHAN GORENSTEIN

Chancellor Randolph Bromery was named honorary president of the Black Scientist Society last night in recognition of his achievement in the sciences and his commitment to black students and "black science aspirants."

A plaque commemorating the occasion was presented to Bromery by James Parks and Trent Poole, the founders and chairmen of the Society, at a dinner in the Campus Center in Bromery's honor.

Bromery, a nationally recognized geophysicist, worked for the U.S. Geological Survey prior to joining the UMass faculty in 1967.

After short speeches by Poole and Parks and the presentation of the plaque, Bromery spoke for ten minutes on his experience in science and the need for black scientists.

He told the 60 students, faculty and administrators of his first encounter with the national affiliate of the UMass organization, the Black Student Science Society, a year and a half ago at a conference on minority participation in earth science and mineral engineering in Colorado.

That conference was funded by the Department of the Interior, Bromery said, but only after a three year effort by Bromery to win approval for funding from the Secretary of the Interior.

"A national movement makes me feel very good," he said. "I've been a member of the Society of Exploration Geophysicists for 26 years, and for 26 years I've been waiting."

Characterizing the U.S. as an "economic country" Bromery said the Society can play a role in getting blacks into the hard sciences at UMass, "so you can make decisions for us. In an economic country economic decisions are made in science disciplines."

Though he had been called a "success model" for black science majors during his introduction, Bromery told the Society they are a better model for incoming students because they could "close the gap between myself and young people."

Warning the Society members that they were facing a "hard road with a lot of disappointments" Bromery gave the audience an account of an experience he had at John Hopkins University in the '60s where he received his doctorate degree.

In his field of study Bromery said, there was a course involving a lot of mathematics, required for graduation. However, when he enrolled in the one year long course, "the instructor told me he didn't want me in the class . . . but I had to have the course, so I decided to try it out."

"Even though I was the only student in the class who had a major in math," Bromery said with a slight smile, "if my approach (to a problem) was correct, my answer was wrong; and if my answer was correct, my approach was wrong."

In comments after the formal speech Bromery said the Society will help "make people realize you have to get up and keep going."

The Society, formed last semester, is angled towards heightening the awareness in the black community of the need for black scientists, bringing more black students onto campus who plan to major in the "hard" sciences, and to help black science majors now on campus.

The Society's projects include a tutoring program, a library, and counseling for black students interested in the sciences among other services. According to Poole and Parks the Society is also planning to bring films and consultants from black industry onto the campus, this semester.

CC Board Of Governors

Fund Transfer Passed

By CINDY GONET

The Campus Center Board of Governors approved a motion last night which would transfer the student activities fund from the Campus Center to the Student Senate, pending approval by the Senate.

Other orders of business included:

•the approval of a request to purchase a calculator for Don Witkowski, manager of the Campus Center Hotel. The calculator, which is not to exceed $400, will be purchased from the University Store with monies out of operating expenses;

•a recommendation was approved to increase the regular rates on double occupancy rooms in the hotel from $18 to $21, upon approval of the Chancellor and the Board of Trustees;

•an increase to $15 from $14 was recommended for a single occupancy room;

•the cigarette paper vending machines were ordered on a trial basis;

•the leasing of a ticketron service was approved.

"The transfer of financing from the Board of Governors to the Student Senate would simplify reporting procedures," explained Richard Nelson, Chairperson of the Board.

"Presently, the Board finances the student activities with $200,000, the Senate pays approximately $40,000. With this dual financing, the activities had to report to both the Senate and the Governing Board. A committee of the Senate would simplify any question of who reports to whom," Nelson continued.

Pending this transfer, a student senator said that "conceivably the Campus Center fee would go down and the SATF (student activities tax fee), would go up."

Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Robert Gage, in a memorandum to Student Government Association President, Larry Ladd, stressed that the transfer would be a mistake because "it is a bad time all around. We're budgeting right now, and the Graduate Students' Campus Center fee is involved, compiled with the present search for a Campus Center director."

Ladd suggested that a student activities council be formed as a "buffer zone" acting as a committee of the Student Senate. This group would be semi-autonomous to the Senate.

Vice Chancellor Thomas Campion felt that transfer of the student activities fund would be "putting the cart before the horse, as there is no plan for managing the monies".

The motion was passed with one veto and two abstentions.

When questioned about the Board's actions last night, Gage had no comment, and mentioned that it would be unfair to veto the transfer, as it had not yet been approved by the Senate.

Administration has direct veto power over any motions passed by the Board of Governors.

Paul Hamel, Chairperson of the Financial Affairs Committee of the Student Senate, told the Collegian that in a memo dated yesterday (March 15), Gage mentioned that he was in agreement with the fact of having a policy council to work with the student activities staff.

Hamel also said that the memo (which was unavailable at the time) stated that Gage generally agreed with the funding of fiscal year '74 as coming from the Campus Center.

Gage was not clear as to the exact relation of the staff with the building and the Board. Therefore, he could not agree with the Board's decision.

Hamel stated that the student activities has a lot of student input, especially from undergraduates. "The Senate is more closely tied with activities. It seems that it would be of better service to the student if the Senate controlled funding, rather than having separate staffs," he said.

Other motions passed included the approval of a permanent dance floor in the Bluewall. The cost of the permanent floor would be $206 while the cost of setting up and taking down the temporary floor costs $300 per month.

It was approved that Phi Mu Delta could use the Student Union Ballroom for a 52-hour dance marathon. Coffee and donuts would be provided for the last day by the Board. (See Photo page 3.)

A Kiss, A Squeeze— '25 Cents Please'

By BILL BALLOU

The Campus Center Concourse has been the site of all sorts of enterprises; candle-selling, clothes, ornaments, silver artifacts, propaganda tables and you-name-it. Well, the concourse had an added attraction yesterday—a kissing booth.

The booth, located next to the elevators, was easily identifiable by the large crowd milling around rather aimlessly in front of it, and by the posters and "menu" of kisses hanging on the wall in back of it.

It was "staffed" by three UMass students, Jennifer Lawrence, Stephanie Wunder, and Wally Gladwin, who charged a quarter for your basic ten-second kiss, and more or less for variations.

"We're doing it for fun now," Ms. Lawrence said, "And we're going to give the money to charity."

But raising money for chairty apparently wasn't the only reason the enterprise was established.

Ms. Lawrence said that "People are too touchy and serious about everything nowadays, and we figured we'd do this just for the fun of it."

Almost all of the large crowd standing in front of the table were of the "too touchy and serious" variety, for when this reporter went down business was slow.

One brave soul decided he'd buy a kiss and hug from Ms. Lawrence. She kissed and hugged while Ms. Wunder held a stopwatch and timed the ten-second kiss.

Another guy, who's probably still down there, pranced around indecisively until he got the nerve to shout to the crowd "If I get one will all you other people come on and get one?" The only answer he got was from another gent who, as he walked by, asked "Will they take credit cards?"

This reporter, who had 50¢ to experiment with, purchased the combination "hug, kiss, and squeal" from Ms. Lawrence. Incidentally, their first two customers were women.

This is the Siamese version of those little money-eating devils that have just recently claimed squatter's rights at different places on campus. (MDC photo by Kevin Mack)

Meter Problems Limited

By CAROL KENNEDY

Problems with the newly installed parking meters have been limited according to Gerald O'Neill at the Parking Office in Hampshire House. The meters were intended for short term parking but the Parking Office says some people have been refilling the meters all day, while others, who have been given stickers in Lots 2, 4, and 5, have found that they are occasionally pushed into a metered space.

The revenue collected by the meters will, after the initial payment, go into the Parking Lot Maintainance and Construction Fund.

O'Neill said it is still rather early to give definite results as to the effectiveness of the meters. However, he feels those visitors who were previously restricted from most lots, or could not find the centrally located Campus Center Garage, have found some spaces.

The parking meters were installed in December of 1972 in 11 different locations on campus, supposedly to accomodate visitors for short-term parking.

The meters are located outside Whitmore in Haigis Mall, outside the Infirmary, the School of Education, New Africa House, Arnold House, WoPe, the Maintenance Area, on Ferry Street extension, in the Southwest Mall, and in Lots 2, 4, and 5. They provide spaces for those coming to the University, specifically to run into these buildings to complete errands.

The University has a serious parking problem which O'Neill says would only be alleviated if he were given 8,000 more spaces. Yet the University is doing its best to accomodate everyone, he added. With 14,000 cars having assigned spaces, visitors were having a hard time finding a space. Now, instead of one car holding a space for eight hours there is a greater turnover. Visitors who rely on short term parking are pleased with the new parking situation.

Dismissal Policy Questioned

By STEVE SECHE

Dr. Robert Gage, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, said yesterday that Administrative Withdrawal, a mechanism developed by the UMass administration to remove from the University any student who fails to meet "major administrative and financial obligations," might also be invoked in "rare cases" where there was a question of a student's physical or mental health posing a "problem of a hazardous nature."

According to Gage, Administrative Withdrawal was instituted because, in the past, the University has had no effective method of dealing with "the small number of people who disregard University administrative and financial requirements."

"In the past we have denied registration to students with outstanding bills," Gage said, "although this procedure has allowed many students in their last semester to leave the University without meeting their financial obligations."

Similarly, Gage said that the University can no longer withhold transcripts that a student has requested to be sent out because such a practice "has been interpreted as a violation of a student's rights."

"We're not talking here about the student who has a fifty cent library fine overdue," Gage added, but those who owe "sizeable amounts of dormitory rent," or students whose "promised" loan from an outside source does not come through after the student has been permitted to register.

Gage said that he was aware of the difficulties involved in invoking Academic Withdrawal in cases of questionable physical or mental health, where violations and unmet responsibilities are far less distinct than an outstanding bill for a particular amount of money.

There has been, Gage said, at least one instance where the administration has resorted to legal means to remove a student from the University on the grounds that the student was emotionally unprepared to continue at the University. "In that particular case," Gage said, "the student challenged the University's decision in District Court, and the court upheld the action of the administration."

Gage said that the University administration was not concerned with those people, who, by virtue of their behavior, become "nuisances". "We have no intention of turning this campus into a police state," he said.

He added that there were several safeguards built into the Administrative Withdrawal procedure designed to protect the students' rights to due process, and that, in every case, there are avenues of appeal open to the students involved.

Student Senate Attorney Richard Howland, however, said that he was "not very comfortable with the procedural safeguards" outlined in the course proposed to implement Administrative Withdrawal. "The University seems to have empowered itself with legal powers that few institutions—and even few cities—have," he said.

"There is no enunciation of student involvement in any of the facets of the procedure," Howland said, noting that the Appeals Board is composed exclusively of University administrators, and that within the Appeals Board "the administration seems to have the right to counsel (a University staff attorney is present) and the student seems to have none."

Howland added that he felt financial obligations should be viewed in contractual terms, and dealt with as such, through legal suits or other litigation. "There seem to be almost no guarantees for the student," he said, allowing that it was "possible" for the University to use "certified physical health or mental health problems of a hazardous nature" to force undesirable students from the University community.

Provisions of Administrative Withdrawal state that if a student is withdrawn, "a student ceases to be enrolled; he/she must return I.D., meal ticket, etc., and leave campus."

Conditions which may lead to initiation of Administrative Withdrawal include: failure to complete or submit forms necessary to matriculate, including summer counseling material; forgery of official University forms/documents; financial indebtedness to the University which is overdue, following unsuccessful collection attempts; failure to comply with other administrative requirements (e.g. health records).

Provision is made that immediate reinstatement is possible if the matter is satisfied after Administrative Withdrawal has been effected.

Amherst Town Meeting

Longest Ever Ends

By HOWARD M. BLOOM

The longest town meeting in Amherst history, a marathon thirteen hour, three-night affair, ended last night as meeting members polished off the final 36 items on the 81 article warrant. Of the 266 meeting members, only 134 were present for the beginning of the night's business, just enough for a quorum.

In their first important act of the night, Meeting members voted to permanently establish a Landlord-Tenants Relations Committee with six members, appointed by the Board of Selectmen. The present Committee's authority expires on March 31, 1973. Later on in the evening, Article 60, which asked that the Landlord-Tenants Relations Committee be charged with studying the advisability of adopting rent control procedures in Amherst, passed on a voice vote.

A committee to study the feasibility of the town's providing low cost public transportation passed easily after Selectwoman Nancy Eddy spoke in favor of the article. "I no longer believe there is a question of whether Amherst should get into the area of public transit. The success the University has had with their program shows this."

After hearing complaints that the town was being "committee'd to death," the Meeting struck down a proposal that would have established a board to study the need for child care centers in Amherst. Michael Sullivan, Chairman of the Board of Selectmen, noted that the problem will most likely be referred to the Citizens' Advisory Committee.

The most heated and prolonged debate of the evening was generated by spokesmen for and against an article to amend a Zoning By-Law to permit the construction of a medical center and a home for the aged on University Drive, on land across from Alumni Stadium and Bell's Pizza. Proponents of the measure gave assurances that no apartment complexes would be built on this land. Robert Garvey, a member of the Board of Selectmen, argued against the motion, pointing out to the meeting members that the traffic problem on University Drive "is worse than ever. If we change the By-Law and let these buildings go up, it'll be unbearable." After 20 minutes of debate, the motion was defeated, 79-67.

In other business, the Town Meeting ratified the six articles proposed by the Town Meeting Study Committee, appropriated $6500 for the use of Community Mental Health Services, and approved eleven items dealing with re-zoning in Amherst.

Guards Walk Out At Walpole

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP)-Guards at Walpole state prison escalated their demands for control of the crisis-torn institution by going on strike Thursday. They were immediately suspended.

The night shift reported to the prison at 3 p.m., met with union officials and then walked out. They marched through the lobby of the prison with raised fists. Union officials issued no statement.

Officials in the correction department said they were unable to determine immediately how many guards participated in the strike and how many were out for other reasons.

Armed state policemen manned wall towers and guarded the perimeter of the maximum security prison and civilian correction employes and overnight duty of guards pulled marathon shifts inside.

Gov. Francis W. Sargent scheduled an evening television address on the prison situation.

The guards, continuing their protest over the reform policies of Correction Commissioner John O. Boone, sent their representatives to the State House in Boston to seek a settlement guaranteeing them more control. Boone, meanwhile, went to the prison to meet with officials.

"We have an illegal work stoppage," Boone said. "Things look well despite that. Hopefully, things will be coming together in the next few days. We will not tolerate disorder like this."

The 580 inmates of Walpole were let out of their cells at mid-day and life in the prison was reported nearly normal.

"It's calm; we've had no disturbances," said John McLean, the Correction Department's spokesman.

Rape Conference Saturday

The Northampton area women's centers are co-sponsoring a rape speakout and conference Saturday at the Northampton Unitarian Church. The conference is scheduled to last from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

The conference is aimed at encouraging women to begin to deal with rape in a supportive atmosphere, examine their own feelings, and discover methods of psychological and physical self-defense.

Child care will be available all day at the Valley Women's Center, in Northampton.

The schedule of events is:
9:30 Arrival time.
10:00 Women's guerrilla theater on rape.
10:15 Speakout.
11:30 Lunchbreak—Body movement workshop. (Lunch not provided).
1:30 Politics of rape-workshop on the political, legal and historical aspects of rape.
3:00 Workshop on attitudes.
4:00 Self-defense workshop: Boston experts on Tae Kwan Do and a policewoman on street defense.

Student Senate Committees

Concert Subsidy Rejected

By MARK B. CITRON

The Student Senate Budgets Committee last night handed the Concert Committee a defeat in the Campus Center over a confrontation whether Student Activities Tax Funds (SATF) would be used to subsidize concerts.

The subsidy results from the Concert Committee holding its concerts in Curry Hicks Cage, while trying to hold ticket prices to a $3.50 maximum. Bob Chiller of the Budgets Committee said, "The Cage can hold 4,000 people. The student body will end up subsidizing those 4,000 who get to go to the concert."

Paul Doran, Chairperson of the Budgets Committee said the lower ticket prices would be "hiding a cost (of tickets) in SATF. When you use SATF money or the students are still paying the money to go through the door."

Mary Paulson of the Concerts Committee said the Committee's budget costs were a "dimension of bringing concerts back to this campus." Ms. Paulson continued, "We have planned a series of 5 major concerts to appeal to different musical tastes."

The Concerts Committee five concert concept called for a $58,800 budget. The Budgets Committee tentatively approved a $18,000 budget for a single, free concert.

Angry members of the Concert Committee discussed their grievances in a room down the hall.

Lee Trousdale, Concerts Committee Chairperson said, "We lost the battle in areas . . . go out and stir up reaction."

In other decisions by the Budget Committee, it was decided to:—approve retention of $1.50 per year tax on students for the Distinguished Visitors Program—approve Student Homophile League budget of $839.00—fund a new University Day School Toy Lending Library for $1500.

Sylvan Exempt From Increase

By SHARON HUGHES

The Senate and Fees Committee voted 8-5 on the second ballot last night to exempt Sylvan Area from a rent increase.

The vote followed 2-1/2 hours of debate involving 15 Sylvan residents, including Area President Mickey Harris.

"I've been living in Sylvan for two years," said Skip Casper, a Sylvan resident. "The rooms are unbearably small and a rent increase would be too extreme for an ordinary student to pay."

Sylvan's rent has been $700 per year for the past two years. It has a large operating deficit because it is the newest residential area, and is currently subsidized by Southwest.

"I don't think we should kill Southwest in favor of Sylvan," said Chairperson Mike Gregory. He suggested that Sylvan's rent be increased, but not as much as the other areas.

Senator Joe Smith changed his vote the second time from a limited increase to no increase. He said "It is the price difference that makes you move to an area. The difference between Sylvan and the other areas will be smaller if the rent is kept stable."

At one point in the debate, Sylvan residents complained about the cut in janitorial services and the lack of lounge carpeting and furniture. One resident said jokingly, "If you raise Sylvan's rent, even the towers will look better."

Committee member Steve Von Lichtenburg suggested that future rent increases be paid by the state legislature. He said that UMass ranks 49th in the nation in the amount of subsidy they receive from the state.

Occupancy rates go a long way in determining dorm rent. Projected rate for next semester is 93%. Chuck Hampton, financial manager of resident halls, said the University will admit more women next year in an attempt to build occupancy because women usually live on campus longer than men.

In other business, the committee established the purpose, authority and membership of the proposed Food Services Advisory Board.

Knee Petition In CC

A group of UMass students are circulating a petition supporting 31 Indian persons indicted by the government at Wounded Knee, S.D.

The petitions will be sent to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Senator George S. McGovern of South Dakota, and President Richard M. Nixon.

A table will be set up in the Campus Center Concourse today and next week for persons who wish to express their support for the Indians indicted at Wounded Knee.

A group of militant Indians has held a trading post at Wounded Knee for several weeks and the government has set up blockades around the post. More indictments are expected to be returned against the Indians, who are holding the fort to dramatize the conditions suffered by American Indians.

Faculty Senate

New Majors OK'd

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD

Majors in Japanese and Chinese as well as the creation of a budget council were approved by the Faculty Senate yesterday.

Other topics discussed and acted on included: changing the title of the Speech Department, abolishing the Faculty Senate subcommittee on Military Studies, and endorsing collective bargaining.

The Academic Matters Committee proposed the establishment of Chinese and Japanese as fields of major study, under the College of Arts and Sciences. Along with this motion it was proposed that a certificate in Asian Studies be an option. A certificate is the official validation of a student's minor.

Both of these motions passed with no debate.

Upon the recommendations of the present Budget Committee, the Rules Committee of the Faculty Senate proposed the endorsement of a budget council, to be created in the hopes of insuring "more open and explicit procedures" in the allocation of University funds. This council would have faculty and student representation, and would make budget recommendations to the administration.

Fear was expressed that such a group might become too powerful in carrying out their proposed duties, even to the point of replacing many of the present budgeting powers of the Faculty Senate and the administration. The motion was changed from "endorses the Budget Committee recommendation" to "takes note of" the same. The amended motion was passed.

Academic Matters again proposed legislation requesting that the title of the Speech Department be changed to Department of Communications, with no change in the resources of teachers allotted to that department. After a comment from the Engineering Department on the use of the word "communications", the motion passed.

The next order of business was a motion by Senator George T. Sulzner to abolish the subcommittee on Military Studies of the Committee on Academic Matters. In his rationale for this proposal, Senator Sulzner stated, "This motion is a recognition of the comparability of this department to other departments on campus."

Since ROTC was approved for restoration to academic credit by a recent Faculty Senate vote, he said that there was no reason for a special subcommittee to exist any longer and differentiate ROTC from other fields of study.

Senator Robert R. Wellman supported Senator Sulzner's motion by adding, "A special surveillance of this department is implied by the existence of the Military Science subcommittee."

In opposition to the motion, it was suggested that the sub-committee be maintained to enable the Faculty Senate to retain veto power over the appointment of ROTC instructors. At present, ROTC instructors are assigned by the military and do not come under the same scrutiny as faculty applicants.

If the Military Science subcommittee were abolished, then the means to review these military appointments would be impaired. The motion was defeated.

As a final order of business, a motion by Senator Frank R. Hugus called for the endorsement of collective bargaining on behalf of the faculty. Since the Faculty Senate felt the issue of collective bargaining was still too uncertain to "endorse", several amendments were added to this motion. All of these were met with debate.

It was noted that in April the author of a recent book on collective bargaining at the university level would be holding an open forum on campus to discuss these issues.

The meeting was adjourned with no action taken on Senator Hugus' motion.

All POWs Leave China

By DOUG E. FIFIELD
Associated Press Writer

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP) China emptied its prisons of its last American captives Thursday, permitting non-U.S. liners to cross into Hong Kong.

They flew on to Clark for boat to the Philippines to join 68 prisoners of war freed a day earlier in Hanoi with another 10 due out Friday.

Air Force Maj. Philip E. Smith, 36, and Lt. Cmdr. Robert J. Flynn, 35, of the Navy, were labeled "detainees" rather than "prisoners of war" by American officials because there were no hostilities between the United States and China.

But the families, who flown over China while as Vietnam remained, immediately used "into the same room" with the POWs and began exercising similar medical checks and administrative processing.

The number of prisoners here will be swelled to 68 Friday when 8 more American servicemen, including Navy Capt. Harry Jenkins, who has been a POW longer than any American in history, and five American civilians are freed in Hanoi and brought to Clark. All were captured by the Viet Cong in South Vietnam between 1964 and 1968.

By Saturday, the total here is expected to begin falling as prisoners fallen POWs board in the last 4 U.S. weeks, and fly home to the United States.

Leading the 11 prisoners of the Viet Cong who fly into Clark on Friday is the third and last in a last phase of the POW releases are Special Forces Maj. Floyd J. Thompson, 36, who has been a POW for longer than any other American, and Philip H. Shubert, 31, the senior U.S. diplomat captured in the Vietnam war.

Thompson, of Ft. Bragg, N.C., was an adviser and was captured while his commandeering guerrillas just before the 1968 on March 26, 1968. He will have been a prisoner just 10 days short of nine years.

Shubert, of McLean, Va., senior program adviser to Hue, was taken prisoner Jan. 31, 1968 during the Tet offensive.

China assured U.S. presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger in talks in Peking earlier this year that South and Flynn would be freed during the last months of the Vietnam POW releases. They were the last Americans held in China.

Only days days ago, Thomas Grimsley, 24, a specialist from Georgia, 36, who was captured during the Korean War, and imprisoned for more than 20 years.

Smith and Flynn crossed the border into Hong Kong on Thursday, escorted by an American Red Cross representative.

Smith had a surprise reunion with a brother, Jim, now living in Hong Kong, whether with him in a hospital plane to Clark.

The 107 military POWs who flew to here from Hanoi on Wednesday pressed on with their processing stops to complete it so they can get back to the United States and be reunited with their families.

In the processing continued, military officials were becoming convinced that the more than 1,000 men missing in action in Vietnam probably are dead killed in plane crashes or dead of wounds suffered in crashes.

Dollar Dives In Europe

But speculation was that Shultz plans to compare on Friday in Paris at least British Washington moves to help a common market monetary package take effect.

Nixon Nixes Aide Testimony

By LEE BYRD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon challenged the Senate Thursday to a Supreme Court fight over his refusal to let an aide testify at the confirmation hearing of L. Patrick Gray III as director of the FBI.

Commenting at a time of rising clamor over the division of power between the executive and legislative branches, Nixon vowed that "members of the White House will not appear before a committee of Congress in any formal session."

Senate Democratic members of the Senate Judiciary Committee have talked of stopping Gray's nomination unless Nixon is legal counsel, John W. Dean III, will answer questions over exchanges he had with the FBI concerning the Watergate bugging scandal.

Nixon said he "cannot believe" that the Senate would hold Mr. Gray on hostage, but he added that "perhaps this is the time to have the highest court of the land make a definitive decision" on the over-all issue of executive privilege.

Asked repeatedly at an unannounced news conference about the Gray and Watergate issues, Nixon insisted he offer to have Dean furnish information "provided it is pertinent."

Generally, said Nixon, "this administration has been more forthcoming than any Democratic administration I know of. If the Senate feels that they want a court test we would welcome it."

On Capitol Hill, Judiciary Committee members shied away from having a court test.

Some of them, including Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., indicated that any such showdown would end the Watergate investigation to be made by a select Senate Committee headed by Sen. Sam J. Ervin, Jr., D-N.C.

Ervin said Dean would be "a very relevant witness" at his committee's hearings and he would recommend he be subpoenaed if Nixon refused to let him appear.

Instead of the Judiciary Committee subpoenaing Dean, he said, "it might just say to the President we're not going to act on the Gray nomination."

All committee members polled seemed to agree that the only way a court test could be brought about would be subpoenaing Dean and then, if he refused to respond, have the Senate cite him for contempt. This would throw the case into the courts.

Panama Not 51st Star

By CHARLES GREEN
Associated Press Writer

PANAMA (AP) — Brig. Gen. Omar Torrijos declared Panama does not want to become another star in the U.S. flag, called for world support Thursday in bringing this republic complete control of the Canal Zone.

The Panamanian strong man made the appeal in the opening session of the special Latin-American meeting here of the U.N. Security Council.

U.S. Ambassador John Scali, who made his first official appearance in a U.N. body, said Americans have that Torrijos was attempting a cover-up and "knocking on a door that's wide open" insofar as a new canal agreement and better relations are concerned.

Torrijos, who took over after a National Guard coup against the newly elected government of Arnulfo Arias in October 1968, appeared before the Security Council in a dark civilian suit, although he is the military commander in chief.

Reading from a prepared text, he said: "It is more noble to convert an error than continue it." This was a reference to the 1903 U.S.-Panama treaty that gave the United States sovereignty and jurisdiction over the 10-square-mile Canal Zone forever.

"Of the world here present," the general added, "we ask your moral support in this fight which is now reaching the limits of the patience of our people."

Torrijos harassed by unknown the United States and the organization of American States for the economic blockade of Cuba for the last decade.

The general was the only major speaker in the opening session of the extraordinary Security Council meeting.

Hanoi Claims Violations

By GEORGE EPPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)—Hanoi charged on Thursday that U.S. reconnaissance planes over North Vietnam on Monday and Tuesday and terminated the flights, "most violations" of the Vietnam peace agreement. It was the first such charge made by Hanoi in the 6 days the cease-fire has been in effect.

While the U.S. Military Command declined comment on the allegations, other American sources acknowledged it is possible that American planes "got in too close." These sources added, that the United States "is not worried" about the charges. They said the allegations will be checked and if confirmed, corrective action will be taken.

The peace agreement signed in Paris Jan. 27 by the United States and North Vietnam prohibits reconnaissance flights over North Vietnam, but it is not clear from the text that, as far as they know the United States has lowered the cease of the agreement.

The U.S. Command has acknowledged that American reconnaissance flights are continuing over South Vietnam. The United States says its interpretation of the agreement is that only reconnaissance flights over North Vietnam are banned.

A Radio Hanoi broadcast said that at 10:40 a.m. Monday, two U.S. jets "coming from the South violated the air space of Cao Bo, Vinh Son, Vinh Nam and Vinh Thai in the Vinh Linh area and flying the to Quang Binh Province." This would be in a coastal area stretching about 60 miles above the demilitarized zone.

"At 1 p.m. on March 6 a U.S. reconnaissance plane flew along the coast from Vinh Linh to Thanh Hoa," Radio Hanoi said. Thanh Hoa is 60 miles above the demilitarized zone.

Although North Vietnam has accused the United States of being a party to violations of the cease-fire by the Saigon government, this was the first time the Communists have charged the United States itself with a direct offensive violation.

Hanoi had charged earlier on several occasions that the United States was making in removing mines it planted in North Vietnamese waters. The same article of the agreement that prohibits all U.S. military activities against North Vietnam, including reconnaissance operations, also provides that the United States will remove, neutralize or destroy all mines.

In Washington, the Pentagon reported Thursday that several of the thousands of mines planted in North Vietnamese waters were lost May are exploding by themselves as a result of self-destructive mechanisms.

Price Battle

Housewife New Weapon

By H. ARMADOR WORKS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon Thursday ruled out price controls on food and said the most powerful weapon in combating high prices is the American housewife.

"And I would suggest that the fact that some of the pressures on prices may be lessening now is a result of housewives buying more carefully, may have some good effect," he said.

Nixon, at a news conference, said of the housewife: "Her decisions, as she says, whether she buys something that is more expensive or less expensive, have a far greater effect on price control than anything we do here."

As for joining a consumer boycott, Nixon said "I generally do not feel that that is an effective use of what we call 'people power'."

Nixon, wearing a blue suit, appeared relaxed and confident, smiling often as he answered questions from among several hundred reporters at his first news conference this year. Nixon began the session with announcement that he has dispatch veteran diplomat David K.E. Bruce to head a liaison office in Peking. The Communist Chinese shortly will name the chief of their liaison office which will be set up in Washington, he said.

The President issued a warning to the North Vietnamese saying they should not "lightly disregard" U.S. expressions of concern about violations of the cease-fire agreement. In other matters, Nixon:

—Challenged the Senate to a Supreme Court test over his refusal to allow his legal counsel, John W. Dean III, to testify at hearings on the nomination of L. Patrick Gray III, to be head of the FBI.

—Said the administration will sell materials from its strategic stockpiles in a move to push prices down.

—On the possibility of foreign travel, said he has received recommendations that he visit Europe, Latin America, Africa and Japan and may make one trip in early summer and another one in the fall. He did not say where he would go.

—Said he is for mandatory criminal penalties with regard to hard drugs "because I think we have to move vigorously in this area." He also restated his support of the death penalty for certain offenses.

Nixon said his administration is giving "highest priority to get the pressures on prices down" through measures to increase supply and productivity.

One new measure, he said, is the decision to sell materials from the government's stockpile of strategic and critical raw materials. Nixon said he has concluded it would be "safe for the United States to very substantially reduce" the stockpile.

A high administration source said the administration can sell $1.3 billion from the stockpile without congressional approval and probably will ask Congress for authority to sell additional billions in stockpile items.

Soviets Censor 'Anti' Authors

By GORDON HUSPERT
Associated Press Writer

MOSCOW (AP) In new Soviet law would prohibit Thursday could sharply restrict publication in the West of works by Russian authors considered anti-Soviet.

The law is likely to be approved by the Supreme Soviet, parliament, Feb. 16 but officially published Thursday in the legislative body's latest issue of new legislation. It was signed by President Nikolai V. Podgorny.

The decree modifies Soviet law in connection with Moscow's accession on Feb. 16 that it will become a party to the Universal Copyright Convention effective May 27.

The law seemed aimed at stopping publication abroad of "samizdat" works critical of the regime, banned, which remain still published, circulation clandestinely in typewritten copies and many such works eventually reach the West and are published there.

U.S. Fills Peking Post

By FRANCES LEWINE
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) President Nixon announced Thursday the appointment of veteran ambassador David K.E. Bruce to head a liaison office in Peking, to improve relations between the United States and Communist China.

While he was upgrading the peaceful relations with mainland China, the President issued warning to the North Vietnamese not to "lightly disregard" U.S. expressions of concern about reports of their infiltration of heavy equipment, including tanks, down the Ho Chi Minh trail since the cease-fire.

In a news conference, Nixon said such violations could have "rather serious consequences," although he said he hoped that would not be the case.

"Based on my actions over the past four years," Nixon said, "the North Vietnamese should not lightly disregard such expressions of concern" about cease-fire violations.

The President launched his third news conference of the year with an announcement that Bruce would be chief of the liaison office, benefiting the first official exchange of contacts with the Communist Chinese in over 30 years.

While the United States still has no formal diplomatic relations, Nixon's choice of the 70-year-old former ambassador, who has been in retirement, provided a high level representation that had not been expected.

Drinking, But No Talking

By EDITH M. LEDERER

OTTAWA (AP) Foreign Minister Mitchell Sharp of Canada brought off the diplomatic coup of the Vietnam war Thursday night by get a Viet Cong general and U.S. ambassador Ellsworth Bunker within a foot of each other.

Sharp and the Canadian delegation to the International Commission of Control and Supervision were hosts at a reception and the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong delegation to the four-party Joint Military Commission offered up for their first foray into Saigon's diplomatic whirl.

Lt. Gen. Tran Van Tra of the Viet Cong and Bunker were in the same room at one point but never looked each other in the eye. In fact, a newsman had to tell the diminutive general, clad in a green jungle uniform, who the tall, impeccably dressed man was.

Nonetheless, the near-meeting was considered significant as one Western diplomat put it: "It shows that we can all exist together and drink together even though we don't necessarily talk to each other."

Sharp arrived in Saigon earlier Thursday for a firsthand look at the operation of the international commission to determine whether Canada will remain in it or pull out after 60 days. The 60 days is up March 18.

Immediately after his arrival, Sharp met with Foreign Minister Tran Van Lam of South Vietnam, who later turned up at the Canadian reception but also kept his distance from Tra and Mai Van Bunh, the Viet Cong first of South Vietnam.

Sharp and Lam urged Canada to remain on the Commission. Its end has also been rumored that the "big powers," including France and China, wanted the Canadians to remain. Sharp declined to discuss the rumours.

Though Sharp was the guest of honor, there was no doubt that Tra and Bun were the star attractions. Then upon the entire two-hour reception surrounded by newsmen with Canadian diplomats edging in from time to time.

"I wish to say Canada, Indonesia, Hungary and Poland remain on the commission and must do so impartial way," said Tra.

"They are still working together and they are still cooperating and contributing their force to work with the Joint Military Commission," added Bun.

On his arrival, Sharp said Canada was "not satisfied" with the way the international commission has been operating "but we are not without hope."

Good Luck

Tomorrow, the UMass Basketball team faces Missouri in the opening round of the National Invitational Tournament at Madison Square Garden. We wish the team the best of luck.

One of the major reasons for the success of the Minutemen has seemingly been the support of the fans. Anyone who has gone to a game at the Cage this year will attest to the fact that a bunch of screaming, [illegible] fans can have over a team. For games [illegible], Northeastern, UConn, and of course, [illegible] proof of this fact.

[illegible] Gardens is not as cozy as the Cage, but [illegible] 4200 crazy UMies could squeeze into the [illegible]den has room for 1900 crazy UMies. And no one [illegible] other schools. We urge everyone to make [illegible] effort to get down and support the team.

Inside Our New Library

While the new library has many faults, it will be a far superior facility to Goodell. Increases in study areas and the number of books that can be accommodated are only two of the advantages offered by the innovative structure. There are some major hurdles to be overcome before the new library can be operated efficiently.

The present library has a seating capacity for 1000 readers; the new one will have a seating capacity of over 3000. Goodell can accommodate somewhere around a million volumes (at present, there are about 1.2 million volumes in the library's collection but many of these are in branch offices). The new building can hold over 2.5 million volumes. Presently, the average annual increase is the number of volumes is about 100,000. So, it would seem that in fifteen years the new building would be overcrowded; however, this will not take place. First of all, because many of the volumes will be in the branch libraries (right now over 70,000 books can be found in the two principal branches). Secondly, the basement, which was designed to hold three-quarters of a million books, can be arranged to shelve over 1.25 million volumes. The new library will not be overcrowded in the foreseeable future.

Steve Smith

The library is not sinking.

Some of the problems of the new library, like every other institution on campus, involve a shortage of funds. There will be some equipment deficits. Instead of six elevators, as was originally planned, there will be five (the effects of this can only be determined after the building opens). Some carrels from Goodell will have to be moved into the new building, simply because there aren't enough new ones. Another problem involves supports for the stack floors. The library is arranged so that, after the sixth floor, the floor sequence is study, stack, stack. The study floors have supports built in to sustain the stack floors above; but the stack floors do not have the ability to hold up another stack floor without additional bracing. A plan was developed to use the shelves in the stack floors to brace the floor above. Unfortunately, there aren't shelves on all the stack floors, so shelves from Goodell will have to be moved into the new edifice. Dismantling the shelves, moving them, and then reassembling them, will not only be a pain in the ass, but it will slow the moving process.

There are some problems caused by the height of the building. Shelving books in a 28-story building is much more difficult than shelving books in a shallow building of the same square-footage. This is not a major problem, however, and should not detract from the general library services. Someone had a mighty fine idea on how the different collections of books should be arranged. Law, politics and government will all be on the same floor, even though their call letters are not similar or in sequence. The adjacent floors will shelve related materials, so you won't have to run all over the building looking for books on similar subjects. A problem could arise here. If one subject, say psychology, should suddenly mushroom and overflow its stack space, books would have to be shuffled from floor to floor to accommodate the new entries. But since this probably occurs at Goodell, it should not cause a major catastrophe. The expansion of library services has been [illegible] over the last ten years, [illegible] volumes. Two new departments have been created since the plans for the new facilities were drawn.

The library officials expect an explosion in use with the new study rooms available. They believe that the number of students using their services will skyrocket, as it has at other schools that have expanded their libraries. They anticipate that the explosion will hit one or two sections the most, probably the circulation and reserve departments. This could mean that new help would be necessary, but the library management hopes to avoid this by automation of some services. People more will be transferred to the circulation and reserve departments. The first few months of operation will decide if this program is workable. Communications will be installed on each floor, so that it will be possible to talk to any department. I would hope that this service would be arranged to allow calls to the card catalogues. If someone's up on the seventh floor and they discover they have the wrong call number, walking back down again would be a pain. Also, it seems that librarians should be stationed on every few floors, so that they could enter to summary or student, and remain to available to answer inquiries.

The new library is a fairly well executed project, although we must reserve final judgment until it is in operation. It is some a long way from the dream of some architect to place a twenty-eight story marble building in the middle of our pond.

Stick To Your Guns

Part I: The Conflict Syndrome

Whenever you read an article in a paper about new U.S. foreign negotiations, you read of Senator "hawkish", rather than disagreements, conflict rather than resolution. Wars, we are told were a matter of conquests. America's expansion was bought, not by any divine providence, but rather by force of arms, by power of weapons, by death and guns . . .

Now, we're still expanding, as much as we ever have been. I mean not it is through more the power solution or the tools and through strategic action with the underdeveloped—or, rather, robbed—nations of the world, thus richly letting the United States' own unique brand of imperialism (despite the cultural statistic, folks—just a passing nightmare . . .) and, yes, we are still tied to the mentality of the gun.

We still have a tendency to view people, not as persons to persons, but (in the interest of enlightened self interest, you understand—of course) how much power that person and/or institution may have over us. So, you see, we must understand how much power, and who wields that power. Why? Self-preservation, dears . . .

Part II: "It Can't Happen Here . . ."

We need these people to protect us. (From what?), oh, from personal theft, rape, war . . . ; and they're really necessary. I mean, police have to have guns for the protection of the populace.

Here, Bill, this is supposed to be a civilized country, isn't it? Yeah . . . well, it really isn't. (Why not?) Well, it's human nature . . . (Doesn't that have a lot of unstated assumptions in it? . . . yeah, and I'm not about to change my mind!

Thus we have no one and no our resources to take. We don't have to rely on them any more. We can achieve our important wants by larger whenever conservation we don't had that is . . . Food, say? Why? Because we now have interests to protect . . . unfortunately. We've so coordinated as they'll ever come, and we're losing it.

Part III: "Four Dead in Ohio . . ."

Now, the first time you do whatever a tragedy occurs to strike a bit inward (or a tear) for the counter-culture to sympathize with. But every one of us forgets the lessons we learn from these things. Again, you flick on a switch (or write a letter) and your conscience is assuaged. The generality, he we forget. Looking in our dictionaries we discover ourselves. When something like Kent State happens, we remember it as the basis of a Neil Young lyrical. When something like Southern University happens, we flinch it from our minds. Ergo, in order to get decent coverage of a social desperately felt (and if you don't think that these occurrences aren't symptoms of a larger problem . . . phew!), people need to act desperately. There no longer exists an impression (if indeed he impression ever did exist) of . . . "Golly, that could happen to me . . ." Why so yet?

Part IV: Hang Loose, you're dead . . . you'll never bother me again

The issue of gun control on campus, and the (assumed) larger issue of nationwide gun legislation, bring this into larger focus.

Now, it seems that a certain, rather abrasive, element on campus wants to avoid a potentially deadly situation . . . and believe me, anything with guns involved is a potentially deadly situation. No matter how unlikely, there is a possibility, and wherever there's possibility there is chance, and that chance is here-chilling.

Gun legislation—the refusal of guns in the populace is a good idea. Moreover, it has our total feeling. It assumes that the present system of law enforcement we're living under is fair. At the risk of being all my friend friends however, I would venture a notion—you do not discern the populace before you discern the enforcers. Because, you understand, with the current constitution of the government (as far as law enforcement is concerned) it isn't very appealing to me, and I'd rather not be in the defenseless side of the bazooka when the cooks begin controlling the structure to harbor's chilling vision. Of course, now we have nothing to fear. Thanks, dears. I wish you confusion.

An Exercise In Self-Discovery

by Patrick Collins

The Human Sexuality Course bought by the Student Senate offers more than its description into suggests. Moreover, as of the course, "We're concerned with discovery what matters as a total human being, which includes the dimension of human sexuality." The course is sometimes criticized by people who apparently read too much into the term, Human Sexuality, and are certain Moreover, an awkward minister is heading "this hour". "We do not talk of and are unfamiliar, sex acts, or sexual adjustment," Moreover explains. "We don't center on sex per se. In fact that almost seems to be minor in our course."

He describes his purpose with the course, "In helping people come to a greater awareness of one part of themselves that society very often seems to indicate might be kept hidden, into a state that other other." He adds, "I don't know why we've chosen this to be such a big thing in our society. It's unfortunate—so many of us have been passed the feeling that our human sexuality stands very shaky, except in very limited ways. We grow up with the sense of being assessed in comparison in terms of the totality of persons."

The experiential approach of the exercises involved distinguishes it from most other University courses. "It is like no other course; you don't start by studying a book, taking an exam. You are the subject, a learning experiment in the course itself. "I'm the guy who gets an exercise and you live through it and allow words those about it. It is so much more real that way. The only way to learn is by exposing yourself to the realities of your own feelings." Moreover says the exercises are helpful and positive in terms of fulfillment and growth. The important test of the exercise he asks afterwards is, "Did it make you feel better about yourself?"

He indicates he has worked with the students here and says, "I've had very positive comments from only of the kids I've ever worked with. Some have had dramatic changes in their lives, have discovered new things about themselves.

An Exercise In Self-Discovery

selves, have allowed feedback for the first time in their lives without being defensive. They have become more sensitive to the way people feel, and they can reach out and touch without feeling wrong."

Munson's background in Humanistic Education shows in his philosophy that one of the most important things in education is studying the self. With that knowledge gained, he feels one can deal much more realistically with all those things outside of self, in the environment and socially. He stresses self determination saying, "...you are your own master. If you want to make changes in your patterns, in the way you interact, it is all on you." In the class, learning is joined in head and heart to give an integrated experience with knowledge.

Munson is over 6'1" and at a conservative estimate weighs 250 lbs. One student, after a blind-fold exercise in class said, "There was one time when I grabbed two people... and it could have been you." Others have described him as a "beardless Santa Claus" or "a jolly great big man". Once a week he has an open house party for his students. "He's the professor I've gotten closest to. He makes me feel I can pour out anything," one of his students said. Another said, "No other single person has had as much shaping effect on my life. Howard's helped me see people can relate to me, trust me. I could never accept that before."

Some of the students have a difficult time trying to explain the class. "When I tried to describe the class to someone I really couldn't. The words wouldn't fit." "It's an experience. It's not something I can describe," a T.A. said, "I could put it into words, but you have to feel it to know what it is." Another T.A. said, "It is not a course you should take for the credit or the grade. It is something you ought to experience."

Students are very verbal about the effect of the course on their own lives. "The change I've felt... I was an introvert, without self-confidence. I've opened up now. I've blossomed." Another enthusiastic student said, "I've learned to open up and trust. I've learned to relate to myself and to other people." One student simply said, "This has been the most exciting class of my life."

Classes are day long experiences and held on Saturdays or Sundays, spaced through the semester. The atmosphere is one of caring and touching. Although the exercises are laboratory or in a sense artificial, the feelings they arouse are very real. Blindfold exercises encourage care and trust. Thumb wrestling can be analgous to clashing personalities. "Do I always have to win?" Asks Howard, "Do I feel badly when I lose?" Staring contests encourage reflection on self-image. "Am I uncomfortable when I am stared at? How do I feel about staring at others?" he asks. Group embraces help foster a feeling of security. "It's great!"

Special emphasis is placed on not prejudging an exercise. Intellectualizing before an experience, Munson feels, too often acts as a substitute or a barrier to self-understanding. "We go through an experience without pre-judgements and afterwards process the way we behaved or the patterns we used." He goes on to say, "If we go through it without a predetermination of the outcome, we may discover that things we've held so dear and precious are not so important... or beneficial."

"We've got people wrestling with all kinds of big things," Munson said. Often times they're able to deal with it themselves after having had the classroom experience. One student pointed out, "Howard to me is a mirror. As I project myself out in the class, he'll verbalize it, present a picture of it. It's helped me to see myself." And then said, "I believe people need the freedom to explore themselves. I've gotten it here."

"We are concerned with how 'I' relate, who 'I' am, where 'I' am, and what it means," Munson said. "We stress care and trust in relationships and in being able to transact with people better, and we try to help people feel more comfortable about themselves."

Munson and his Human Sexuality class deal with the ilemna of being human. We find it difficult to be at ease with, to accept comfortably and joyously, our own flesh or body. A source close to Howard philosophized, if we have an understanding of our sexuality and we really make it work, it makes us more, not less, receptive to each other as people. It's an excellent entry into learning that we are people - probably the only one our sort of society can really use at the moment. There may be other places we can express all of ourselves, and do it mutually, but there aren't many.

'When I tried to describe the class to someone I really couldn't."

What is the New England Center for Personal and Organizational Development? To many in the Amherst area it is a mysterious organization functioning out of the woods somewhere in Leverett that they've heard stories about but admit about which they know nothing. To the many who live, work, or participate in workshops at the Center, it is a home away from home where they can become part of a caring community formed for the purpose of developing human potential and heightening personal awareness.

Occupying a large new building on Route 63 in Leverett, the New England Center is run by a small group of dedicated professionals working together as a non-profit organization in order to bring as much knowledge and help to the surrounding community as they possibly can. Jack Canfield, the Center's director, is a doctoral candidate in Humanistic Education at the University of Massachusetts and the author of About Me, A Guide To Humanistic Education, and 100 Ways to Enhance Self-Concept in the Classroom. Judy Ohlbaum-Canfield, a clinical psychologist who has trained extensively with Fritz Perls and Jim Simkin, is the director of the Center's Gestalt Training Program. Together with an impressive list of the finest men and women in the fields of Psychology and Education, the Canfields present a variety of workshops covering such topics as Gestalt Therapy, Psychodrama, Bioenergetic, T'AI CHI, Aikido, Psychosynthesis, Body Movement and Massage.

A workshop can take many forms from chanting, singing, and dancing to meditating, talking and self probing but all result in the groups creating together an atmosphere most conducive to fostering an healthy self-awareness. The workshops shouldn't be confused with Encounter or T-groups because at the Center no one is out to attack anyone else only there to help. The entire atmosphere is different, there is less risk involved. You are allowed and encouraged to share all you want but never forced to expose more than you feel comfortable sharing. The participants in the workshops at the Center range from college age students to retired professionals all there for the same purpose of exploring themselves and giving any help they are possibly able to give to each other. For the Five-College Community this an opportunity which none should pass up.

Judy Ohlbaum-Canfield and Jack Canfield

Upon entering the Center's building you immediately sense the high energy and the community spirit of those who live and work there. Many of the young people living at the Center are volunteering their help in the office or doing carpentry on the nearly completed second building of the New England Center. Others are working as apprentices under the guidance of the Center's directors in order to become skilled in giving workshops themselves. After a few minutes into any workshop it is hard not to notice that all age, racial, and intellectual barriers are broken down and the participants function as a whole with the good of the group foremost in mind. None of the workshops demand prior knowledge in the subject matter, just an open mind and a willingness to learn and explore new areas.

Some of the upcoming workshops include:

The Way Out Is Through The Door:
an introduction to altered states of consciousness
Led by Don Mastriano on Wednesday, March 21
Time: 7-11 p.m. Fee: $3.00; Students $2.00
Don will be exploring the science of Altered States of Human Consciousness both intellectually and experientially, utilizing knowledge and techniques from "esoteric" psychologies, trance, psychosynthesis, music therapy, movement, art, media, parapsychology, ...and whatever else seems appropriate.

Aikido: a way of spiritual harmony
Led by Robert Frager, Ph.D. on Friday, March 23
Time: 8-11 p.m. Fee: $3.00; Students $2.00
This will be a lecture-demonstration with films and some exercises in Aikido and energy centering led by a professional student of Yoga and other Eastern systems of spiritual growth, who studied Aikido in Japan under the founder, Master Morihei Ueshiba, and holds the rank of third-degree black belt.

Dr. Frager will also lead a weekend workshop in Aikido Saturday 9 a.m.-5 p.m., Sunday 9 a.m.-5 p.m., March 24-25. Fee: $45.00 (instructor fee and food for group).
This particular workshop will stress the basic aikido principles of centering and energy awareness, rather than mastery of complex physical techniques. Centering exercises will include work on relaxation, free and fluid movement, and harmony and blending with others. The workshop will be oriented to therapists, educators and others involved in professions.

Structural Integration: a lecture demonstration
Led by Jim Asher on Sunday, March 25.
Time: 7:30-10:30 p.m. Fee: $2.00
By realigning the body structure, the Rolf method of structural integration attempts to release excessive tensions so that a person may experience greater physical and emotional freedom. The assumption is that a person's body and set are a mirror of his emotional past as well as a result of physical trauma. Structural Integration is a process of direct physical manipulation and deep massage; working with a trained practitioner, the process is usually completed within ten individual sessions.

An Introduction To ARICA Training
Led by the Center Staff on Wednesday, March 28
Time: 7-11 p.m. Fee: $3.00; Students $2.00
This workshop will be an introduction to the ARICA training, which is a complete science of personal and spiritual development encompassing man's body, mind, emotions and spirit. It is an efficient method for developing an objective, joyous awareness of ourselves and our world and is a synthesis of techniques drawn from many disciplines and adapted to the present needs of us and our society.

The Preparation Of The Vessel: applied psychosynthesis
A weekend workshop led by Mark Horowitz, March 30-April 1.
Time: Friday (7:30-11 p.m.), Saturday (10 a.m.-10 p.m.), Sunday (10 a.m.-4 p.m.)
Fee: $35.00 (covers instructors fee and food for group)
Psychosynthesis is a positive, integrative process of self development. This workshop will experiment with ways of generating and storing Energy. Then focusing and using this Energy for work on the Self. Through exercises and techniques such as drawing, movement, visualization, guided imagination, journals, and meditations you will move toward isolating and experiencing the answer to the question "Who am I?" The workshop is ideally suited for young adults (high school and college students) and the teachers of your adults.

Why not do something really constructive with some of the time over your Spring vacation and participate in one of the many workshops at the New England Center for Personal and Organizational Development, you'll only be helping yourself! To register or for more information call 549-0886 or visit the New England Center in Leverett. You can obtain their brochure of workshops for the spring semester by writing to the Center at Box 575, Amherst, Mass. 01002.

Books

Down With Encounter Groups

By Ed Smith

The Encounter Game by Bruce L. Maliver. Ph.D.
$7.95 Stein and Day 250 pp.

It should be made clear from the very beginning that The Encounter Game is a very critical and uncomplimentary look at encounter techniques. Dr. Maliver bases his attacks on personal experience with encounterist therapy, interviews with people who have engaged in this technique both as participants or leaders and, apparently, on general hearsay. The basis and impetus of this book was a "New York Times Sunday Magazine" article which appeared in January of 1971, written by Dr. Maliver, called "Encounter Groupers Up Against the Wall." He was encouraged to develop this article into a full-length book which would serve as a Ralph Nader type attack on encounter theory and theorists. Whether this book will become an anti-encounter bible is something which is still to be seen; however, it certainly is a book which deserves our attention because of the fact that it takes such a firm stand upon so controversial a subject.

Dr. Maliver centers his attack on the Esalen Institute in California and on several of its key figures. One of the opening chapters deals with Bill Schultz, an encounter leader of Esalen fame, and attempts to show the basic fallacy in encounter theory. Dr. Maliver remarks that, "Schultz views honesty as the key ingredient in man's salvation...", which seems fine until the encounter technique to bring this about is unveiled. The author, by reporting his own experience with Schultz and speaking with others, tries to show that the whole encounter scene becomes a farce. People feel compelled to unearth some dynamic problem within themselves and if they cannot find one they must create one. He also points out that many people go to encounter groups with real problems and emerge after a series of sessions in worse shape than they were in originally. This, the doctor claims, is due mainly to poorly trained group leaders who are unable to perceive psychological disorders.

The techniques of encounter are divided by the author into two categories: body and word manipulators. Dr. Ida Rolf is the chief proponent and originator of a body technique known as "rolfing." The process, very briefly, is aimed at straightening one's body by work on individual muscle groups. The theory claims that such correction will improve the person immensely in both body and mind. Dr. Maliver sees the process more in the light of beating someone up and when you stop hitting them it feels so good, that they think for a while you have helped them. The "word" manipulators, the doctor explains, have a strong basis in traditional psychotherapy. People such as Bill Schultz, Fritz Perls and Carl Rogers fall into this category. This method encourages honesty in communication above all other values. The doctor says the roots of this encounter theory in psychotherapy have been so badly distorted though, that he views this technique as useless in the vast majority of cases.

Dr. Maliver admits that there are some encounterists who are truly dedicated to helping people. This group though is very small compared to those who are in it for the money. (It would be well to note here that this same criticism could be applied to professional psychologists, psychiatrists and psychanalysts.) It is undeniable that massive amounts of money are being taken in by different encounter centers across the country. Where the money goes from there is another question; one which the author can only speculate on. The reasons why people go to encounter groups are more varied. There are those who go because they really need help with certain problems. These people, the doctor feels, make up a large group and are the ones who, potentially, can be most hurt by the encounter game. There are also those who go for business. For a couple of years many of the major corporations in this country sent their executives to encounter groups to raise their "sensitivity", group spirit and a myriad of other things. This type of encounter often brings about the opposite results. Instead of bringing the members of a company "team" together, the unfettered honesty in the groups often breaks them apart. School systems have also employed encounter groups in an effort to make their teachers more receptive to the students. Possibly, the doctor seems to feel, it should be the other way around, with students attempting to be more receptive to their instructors. The fourth area where the doctor denotes a great deal of interest in encounter is sex. He spends a great deal of time at various places in the book exploring this aspect, which he feels is one of the furthest degenerations of the theory.

The drug-rehabilitation houses, an extention of encounter theory, such as Phoenix, Odyssey and Exodus are treated in an ambivalent manner. He begins in a critical manner, pointing up inconsistincies between this form of encounter and the form used upon the middle-class counterparts. He ends the chapter though saying that encounter is probably more valuable in this context, if used with methadone, than anywhere else.

The chief criticism one can make of Dr. Maliver's book is that it is almost entirely without factual basis. This is also a criticism of the encounter groups, which, the doctor claims, very rarely keep records and if they do, they are incomplete and unscientific. The result is that the author finds himself in a rather paradoxical bind. The public is also caught in this bind and must therefore view the book with a skeptical eye. It would probably be useful to read a pro-encounter book to balance this one and judge for oneself.

The final and seemingly most valid criticism the doctor makes is the following: "I view the encounter game phenomenon as part of a social movement having at its core the irrational- and perhaps uniquely American-idea that people can be run through an emotional production line and come out with instant change and growth." The idea that growth can be produced in the above manner or delivered in a pill is probably an American phenomenon. However, the problem does not really seem to be the encounter game or drugs, but rather the way in which people view them. Rather than seeing these things as tools along the way to growth, they are seen as ends in themselves and frustration results when they do not produce. The same comparison could probably be made to all the prepackaged, preprocessed elements which have become so much a part of our daily lives, but when dealing in as delicate an area as the mind, easy solutions do not seem to be bringing about the desired results.

Music

Mimi Farina, Doc Watson, And Putney Folk

By E. Cohen

Putney, Vermont is a beautiful place. It is a small town that is the home of Windham College, and also the home of one of the few regular folk centers left in New England. It is an area condusive to folk; it often vibrates to the tunes of the folk performers that come there to play.

An agency which promotes many concerts in a seventy-five mile radius of Putney is based there. It is called Putney Folk, and at its front stands Bruce Bramson, a former student at Windham College. When questioned about his role in bringing concerts to the Putney area, concerts similar to the Mimi Farina, Fox Watson concert March 10, he replied in a careful, thoughtful voice that he respects music and the artists and he enjoys contact with people in the contest of our values scale. He has to enjoy his work, because contrary to popular opinion, promoting is not always a profitable business. He answered a question concerning economics by saying, "We produced five concerts here last fall; we did Mahavishna, John McGlaughlin; we did Doc Watson, Eric Anderson, Leo Kottke, and Dave Van Ronk. At the end of that five concert series, we had netted one hundred and six dollars. One hundred and six dollars is what the concert earned. And there are three of us trying to live off it. I have a mattress that I pull out and put on top of my desk at night. We pay $25 a month rent for our office space along with a $250 phone bill. The economics are really staggering and really tight and the three of us are really in the hole. Like this evening, there's a pretty good chance that we may lose about a thousand dollars." It takes a dedication unparalleled to that found in most other occupations to remain in this relatively unromantic business of concert promotion.

When asked how he started promoting concerts, Bruce said, "I got a BFA from Windham in painting and sculpture, and when I graduated, all my friends were musicians, and they asked me to find them work and I did. So I was doing a lot of it at College. It was a lot different then, because it was the college's money."

When asked if he had ever done any concerts with Mimi Farina in the past, he replied that Putney Folk did a series of three concerts last year consisting of performances at the Bluewall (University of Massachusetts), Mount Holyoke, and the Field House at Windham College. He said that he didn't know her very well; she was light and fun to be with, drinking in the Bluewall, but yet she was a quiet and intense person.

He had to leave as the concert soon started. Fox Watson began singing with what it seemed was a lack of enthusiasm, but his performance picked up speed. Being the comer for Mimi Farina put him in a tough spot, but he responded to the problem with decent music of his own. He began with guitar renditions of "Very Short Time", "Let's Go Out On The Town", "Stealin' ", and "Marco's Monkey". He then put down his guitar, raised a fiddle to his chin, and played some pretty involved Scottish music. Following a fancy fiddle tune, "Chief O'Neil's Favorite", he went over to the piano and got his banjo. Fox Watson is a pretty witty character. He knows how to use folk tales to introduce his music; and he knows when to insert a little comedy to loosen up the audience. He shot a glance to Pat Walters, his accompanist, and said, "Everyplace I go people ask me to play "Duelin Banjos"; "Duelin Banjos" is like the "Sunshine of Your Love" for Bluegrass. Patrick and I were coming up the road and we decided that we would name the song, "Mating Banjos."

He played a couple more finger pickin' pieces, including, "Shoot That Turkey Buzzard", spiked with some fiddle and a zesty guitar number called "Hooray for the Weekend". While he was playing his last fiddle tune the audience was clapping away. Fox is going to be at the Plow and Stars Bar in Cambridge around St. Patrick's day with a few more fiddlers, and that's one performance that nobody should miss.

As Fox left the stage, Mimi was introduced. Mimi walked onto stage, saying, "Thank you - I'm glad to be here". She introduced her backup guitartist, Floyd

Mimi Farina

Axton, and dedicated her first song to the boys in Vietnam. She followed "I Can See Clearly Now" with "Best of Lovers".

She said on stage, "I wrote a song called "Best of Lovers" ... Well this song "Best of Lovers" doesn't need a whole lot of introduction. It's just a song dedicated to all of you and all of my ex-lovers. You can laugh whenever you feel like it." She felt good to be singing at the college, but was a little disturbed at a lack of interest on the part of the audience.

After the concert she said, "I thought at first that nobody was really interested, and when that happens I just keep on working harder and harder; but by the end it felt good, but it's hard to know when there's a lot of noise out there; it feels as though there's a lack of interest and you kind of want to finish up and go home. So I couldn't tell till the end that they were having a nice time."

She followed this with a song that she wrote for her home state. She didn't like the idea that it might be a patriotic song and said, "...'cause I'm not all gung ho on patriotism. I figure if ther's something to be patriotic about, then that's great. But it's hard in this country to find something to really be strongly partriotic about."

Mimi's political views are rooted in her family heritage, since her sister, Joan Baez, and her mother have been very politically active in the past, willing to go to jail for their convictions. She is willing to speak her mind to satisfy her soul. She is willing to speak her mind to satisfy her soul. During a later interview she said, "Whatever is happening in the world affects whatever music is produced, and whatever music is produced influences the people who are listening to it, so if a violent revolution is going on in the country, the music that comes out is probably not going to be soft and light hearted, and whatever is sung to the public affects those people who listen.

That can be changed and I think should be changed, so if some thing really disruptive and violent or ugly is happening, you don't have to sing about it. I think what Janis Joplin did was to sing the anger we all felt; what she was feeling was really anger, and it turned everybody on because everybody could identify with something that they couldn't express themselves. On the other hand, a much deeper and cleverer thing to do would be to be able to express that anger but then say something about it, and go further than that, and not to encourage necessarily the bad side."

She begins to sing a song after "California" which is both sad and sweetly lyrical:

I am less than the song I am singing,
I am more than I thought I could be,
Spent some time as a child and been dreamin', as the young world a sails on the sea.
So come stand by my side where I'm going
Take my hand if I stumble to fall,
It's the strength that you share when you're going.
That gives me what I need most of all,
That gives me what I need most of all.

The lyrical quality of her music seems dreamlike. The images that she makes people form in their minds tell a little bit about her past. About her happiness and unhappiness. She is an excellent guitar player. She must have practiced long and hard to form her own musical identity, separate from her sister Joan's. She seems to reminisce about her past loves; about the poet Dick Farina, to whom she was once married, but who died in the spring of '66, in "the hell-bent-for-leather manner of his writings, in a motorcycle accident"; and about a later marriage.

She continues with "Sing a Sad Song" and an oldie, "Children of Darkness". She tells the audience that if they feel like singing along they are welcome to.

"...So many times I feel like a school teacher when I ask for people to sing along; it's not easy for me to do it, I don't know why; Pete Seeger can do it, he can divide the audience up into eight sections..."

Her next song, "Letter to Jesus", a song from her previous album with Tom Jans ("Take Care") is snappy, soulful, sad.

She likes talking to her audience. She tries to become intimate with the people who have come to listen to her.

She says, "...Now if you get pretty depressed, you know what to do..." She responds to Rowdiness in the audience with, "...must be the Ripple and the dope out there..." She tells her people that she is going to the bar at the motor lodge and hopes everyone will come." HoJo's is a hip place, she relates. She says that she's not so old and indeed she's not. Her beauty is only one of her assets; her versatility is another.

The promoter, Bruce Bramson, told us that the problem with working with Tom Jans was that it was a club oriented act. Now she's performing alone or with various artists. Her backup people are not consistent. This versatility has given her freedom to experiment.

After the show, Miss Farina reinterated with, "...my voice has changed a bit because I've become less inhibited. I always chose to sing with a partner cause I was afraid I wouldn't feel good singing by myself, and now at last I feel Okay doing it in a song and trying more things vocally, and I guess words will happen to me; I haven't been able to write in a while, but the stuff that I have written has been different from what I wrote two years ago..."

She sings "Madman" and "Charlotte", both songs from the album with Tom Jans. After introducing her guitar player, L. Newkirk, she quietly tells the gathering about her lipstick markings; lipstick and eyepencil marks from her teenage years. She gently scolds the lighting man for giving her soft lights which make her unable to see her guitar markings. But Mimi excuses him by saying, "...soft lights for a soft song."

She sings "In the Quiet Morning" which was a tribute to Janis Joplin, and "Pack Up Your Sorrows".

Someone hollars out. Mimi yells, "Why don't you go back and go to bed."

Someone yells out the song title, "Old Tatoo".

"Not here," Mimi giggles.

Her last number was "Amazing Grace", and it was sung in spiritualist fashion with the audience humming along.

She said goodnight to the audience, and as she walked off the stage, someone cried out "God Bless You, Mimi."

Why does Mimi Farina sing?

"If I have any reason on this earth it's to deal with making people feel good or better, and sometimes I get really pushy about making people see themselves, like I'm hard on my friends. I don't have a whole lot of friends 'cause I'm really hard on the ones that I have; but, to me it's worth it. I'd rather not have a whole pile of people around me that I don't care for that much, but the ones that I do respect are the ones that are my friends, and I would like to be able to respect more people, so I use the stage as a platform to say things about mankind, and human beings, and how they relate to one another. That's the ultimate thing to me in importance."

The Super Bureaucrats Of '73

By Steve Ferber

"Good afternoon everyone, and welcome to Key Biscayne, Florida. This is Howard K. Smith along with Harry Reasoner and today we'll be covering all the action in this, the first annual Bureaucrat of the Year contest. Harry?

"Well, Howard, the crowd is stirring in anticipation of the appearance of today's contestants. Briefly, this afternoon's festivities will feature 10 of the most well known bureaucrats in the United States. An event such as this has to be every voters dream. And not only will Americans be listening in, but word has it that officials in Moscow and Peking will be huddled 'round their radios to find out just who does become Superbureaucrat '73."

"OK, Harry. Let's introduce the contestants. Direct from the Capital in Washington, the President of the United States, here's Richard M Nixon. To Nixon's left stands world-traveled foreign adviser. Henry Kissinger, while next to Kissinger is Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, Warren E. Burger. Just in back is acting director of the FBI, L. Patrick Gray III. L. Patrick looks ready to go, doesn't he, Harry? Rounding out the field will be the Senator from South Dakota, George McGovern, Speaker of the House Carl Albert, Secretary General of the U.N., Kurt Waldheim, head of the Treasury Department, George Schultz, Secretary of State William Rogers and Mayor of New York, John Lindsay."

"First, Howard, I think we'll give our listeners an idea of how today's program will run. There will be 10 events in all, only 7 of which each man may enter. Naturally no man may enter his own event. Thus, for example, Chief Justice Burger will have to sit out the event entitled "Decisions '73." The object will be for each bureaucrat to accumulate the highest number of points, with each point, in turn, worth ten inches of complimentary press coverage in the New York Times. The overall winner will also receive a special full-page New York Times report on the bureaucrats background, family life and occupational accomplishments."

"Fine, Harry. We're all set. First on our agenda we have wire-tapping. Each contestant will be given a telephone and wire-tapping devices. The first to properly connect the appartus will receive 10 points. Automatically eliminated from this event is Patrick Gray. Here they go, Harry."

"No surprises so far, Howard. Burger is off to a loud-and-clear start. Nixon isn't doing too badly himself, but I think he misplaced a piece. Close behind is Schultz, then Kissinger and Rogers. Looks like the Washington boys are on tap, eh Howard??"

"Right, Harry. Next it's pencil and paper time. Here, seven men compete in what should be the quickest event of the day. All they'll have to do is calculate five math problems, then deduct 10% from their totals. Naturally, George Schultz will have to take a sideline seat, so he'll be correcting for mistakes and watching closely for cheating."

"This should be a no non-cents event, Howard. They've just begun and McGovern has burst quickly into the lead. Lindsay is doing well but look over there. Kissinger and Rogers appear mesmorized. I once heard that Henry never passed algebra in 10th grade. Any word on that, Howard?"

"I'm afraid not, Harry. But we do know that Rogers never passed Calculus 123. Nixon just raised his hand; apparently he wanted to check that percentage figure. He thought it should be 15, not 10."

"We're finished here, Howard. It's McGovern, Lindsay, Albert."

"What's next, Harry?"

"We're heading now towards the Settlement House, here in Key Biscayne. This will be quite the test, Howard. The procedure is elementary. Two people will be fighting with each other, conversing in a foreign langugage. Each contestant's job will be to quell that fight as quickly as possible without the use of force."

"Too bad Kissinger can't compete, Harry. It would have been interesting to see how well he'd have done. The men are now filing into their respective rooms. Let's look on."

"McGovern seems to be having trouble. He's heading for the doorway. Albert is just sitting there while Waldeheim has started to get emotional. He really wants to win this event. Nixon has just raised his hand. He wants to know if that provision about force can be scrapped. By the way, where is Rogers?"

"You must have forgotten, Howard, but he and Kissinger were automatically eliminated."

"Why was that?"

"I suppose they figured he'd have an edge, being the Secretary of State."

"Sounds absurb to me, Harry."

"OK, the results are in and you guessed it, the arbitrator himself, Justice Burger has placed first. The remaining four slots were filled by Gray, Lindsay, Schultz and McGovern, respectively. And get this, Waldheim and Nixon are still going at it."

"They better finish up because they're handing out materials for the upcoming event. This time each man will, in a one-minute period, be asked to list accomplishments made by the U.N. in the last six months. Waldheim has been relegated to the bench for this, but many say it wouldn't make any difference if he competed. Whatever the case, the 60-second period has expired and, believe it or not, Waldheim has just collected seven blank pieces of paper."

"Speech-making time, Howard, and the event has just begun. Each man is required to address a group of 10 commonfolk on a controversial issue and produce no change in their attitudes. Since McGovern wasn't allowed in the event, he was content to hand out the pre- and post-speech attitude forms. The points are awarded on degree of change, with the least amount of change scoring a first place 10."

"Results are in, Harry. Carl Albert has managed to take first place. Rogers and Waldheim finished high, as Nixon withdrew, declaring, 'I'd convince them even if I wasn't trying to.' Now it's time for a break, ladies and gentlemen. We'll be back in a moment."

"Once again, Howard K. Smith and Harry Reasoner here, broadcasting the first annual Bureaucrat of the Year Contest. We've fallen a bit behind the program's timetable so let's recap the last few events. Harry?"

"Following speech-making, we had image-alteration. Here the men had to submit ten newspaper clippings of their own creation concerning their changing image, and subsequent switch of party. Points for this event were awarded on degree of sincerity. With Nixon finishing last, he voiced his hope that John Connally could fill in for him in coming years."

"The judges for this event, of whom John Lindsay was one, found Patrick Gray on top, followed by four men tied for second place. McGovern finished second to last with a rating of -2.

"Decisions '73 followed. Here Burger resumed his judge's role. With quickness of decision the sole means of success, Nixon decided the ten issues in lightning fashion, for his first victory. Kissinger and Gray hung close, while McGovern's problems continued. The South Dakota Senator was joined by Waldheim at the bottom."

"If you'll pardon the interruption, Howard, but we've just been notified that only nine events will be held. This comes as a result of the inability of the judges to find an event from which Albert can be eliminated."

"Alright, Harry. Rogers' event is just ending. The task here is simple. The men must sit together discussing any national crisis, yet at the same time they must remain as innocuous as possible. With the 15-minute session drawing to a close, Carl Albert has shown his true colors. Not having said one word in 15 minutes, Albert has his second first. This was yet another event in which Nixon withdrew with a clarification, that being, 'My presence in a room alone would make me conspicuous.' "

"What's the tally, Howard?"

"Albert's in front with 32, then Burger with 25, Gray 24, and Lindsay and Nixon knotted at 17. We've got Nixon's event left, so either Burger or Gray could catch Albert."

"Yes, Nixon's event. This one's known as the power-accumulation game. Each man is given a set of rules. The object of the game is to circumvent as many rules as possible without breaking them, all in an effort to exert the most power. Given three minutes, the contestants have just begun to write down their actions on paper. The most drastic ones taken, in the confines of the rules, will be awarded first place."

"Gray has scribbled something about guns and fires on his first slip, Harry, while Burger jotted down just one word. We think it's abortion. Albert and McGovern seem lost, but now, catch this slip. Secretary Rogers wrote, 'I would not use any of my power, for fear I might violate the rules.' Willy's really out of it, isn't he?"

"Howard, I'm getting excited. It appears as if the judges have their decision. What do you think?"

"Impossible, just impossible to call!"

"Power-accumulation. The finish is in this order, Howard. Gray, Burger, Kissinger, Lindsay and Schultz. That means it's Gray 34 points, Burger and Albert with 32 points."

"Guess Gray's our winner, Harry. We extend our congratulations to the acting director of the FBI, and on behalf of Harry Reasoner and myself, Howard K. Smith, we hope to see L. Patrick again next year. Until then, Pat, keeping bugging, uh, plugging."

I Read The Title

By Mark Majeski

Nothing like a happy ending. That's the only conclusion for this story because the competence I beheld was extraordinary. The plot was simply structured centering around the creation of a living being and the subsequent controversy over whether or not the damaged brain it bore was worth the time to take to train or if it should, for various and more ethical reasons, be destroyed.

I had heard of the performance by rumor. At least that's how it appeared at the outset. Looking back though, peculiar circumstances surrounded my coming to know of the presentation. I had seen my two informants earlier in the day and it wasn't until the three of us were relatively alone that they went into their ruse. It's obvious to me now that it was their strategy to speak aloud of a most interesting play to be conducted later in the evening. I registered the knowledge as my two confidants strolled out of sight.

Elementary were the theatrics that evening to the casual observer and would have gone unnoticed for all time had it not been for the message they began to convey. Subtle at first, in the form of offhand gesticulations, but increasing all the while until at last they were as plain to me as clouds in the sky. I looked around, cautiously at first to see if anyone else had caught the drift, then watched on because as I had suspected no one had yet discovered the chicanery. Later, the deception culminated in open deceit and I was nearly standing in the aisle trying to concern the audience with evidence of the hoax. Still unnoticed. Or, was it I who was comprehending what wasn't there? At this point, perhaps it would do to relate in depth what I perceived, just this last night, and let my journal record the crazy episode.

During the performance, the last I hope but fear not, close to the part where they were about to pilfer a brain for their upcoming creation, I noticed a snide glance by one of the company and an under the breath snicker. This to me was odd but, without reaction from any of the others in the house, I sat forlorn. Soon, two of them were up there joking about a trick they had played on the 'straight', as they put it, set director by substituting the 'brain' they were to use with someone's but I couldn't make out whose.

It was right about this time that I began to take serious concern over the happenings before me. I peered out the corner of my eye around me. Again everyone indifferent to my sideshow and yet attentive to the text of the drama.

Another chapter unfolded with the following remarks between the same two actors. "Master, where did you get such a magnificent body?" "Here and there Rudolph, just odds and ends. I visited the morgues after accidents. I looked around the trash of butcher markets and found some dandy ears and feet. The nose came from a farm just outside of town where a slew of pigs had just been slaughtered, the eyes and heart from the same. You know Rudolph, they say that a pig's belly is bigger than it's eyes. We used most organs from that animal since they were most abundant and put it together in town last week in the secrecy of the darkroom at the Craft Co-op." "That's nice master, handmade." "That's right Rudolph, now let's get to work.

And so they went about their macabre task. Down the ladder to the store room and back with a forgotten or misplaced part. Running here and there. Flicking a switch then, checking a guage. So fervently. So conscientiously. Unfailing. They were readying to operate. A very authentic setup, I had to admit. Too authentic. It looked like the real thing. Like they would actually perform the task right there on stage. They wouldn't dare.

A scene from Frankenstein.

Another look askance revealed the audience enthralled with the show. No face showed any sign of knowing what was revealing before me. I was beginning to imagine that I was the only sincere observer. Everyone around me seemed in a daze. Entranced. But, why? It can't be that good!

It must be that this is what they came to expect. Yes. All those attendant are here as a matter of course. Just another night out watching a plot unfold as one would watch reality pass by from a street corner.

This made me think that if they were watching these goings on in a completely normal manner then, it is I who am not normal. One dollar for insanity. What a price to pay, I thought, and all I did was walk in and sit down with these - these zombies. I checked the program once more. The rather obscure title read, 'A SPECIAL PERFORMANCE', followed by 'all welcome', then, 'Doctor Jeremy Clinton Rudolph, Frank Simmons. Monster A man's brain', and so on. Peering over the shoulder of the house guest to my right, I saw the very same thing written on his playbill. A clue to their evil task to be sure, but nothing of significance to me.

Without losing control, I though back to when the two actors were sniggering about the brain's identity. I couldn't hear the name they had for it but, if it is real, it could only recently have been abducted. Judging from the shock that patient on stage would suffer, the brain they were using would certainly have to be strong. An illustrious or highly intelligent person would be the likely candidate then for the changeover to be considered a complete success, I imagined. Even infamous for all I knew.

But wait, that's it! I recall that they destroyed the perfectly good brain toward the beginning and in its stead used the one labeled 'ABNORMAL'. There's the answer, I decided. The good brain or its replica was ruined as planned in the script and the imperfection substituted purposely. At last I began to piece it together. If this brain is truly genuine then, they are intentionally making an actual monster.

It was all very bewildering and frightening as you could well imagine. I sat there unable and unwilling to move. I dare not, in fact, for fear that the audience might mistake me as alien.

The next scene opened with the 'actors' on stage covered with blood. It was fake, I could tell. But, not that brain. It was as real as the best diagram in any book. It was intact and pulsating. And there was that corpse under the sheet. They pulled the cover back part way. Real ugly, I thought.

They're actually going to operate here. Of course, this madhouse is the perfect place. I could hear saliva in the mouth of my friend to the right. A drill instrument was produced to cut the head. This skull fared much better than the last no doubt. The incision. Now, Rudolph hands the delicate organ to the doctor. He places it in. Makes an adjustment and connects the nerve ends with a lighted tool. It's over and, quite quickly like they had practiced often in the past. A needle and thread is all that was needed for the touch up work.

Into their antics again they scurry round turning knobs, flicking switches. Electricity begins to flow. An horrendous thunder clap from outside, or was it backstage, I can't tell anymore. Their movements growing faster and faster until with a flick of the wrist the final jolt of energy is blasted into the creature and, he moved. Again. He was alive and grabbed at the first thing like a babe. The doctor was at first alarmed, but then cooly began taking notes in a determined fashion.

It was scary at first. You couldn't tell if it was going to come off or not. Finally, the Doctor took off the electrodes and spoke to the thing. There was no response. He spoke again and a sparkle in the thing's eyes told us that he understood. He was well. The audience cheered wildly. They rose to stand and the monster was taken back half roaring in utter amazement that he comprehended.

More of the scene showed the Doctor giving the creature simple commands while it, though visibly tired, responded like a puppet on a string. It followed exactly the orders of its now imnipotent creator. Finally, the monster fell back on a stool exhausted. He could perform for us no more.

Obvious, the audience strangely cried, back in their seats. I could tell that they knew something more than I. I checked the program again, but it was without any further sign or clue. They wouldn't let me in on their secret. Finally, I said, "Fantastic performance" to my nearly hysterical neighbor. "Yes, almost an exact copy", he replied. A clue for me that the monster resembled someone familiar and, substance to my belief that the brain was taken from a well known personage. The question of its sanity however, was still on the line.

It was a start at least. I was beginning to unravel the weird plot as the curtain fell on the act. But, I must get a hold on myself lest I be resigned to madness, I thought. For I was feeling delirious over the aberrant affair.

From somewhere behind the curtain I overheard the following conversation. "Do you think it was right to use the damaged brain, master"? "Of course, my assistant, didn't you hear the way they applauded the performance?" "Yes, but even I get the feeling that we were overdoing ourselves a bit." "Keep quiet you fool." Had it been left to me, I would have destroyed the thing on the spot!

Then a sign was produced from backstage saying that the performance was to be continued until Friday night. "That's not in the script", I overheard from an astute observer but, that "the extra time must be needed to further train the creation". They must want to put on a show even better than this, I speculated.

All theatergoers were offered rainchecks and began to leave. I jumped up stupidly and pushed for the way out. I wasn't going to stay around here a second more than I had to. I wanted no more of this gruesome show. They can carry on with their bloody epic day in day out for all I cared.

The next moment, I was wondering if I was still on the right planet. It seemed that funny to me as I noticed the same aisle and seats the same color as when I had walked in. There on my right was the box office. In the back of my brain I saw the window open for my dollar then, close after I had received the ticket. Faces around me seemed to gloat and stare. What was it that they knew? No time for that now as I flung open the exit doors and grasped the outside with all my might to check its stuff. Real. Just as before. It happened.

No one would believe this story, I though as I fled down the walk. It was behind me now. Those faces were in the distance. The bizarre performance over for now.

I slowed to a walk far from the hall, I could almost think clearly. Try to put things in perspective. The whole affair seemed awfully deliberate. I was, in all actuality, the star of the show, I decided. They first approached me in the afternoon and later allowed me to buy what must have been the only ticket. The one I sat next to must have practiced that drool for a week. God, it was convincing and the whole episode still all too real in my mind.

Absurd, I thought, to question my sanity for what seemed the longest time. First, deciding the audience nuts then, having to guess if the outside, where I am now, was still there.

Well, it was very clever if it was a plan at all. And, no doubt they have safeguards for concealing the evidence of their dastardly work. Their outrageous wickedness explains why they picked me as their stooge.

Why not? Why not anyone? I finally reached my destination. My presence, though ablaze with sensation, was lost in competition to the television. I sat there thinking to my brandy. Mulling over the evening and the day.

Finally a friend stooled his ass close by and tried to be sociable. Before I even had the chance to look him in the face, I knew that he would never hear my tale.

Fighting Sexism On Campus

By Ann Ferguson Brentlinger

The Affirmative Action program of the University is currently seeking ways to eliminate discrimination against women and minorities at the University. One of their main strategies is to recruit more women and miniroty faculty. I don't believe either institutional racism or sexism can be eliminated simply by hiring more women and minority people, as the Affirmative Action plan now assumes. In the American Southern slave economy almost all the working positions were held by Blacks and yet the system was racist because the workers had no freedom, power or control over their work, with white foremen and white masters.

Similarly at the University of Mass, an overwhelming number of the Department Heads and administrators are white males. With the ratio of faculty members about 10 men to 1 woman it is difficult to see how women could have any power even if their numbers in the faculty and in the staff (now 13.5%) increased 300 or 400%. This is even more true for minorities. Furthermore, if women and minorities are the last hired, first fired, their independence if staff and faculty positions is severly limited. Most Departments on campus have their intellectual orthodoxies; and women or minority people who step out of line are removed even faster than white male rebels. (Witness the Paul Chandler - School of Education controversy last spring).

In the past three years I have had a continuing struggle with my Department. I was almost denied tenure, denied promotion until I requested a reconsideration, and am currently being denied the right to teach graduate seminars, although I am a graduate faculty member and the Department has a policy that every faculty member be allowed to teach a seminar every three years. (The last time I taught a graduate seminar was Spring 1970). The only other full time woman professor in the Department also has not been assigned graduate seminars by the white male Head of the Department. In addition I am constantly harassed in petty ways by the Head. He denies me the right to duplicate reading material for my courses with secretarial time and department funds, refuses to approve change of grade forms for my students who receive mistaken grades - both services other department members receive as a matter of course. He has refused to obtain money already approved by the Department to pay resource people helping with an experimental course.

The reason for these repressive actions against me are not hard to find. I am a woman, a political radical, and an intellectual dissenter from the dominant orthodoxy of the Department. I'm interested in Marxism, which is not considered in the domain of professional philosophy at all by most of my colleagues, many of whom know extremely little about it. I am married to a fellow philosopher in the Department and members have sentiments against nepotism. Furthermore the faculty feel I do not spend enough time on research on too much time teaching students and relating to non-philosophy faculty on Orchard Hill.

The Head's argument in vetoing both my tenure and promotion decision was that the bad quality of my research work (namely, a paper using a method critical of the dominant method of the Department) threw into question my superior teaching record (on the false maxim "A bad scholar, a bad teacher"); and my extensive record of service to the University (particularly at Orchard Hill) wasn't enough to justify my tenure. In fact this argument really just supports the interests of faculty (which is research and colleagues doing similar research) against the interests of students (which is dedicated teachers, something I think I have been).

The situation at the Philosophy Department is similar to other Departments who have Heads with veto power over Departmental decisions, as well as those with small Personnel Committees made up of members of a certain intellectual persuasion. These Departments are really oligarchies, where the forms of democracy mean very little if the Head or Personnel Committee can veto the rest of the Department and represent a certain clique at the expense of others.

Women and minority faculty can easily be fired, denied promotions or the teaching of desired courses in this sort of institutional structure, because sexism and racism on the part of the Head or Personnel Committee can't be overruled even by getting a majority support of the Department. In my case the Department unanimously (except for the Head) voted a policy calculated to allow me to teach a graduate course in the fall, and the Head simply vetoed it. The Department is not likely to protest this decision to the administration, because it does not serve their vested interests in a bureaucracy to have the Head opposed to them as individuals, nor does it serve the Department as a whole to let the administration know it is divided.

Hence I am left in my case to fight my battles by myself, which shows that liberals follow their principles only to the point where it conflicts with their vested interests - and fighting racism or sexism is simply not in their vested interests. I notified the administrators in chzrge of the Affirmative Action of the repressive measures against me and got no response. My conclusion is that concerned people who want to fight institutional racism and sexism have got to start seriously challenging the bureaucratic structure of the University, and exploring how the vested interests of faculty and administration (dominantly white male) tie in with the maintenance of the status quo

The Sopor Story

Methaqualone, a popular medicine cabinet high--often regarded as "safe"--is in fact addicting and potentially fatal.

So stresses Rolling Stone magazine in an indepth report on the realities of the new downer fad. Better known by its commercial names--Sopor, Quaalude, Optimil, Mandrax and Parest--methaqualone has fostered a cult which comes complete with speakeasy-type clubs where a downer can be obtained by asking for a cigarette.

The Rolling Stone article, "Unconscious Expansion: The Sopor Story," in the latest issue, (on sale March 13-29) describes the drug, its use, abuse and dangers.

According to Dr. George Gay, director of clinical activities at the Haight-Asbury Medical Clinic in San Francisco, methaqualone is a central nervous system depressant, often prescribed as a sleeping pill.

"Qualitatively and quantitatively there is no discernible difference between methaqualone and reds (barbiturates)," the doctor said in an interview. "It can totally suppress breathing. And, although the drug companies and the Physician's Desk Reference don't acknowledge this, it is addicting.

Apologies

In a past article on the New Record Shop I referred to Lafayette Radio as a record store only to discover that Lafayette does not deal in record sales. What should have been written was that Music Seller be the organization in question. The two are in no way connected, except of course, they occupy the same building. My sincerest apologies to both parties for the error.....

Beware Of The "Zaj"

By Gary Gomes

" " "Zaj" is coming" "Beware of the "Zaj"!" "

How many of you out there know what dadaism is. None of you? Good! That's what dadaism turned into. That's what dadaism is was and will be. Don't ask me what it could be. It couldn't be anything and it could be everything. It is nonrational and incredibly sensible. It is, to the furthest degree, chance. And quite fortunately for all of us, it doesn't see itself seriously. Do you?

Zaj is essentially a conglomerate of the ideas of three (possibly all) people: Juan Hidalgo, Esther Ferrer, and Walter Marchetti, and (if national boundaries mean anything to you) from Spain. They are an avant garde troop from that Iberian peninsula, and are the mind children of Marchel Du Champ and John Cage (who invited them to this country for the tour which brings them to UMass). The way they work goes like this:

Dadaism developed in this country and all over the world. Its description is that it means nothing at all. It's rooted in the aim of rather than having half-truths, let us have no truth at all. So, let's see now. John Cage is an aspiring young avantgard composer, y'see, and he's having his difficulties. Arnold Schonberg is his teacher, and he's having trouble getting the grip of harmony. Schonberg says Cage will be banging his (Cage's) head against the wall for the rest of his life. Rather than opt for a brain fry with this harmony, whatever the hell it means, he decides to bang his head against the wall. So much for that history. Cage begins to fool around with rhythm, and the inner workings of instruments. He develops a taste for Zen and ecology politics. Ergo he develops and he according uses the surroundings to as his surroundings

MUSIC

also as mathematical formulae, also as Walter Marchetti has his autobiography say:

I was born in Canosa Di
Puglia the 21st of July
1931
Since then many things
have happened:

Cage and the Dadaist (which Cage may or may not be) use instruments, if at all, as mere devices. More often than not, the sound that constitutes the music may come from anywhere -- from the audience, from the street, from tapes, from dogs, from everything, based on chance operations and abstract theories; the ultimate music and life linkup. Veneration of ideas and things vanishes, because (there is no because, really) they are just fetishes. And fetish worship can be harmful.

The real concept behind all of this is really an enlightened cynicism, and a return to more natural ways of doing things -- a sort of science which goes beyond normal comprehension. But that doesn't mean it can't be understood. Understanding (having a key to the art) means a special insight that others lack, and its very undemocratic as well. As Cage once opted for providing a dynamic art rather than a passive one which "captures experiences", he had this in mind. He wants a value of aesthetics which can be carried in one's hip pocket. And this offends a lot of people who believe in indoctrination into any type of art. (Marchel Du Champ did considerable guerilla activity into this area -- for one thing, he painted a moustache on a version of the Mona Lisa).

" "Zaj" is not a school but a state of mind."

Now, that's quoted from one of Zaj's descriptions, and it should give you a sort of idea of where they're coming from (other than Spain). Zaj(pronounced zach, by the by) is Zaj, and non-Zaj. And lest you think this is not a put on, it is. The Fine Arts Council is putting on Zaj this Friday night, March 16, 1973 at 8 p.m. $1.00 admission for undergrads and $1.50 for general admission.

Now, I know you can think of a lot of things you can do with that $1.00 (+ .50, if you come under general admission). You could buy five Marvel comic books, 2 R. Crumb comic books, or, in a last stitch attempt to make some sanity out of UMass., go out and get shit-faced(on four beers --c'mon!), or you could put it away for that home you've always wanted. But you can always do that. Zaj doesn't always come around. And it is enlightening. And fun. Zaj is a different kind of thing than you've ever probably been exposed to. It's theatre, poetry, sculpture and everything else combined -- including music. Zaj should be able to reflect insanity at you to help you understand things as they are. To get an image of what it or anything might be like, you could stop in at Herter Art Gallery today and take a view of the various plastic arts they can do.

So don't forget:

"The most controversial work being done in theatre (and music) now is that being done by Zaj. It is not easy to take but it is elegant and unforgetable."

- John Cage, 1972

Prepare yourself for the unexpected. And enjoy it. It might be a long time before this campus ever sees something like ZAJ again. Try something a little bit different for a change of pace. Try Zaj.

No Place For A Worthy Play

By Mary Keane

Last weekend Bowker Auditorium seemed to be no place to present No Place to Be Somebody. The matinee performance of Charles Gordone's Pulitzer Prize winning play was cancelled due to lack of interest--only a dozen ticketholders showed up. Perhaps it was the International Fair or the fine spring weather that kept people away, or perhaps the situation was more bluntly appraised by a disappointed student: "People here don't want culture on weekends."

The evening performance was opened to the public free of charge, but even at that Bowker remained only half-filled. Considering the unenthusiastic welcome given the touring company, the cast presented a fine performance.

No Place to be Somebody bills itself as a 'black black comedy.'

No Place to be Somebody bills itself as a 'black black comedy.' No Place makes you laugh until you wonder when it's going to stop hurting. Then No Place leaves you only with aching sides, wondering if it were not for the laughs if you would be able to keep from squirming through three excruciating hours of desolation.

The play is set in a seedy Harlem bar during 'the past fifteen years,' which suggests that the action of No Place is a repetitive cycle without resolution. Thirteen characters in search of new identities play the fools for each other without respite.

Black men struggle to make it as white gangsters, only to find out that Charlie still holds all the cards even if you play by his rules. Black women search for white knights to take them out of the life, only to find that housewifery is prostitution without pay.

Some of the funniest moments in No Place surround the white characters' diligent attempts to "soulify" themselves. Never was the stereotype of Steppin Fetchit more ludicrous than when seen in a white man's feeble attempts to emulate him. Never was a white hooker's search for dignity through suffering more pathetic than when she pleads for people to "dig her for her soul." Susie Sociology Major trucks in to aid the oppressed only to discover that the "underprivileged" masses hardly take kindly to her benevolence. Her ass might have a market value, but hardly her missionary zeal.

Everybody wants to be somebody else in No Place. Nobody wants to be who they are, and when they become who they think they want to be, they find that doesn't work either. Even being somebody else doesn't seem to help. Sounds confusing? Sure. But even Macbeth couldn't take it when he made the grade.

No Place closes without any resolution for the characters' strivings except debilitation and death. In a scene reminiscent of Genet's The Balcony, the curtain falls on a lone figure who chides the audience for not being capable of realizing the play's intentions without being coddled by laughter. He mourns "the death of a people dying into a new life," as if to give up the struggle to be human is worse than the realization that there really is no place to be somebody.

All in all, Gordone's play was definitely worthy of the national acclaim it received, and more than worthy of the standing ovation given it by a skeleton audience Saturday night. If there really is no place to be somebody, then maybe nobody should have to treat themselves as nobodies. No Place to be Somebody develops this theme in a style that brings audience attention to it without moralizing about it.

Smooth, Lucid, And Transparent

By Bob Nesti

The Discreet Charm Of The Bourgeoisie
Written for the screen by Jean--Claude Carriere and Luis Bunel; directed by Luis Bunnuel; featuring Stephane Audran, Fernando Rey, Delphine Seyrig, Jean--Pierre Cassell, and Bulle Ogier.

The cast of The Discreet Charm Of The Bourgeoire.

Luis Bunuel has spent most of his long and erratic career fervently satirizing the attitudes, behavior, and institutions of the privileged classes. The Discreet Charm Of The Bourgeoisie crystallizes this director's philisophical themes in a single image, that of a dinner party of six, three men and three women, which is constantly interrupted. Bunuel uses this party as a metaphor to portray both the resilliancy and the underlying destructive urge of the Middle Class. It's a perfectly toned film; the seventy-two year old Bunuel has never been in as firm control of his material and it's a celebration of his social politics and bitter wisdom. Bunuel began his career by slitting his leading lady's eyeball during the first thirty seconds of Un Chien Andalou, made in 1928 in collaboration with Salvatore Dali and still the best-known of all surrealistic film. In 1928 Bunuel was savage, brash, mocking the bourgeoise audience who had elevated the cinema to an art form. He made a mockery of the entire notion with his free association cinema. Bunuel has since embodied this anarchial and surreal spirit in all his work. Today the brutality is gone; Bunuel has mellowed to a benigh fascination towards the brunts of his justly celebrated jokes. The shock isn't bitterly rhetorical as in his best work; it's smooth, lucid commentary on elegant behavior and sophisticated banter. The Discreet Charm Of The Bouregoisie suggests Ionesco's The Bald Soprano and Bunuel's own The Exterminating Angel. Here the tone is perfectly pitched to the low intensity of drawing room farce whose characters wear such perfect facades that they wouldn't show a genuine emotion in a car wreck--they'd probably gather their composure, smile, and walk away.

This composure is the strength and force behind the six people around whom the film is centered. The film opens with four of them arriving at the country home of a couple named the Senechal's. Their hostess greets them in her nightrobe and explains to their amazement that they've come on the wrong night. To reconcile any bitter feelings, Don Raphael Acocota, the ambassador of a mythical South American country named Miranda, suggests they dine at a nearby restaurant. After being seated in the oddly empty restaurant, they discover the manager is dead and laid out in an adjacent room. This absurdist humor continues in a dead-pan style throughout the film. The women meet for tea and are interrupted by a strange young Army lieutenant who tells them his dream of murdering his father, while the cafe manager continually interrupts this conversation by informing them that there's no coffee, tea, or beverage. The Senechal's plan another dinner party only to have the army storm in while on manuevers. The men meet to distribute their profits from illegal drug traffic to be annoyed by the appearance of a leftist terrorist from Miranda. Don Raphael has a tryst with the wife, (Delphine Seyrig), of one of his companions only to have her husband drop by. The film attempts to make a comic statement interruptions, their irrationality and the strageties individuals use to immerse them into an everyday experience.

Towards the center of the film, the character's numerous adventures and mishaps become real nightmares and the film moves from catelogueing reality in a dream-like fashion to catelogueing dreams. The first portion of the film accustomes you to the continually absurd lifestyle of the middle class, the second half suggests their fears of destruction. It explores the chaos which teeters beneath the proper and elegant surface. The six attend a dinner party only to suddenly become part of a play in which none of them know their parts. They attend another party only to have this one dissolve in a duel between Don Raphael and a man who insults the honor of the country he represents. They are murdered by some paid henchmen, and so on. If the overriding the tone is comic, the preveland theme is ironic and captured brilliantly in the film's title. Bunuel's concern is to present us with the illusions and the defences which give order to life. Three times in the film the six characters are seen walking down a country road; it's a beautifully stroked image of the experience which the rest of the film suggests. The bourgeoisie will persist, despite its fears of annihillation.

The script is so perfectly written that any excess of Bunuel is within reason. Bunuel and Jean--Pierre Cassell trenchantly capture the petty and witless conversation of everyday life. These frame the film within a conceivable context and give it a shimmering, witty surface. The surreal elements make the film a crazy kaliedescope; fragmented, absurd, and chaotic beneath the surface. As Nathan Rosenbaum has pointed out in "Sight and Sound", Bunuel has reconciled tension rising from being an anarchial artist immersed in a bourgeoise art form through humor. Bunuel's resolution takes the shape of a disjointed, almost non-existant plot line which allows him to suddenly explore tangents and possibilities which otherwise would be lost in a more linear structure. These have always been the most exciting moments in Bunuel's films, he has the ability to turn situations unrelated to the main narrative and make it a thematic comment on the whole. The celebrated "Last Supper" in Viridiana and the dream in Los Olvidados sit outside the narrative yet are organic to the whole. Each nonsequiter, surreal image, and absurd moment of The Discreet Charm Of The Bourgeoisie makes brilliant commentary on the central thesis.

Bunuel has said that film "is the best instrument for expressing the world of dreams, emotions, instincts. It seems to have been invented to express the life of the subconscious, whose root lie at the heart of poetry." Bunuel's genius is his ability to convey the world of dreams in a manner which is lucid, lyric, and entertaining. The Discreet Charm Of The Bourgeoisie is one of the funniest films of recent years, filled with wildly absurd moments set within a brilliant design. The film never compromises Bunuel's artistic vision. His surreal touches have an absolute naturalism to them and their humor hits you like whiplash. Like Hitchcock, Bunuel cuts his film as he shoots it and his direction is clean, efficient, and transparent. The performances are memorably humorous from a top international cast. If any film of Bunuel need be his homage it is this one; a dazzling and exciting achievement, certainly one of the major films of the past five years and with Le Boucher, one of the most important film to come from France so far this decade.

BEAN'S
Billy Wilder's predecessor contends in competition for the romantic comedies to made in the mid-1940s and somewhat of 1945 with his hard edged social comedies and drama. The story concerns a dealer American businessman who goes to many cities his father's successful death years to learn that his father had been romantically involved with a dancer whose he years. He meets the author's daughter, a modern British girl, and they realize their parents' story. Wilder adapted the Broadway play by Samuel Taylor and Ivan Tors and directed the romantic comedy of the thirties, in which director Howard Hawks and his regular cast, Rosalind Russell and Cary Grant, in perhaps the best of the screwball comedies, Monday, 3/19, 7 and 9.

Weekend (cont.)

THE LIFE AND TIMES OF JUDGE ROY BEAN

John Huston's catch -- all Western satire is a film of many moods and styles. It bears the same relationship to the western game as Huston's earlier Beat The Devil did to the spy intrigue film that is to say his style at parody takes an acquired taste. This film concerns a real life hero: the legendary Judge Roy Bean, who has appeared as a character in numerous other Western films. The film is a cornucopia of recent trends in Westerns: filled with the spunky humor of Cat Ballou, the gratuitous violence of The Wild Bunch, and the fatuous charm of Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid. It's an erratic film, so self-conscious of its genre that it completely ignores its subject matter. An excellent cast: Paul Newman is the title character, with Stacey Keach (pale, peroxide, and bean thin), Anthony Perkins, the beautiful Ava Garkner, and Huston himself. Campus Cinemas, Hadley.

MORGAN! (1966)

Karel Riecz's manic fantasy about an intense young man who hallucinates himself as Tarzan and King Kong and attempts to win back his rich, slightly amoral wife. The film bears a casual relationship to The Graduate, especially in the portrayal of its hero's pursuit of his wife, but is set in Working class Britian and is a much deeper analysis of an unbalanced personality. Morgan's pranks are often quite funny, his hallucinations often perplexing, and the tone a bit dense. Riecz is a master of form; his films are technically perfect and lucid, even when his material is ambiguous. David Warner has an angular and funny appearance which matches his bewildering personality; Vanessa Redgrave as his wife is charming as the bored, rich girl. Certainly one of the most interesting films of the Sixties See ad for time and place.

THE POSEIDON ADVENTURE

A harmless pop epic that aims to please but tends to disappoint. The film lauts an incredible roster of second rate stars playing passengers on board a luxury liner which, on its final voyage, becomes capsized in the Mediterranean. The suspense is built on who will escape and how they'll do it. It's the latest in the series of assinine entertainments made popular in recent years, like Airport and Skyjacked. At the start the situations and relationships are contrived: the film picks up once the boat capsizes, but not much. The special effects and the capsize itself would look great on television. On the screen it has the anemic look of a production burdened with a light budget. The insides of the Poseidon are recreated from the Queen Mary and its great if you possess a fetish for the deep insides of luxury liners. The script plays off the worst sentimental responses and pretentions about life. As a hip preacher who attempts to save the day Gene Hackman appears to be a waterlogged Auntie Mame. The whole thing sounds like a wretched musical comedy you keep expecting Hackman to break into a rousing revival number called "Let There Be Light." Shelley Winters sparks the film with a sympathetic caricature of a Jewish grandmother travelling to Israel with her husband, Jack Albertson; but their scenes together are filled with song cues out of Fiddler on the Roof. The remaining ensemble is strikingly mediocre: Ernest Borgnine and Stella Stevens are vulgar prototypes of Wallace Beery and Jean Harlow in Dinner at Eight. The film's best moments are the obese Shelley's underwater rescue attempt, Richard Neame directed, all too methodically. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

RASHOMON (1950)

A story of rape and murder told from four different points of view. This powerful drama was the first Japanese film io have a wide impact in the West. It was selected as the Japanese entry for the Venice Festival (by the then head of Unitalia Film) and received the Golden Lion. Director Akita Kurosawa was astonished and said he would have preferred the award to have gone to "a film reflecting contemporary Japanese life." Though its appeal in the West rested largely on its fascinating exoticism, it is not without contemporary allusions. Its four contradictory stories helped end the "samurai" stereotype: the bandit, the nobleman, and his wife are revealed as cowardly, untruthful and vicious in the final story of the woodcutter. In the epilogue, the action of the woodcutter, an ordinary man terrified of the three in the wood, restores a faith in humanity. Each of the episodes has its own particular style but at the same time is dominated by the conflicts in the forest. The somewhat westernized music is based on Ravel's Bolero. The acting, particularly that of Machiko Kyo and Toshiro Mifune, is excellent. Amherst Cinema, Saturday and Sunday, 3-17 and 3/18

Anne Bancroft and Robert Shaw in Young Winston.

RED RIVER (1948)

Along with Stagecoach, the finest Western of all time. The film concerns a cattle drive in Texas is both remarkably simple and strong. The film marked the debut of Montgomery Clift and it remains one of his most appealling roles, but the acting honors must go to John Wayne who gives his greatest performance as the film's villian. Director Howard Hawkes seems to have an innate sense of Wayne's rough and undeveloped talent and brings it out in all its richness and energy. The film that should be seen by all who first doubt the power of the Western film, and second, the larger group who doubt the acting abilities of John Wayne. (The film, by the way, is seen in clips as the final film shown in the movie house of The Last Picture Show in Peter Bogdanovich's homage to Howard Hawkes. Merrill Science Center, Sunday, 3/18, 3:30 and 7:30.

ROOM SERVICE (1938)

The Marx Brothers, in the Broadway farce about bankrupt theatrical producers holed up in a hotel room with their stranded players, fighting off famine and creditors. Unfortunately, the play fits them like a strait jacket. With Lucille Ball, Ann Miller, Frank Albertson, and Donald MacBride, grinning his great bulldog grin. Directed (lamely) by William Seiter Amherst Cinema; Monday and Tuesday 3/19 and 3/20.

SAVE THE TIGER

John G. Avildson has the mind of a juvenile anarchist. His films Joe, Cry Uncle!, and now this gem work off of frightening premises as if they were some great philosophical cornerstone. This film concerns itself with the corruption of the great American hero, Willy Loman in his last ditch attempt to make good. Jack Lemmon plays a garment manufacturer named Harry who concotes a grandoise plan to fool both his customers and creditors through blowing up his warehouse and using his insurance money to finance those orders. Harry suffers from a grand social disease called materialism and his cure is presented as an honest solution to his plight. It's a little like shooting your nose off because it's bleeding. Producer - screenwriter Steve Shagan believes in the worth of this man and its an altogether satisfying achievement in hollow rhetoric. Jack Lemmon's performance is arch and unsatisfying, it's an ugly comeback role for him. John G. Avildsen directs in a sleek, pompous way as if the film was some sort of primer in achieving the new consciousness. Bunk. Showcase Cinemas, West Springfield.

THE SEVENTH SEAL (1957)

Ingmar Bergman's medieval morality play remains one of the greatest and most powerful films of all time. It is a stunning allegory of man's search for meaning in life. A knight, after returning home from the Crusades, plays a game of chess with Death while The Plague ravages medieval Europe. An exceptionally powerful film, it is a work of awesome scope and remarkable visual pleasures. The New York Times wrote of this film. "Vivid and alive . . . magnificently made and acted, it quivers with misery and torment and bounces with peasant lustiness. The profundities of the ideas are lightened and made flexible by glowing pictorial action that is interesting and strong. Mr. Bergman hits you with it, right between the eyes." And The New York Post said: "It is wholly extraordinary, being at once mystical, realistic and poetic. It stands in the company of the great foreign films." The film's atmosphere suggests that of Jerzy Kosinski's modern horror tale The Painted Bird in its primitive savagery and decay. The film won the Grand Prix at Cannes both in 1956 and 1957. Amherst Cinema, Monday and Tuesday, 3/19 and 3/20.

SOME LIKE IT HOT (1959)

Billy Wilder's best comedy. An affectionate, wacky, lampoon of the Twenties which succeeds through both its sheer verve and superbly evoked portrait of America during the Prohibition years. The film concerns two men who are the sole witnesses and survivors of the St. Valentine Day Massacre and are forced to disguise themselves as women to escape the mob. They join an all girl band which features a sparkling young singer, named Sugar whose brilliantly played by Marilyn Monroe in her best screen role and travel South to Miami Beach. The entire film's a joy; one of the best American comedies of the Fifties with two superb comic characterizations by Jack Lemmon and Tony Curtis as the two men forced to dress in drag. Wilder's script (in collaboration with I. A. L. Diamond) is sharp and hilarious and his direction is filled with so many deft comic touches that it remains his best film. Student Union Ballroom, Saturday, 3/17, 7:30 and 9:30.

SOUNDER

This film is undoubtedly one of this year's ten best movies. Time Magazine has said of this film, it's "a compassionate and loving film about being black in America. Sounder has the strength of subtlety and the power of emotional committment to its subject, though not the kind of inchoate fury that can blister and blind. It manages as no other movies has done to take the special pride and trial of being black and work it into an experience that can be shared and felt by anyone." Pauline Kael in the New Yorker said of the film "it is extraordinarily simpke, yet deeply, emotionally rich. The first movie about black experiences in America that can stir people of all colors. Cicely Tyson plays the first great black heroine on the screen." The film is directed admirably by Martin Ritt Campus : Cinemas, Hadley.

UP THE SANDBOX

Pauline Kael has written that "Barbra Striesand is a complete reason for going to the movies, as Garbo was;" and so is this delightful film. Barbra Striesand plays a young women married to an up-and-coming Columbia don who feels limited and alienated by her role as mother and wife. Things are complicated when she becomes pregnant once more. The film chronicles her numerous fantasies as she explores possible solutions to her problem. Much of the criticism of the film has come from a misinterpretation of Barbra's being a Woman's Liberation Everywoman who eventually cops out at the end of the film, which is nonsense. Striesand is one of the most beautiful subjects for the camera since Garbo, but she doesn't merely walk through this role. If anyone doubts her abilities as an actress, than this film should disprove them. Irvin Kershner directs and his style is imaginative in the dream sequences and natural in the domestic scenes. Some excellent sequences, such as the Anniversary party filmed with a super-eight camera, and one of the best music of any recent films. Certainly one of the misunderstood films of the season. Jerry Lewis Cinema, Northampton.

YOUNG WINSTON

Richard Attenborough's bloated historical biography of the early life of Winston Churchill. Producer Carl Foreman recut Attenborough's final, shorter version and the film suffers from the padding. The film is enjoyable junk, although it suggests a better film could have been made from the life of Winston's parents: Lord Randolph the politician who died from venereal disease and Jennie Randolph Churchill, his flirtatious and vibrant American mother whom he adored. Churchill's early life stagnates too much of the time. Some excellent acting from Anne Bancroft whose fiery and exciting as Jeannie, Robert who portrays Randolph with pathos, and young IMON Ward who ably suggests the strong-minded young Winston Churchill. Academy of Music, Northampton.

Letters To The Editor

You Can Dance All Weekend, Can't You?

To The Editor:

This coming weekend (St. Patrick's Day), Phi Mu Delta, in conjunction with the National Muscular Dystrophy Association, is sponsoring a 52 hour Dance Marathon to benefit Muscular Dystrophy. It is going to be held in the S.U.B. starting at 6:00 Friday night and it will last until 10:00 Sunday night.

A similar marathon was held at the Univ. of Maryland last year and $34,000 was raised in support. Because of the conflict with the N.I.T., the National Assoc. wanted to cancel the marathon even though plans were already underway, because they felt that we wouldn't be able to get the support of the students of the University. By Sunday night we hope to prove they were wrong. If someone comes knocking at your door asking for a contribution, please oblige them, and by all means come down to see the dancers. A number of familiar bands will be playing for the event, so if the sight of thirty some odd people dancing doesn't interest you, pretend it's a free concert and come down anyway.

Entrants are welcome up until the gun fires at 6:00 Friday as long as they have $30.00 pledged to them as a non-refundable entrance fee. There will be two winning couples, each receiving a $300 purse. One will be the contestants from the chapter of Phi Mu that raises the most money and lasts the full 52 hours. The second will be the independent couple (on or off campus) whose sponsoring organization raises the most money and lasts the 52 hours. Both winners will be eligible to compete in the national marathon in Illinois where the stakes are $2500.00 for the winning couple.

I hope to see all those who don't go to the N.I.T. down at the Student Union Ballroom this weekend . . . we need all the moral support we can get.

Fire And Water

To The Editor:

In regard to the display in the Sylvan Area on the night of March 14, 1973, we would like to present the following comments.

We were amused by the raucous mob that gathered in the area courtyard.

We were greatly entertained by the ignited newspaper airplanes, soothing sprays of water, and the adorable signals of the Fourth of July—four months early.

We revelled in the intricacy of the dance steps done by some Fred Astaire protege in the midst of a fire. We laughed hysterically when we spied, right outside the door, the three gallant firefighters in full array, including oxygen tanks.

We reached the epitome of ecstacy when, due to the fine construction of Cashin, water from the hall trickled placidly through the wall warping one wardrobe, prying up countless tiles, shrinking carpets, and doing a moderate amount of damage hither and thither.

As to how the water happened to be strolling down the hall in the first place, we would like to encounter the creative, jovial, fun-loving organism and suture to his anus the very same digits that he employed in his playful prank with the water valve by the staircase near our door.

Our heartfelt gratitude for our moist nocturnal vigil.

Males Excluded

To The Editor:

Male reporters and men in general are being excluded from the Rape Speak-out this weekend for the following reasons:

a) men (reporters or not) intimidate a large portion of women;

b) men have the ingrained habit of dominating the time in public discussions—they view their opinion as more important than that of any woman;

c) men might attend to "get their kicks"—I question the sincerity of most men on the topic unless a girlfriend, mother, wife or sister is directly involved (i.e. she has been raped) but even then their focus is different from women's;

d) rape is a horrible experience. For Mr. Harrington to compare exclusion of males as "patently fraudulent as it would be for Nixon to exclude Democratic reporters from his press conference" is just one example of the insensitive attitudes men have with regard to rape.

If men want to discuss rape as an issue of public concern I suggest that they get together with their brothers and examine male attitudes and behavior. To gain some insight on what it is like to be raped, they could discuss the scene in "Deliverance" where rape (intercourse without consent) of a male did occur.

Until men [illegible] their attitudes and work at changing them, exclusion from events such as the Rape Speak-out is necessary.

Libby Rich

No Men, Please

To The Editor:

Whether or not to allow males at the Rape Speak-Out, was considered when the event was being planned. Past experience has shown that when men are present at times when women are discussing personal, intimate issues, women are inhibited by the presence of those men. It is a reaction that has the power of a reflex.

For many years, women have been afraid to hitch-hike, to walk home alone, and to propel themselves through secluded areas. Women are not afraid of being waylaid, kidnapped, subdued, harassed verbally and physically by mothers, or sisters or women friends, or even anonymous women.

On the other hand, women have learned to expect minor and major violations of their bodies and minds by the men who they live near, work-for and pass-by. Women accept infringements that most men would not allow without clobbering the person who tried it.

Saturday, women want the chance to explore the issue of rape without having to first explain to potentially disturbing men (and to disbelieving men) how women have finally begun to take measures to preserve and defend their right to move through the day and night unharmed.

Men who want to be helpful, can assist with childcare at the Valley Women's Center in Northampton. Men who want to know more about rape can get together with other men to talk about their fantasies and the myth of the aggressive male. This could be held with women present or without.

(The Rape Speak-Out will be held this Saturday from 9:30 to 5:00 at the Unitarian Church in Northampton. Every woman is welcome).

'Dwightland'

To The Editor:

Recently at an Ed. class, Dean Dwight presented his views on societal change and education. He maintained that all change was accomplished through a process of working within the laws. As long as the laws exist we must obey them. Thus we get the following:

Question: If a teacher is dynamic with his students and he or she is a homosexual, how would you react to this situation?

Dean: I would have to have him removed because I would not want him teaching my children or any school children. The same would apply to a woman teacher who had premarital sex and it was known.

Boycott Farah

To The Editor:

Saturday morning at 9:00 a.m. at Carlson's Clothing Store at 68 Main St., in Northampton there is going to be an organized boycott of this store. Carlson's is one of the few stores in Northampton which has blatantly refused to remove Farah products from its shelves. The reason this removal is necessary is to help the striking employees of Farah's Texas plant of which a large number of these workers are Mexican-Americans. These people are struggling to unionize in order to gain a decent standard of living which presently they do not even nearly have. The Farah Co. has given such an unbelievable amount of resistance to the organizing efforts of these workers that even George Meany's AFL-CIO executive board has endorsed a nation-wide boycott of Farah products.

The boycott efforts in Northampton are being organized by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union and supported by the American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees Union and other various concerned groups. Simply put, a nation-wide boycott of Farah products reduces the sales and profits of the company and seeing that these are their main concern, when their profits and sales are noticeably reduced, the Farah executives begin to worry. Once they worry about not only the sales and profits but also their public image, they are going to be more willing to negotiate with their striking employees. This objective can only be attained by strong local efforts so consequently people are needed to stand outside of Carlson's Store Saturday morning for a few hours in order to make other people aware of the plight of the Farah workers and to get this store to get these products off it's shelves. Come to Northampton and boycott Carlson's Saturday from 9 a.m. until early afternoon or for a few hours in-between.

Ted Pietras

So There!

To The Editor:

It is too bad that Dennis Cronin missed the whole point of my letter. (My letter was in reply to Chris West—the reply to me was in the Collegian of March 15.) I understand that being a janitor is no easy life However, I did not write the letter to attack the janitors. I wrote it to point out something to Ms. West that she did not know about.

Now, Mr. Cronin, I do happen to realize that the cutback was caused by the administration. But what you don't know and I do is that Sylvan area has petitioned the administration to bring back the janitors. I also know that no janitor in his right mind would vote for a cutback. Also, one final point Mr. Cronin: just because I happened to write a letter stating the concerns of a number of people living in Sylvan, don't go accusing me of being the one who "might use ashtrays in the lounge instead of the floor and wastepaper baskets for beercans and other waste instead of the hallways." I happen to be concerned about the whole issue.

Join D.V.P. Today

To The Editor:

Would you really like to contribute something worthwhile to the University community? Would you like to meet interesting people representing a wide variety of fields of study? Then apply for membership on the Distinguished Visitors Program Council. Any student is eligible to submit an application. We would especially like some more input from minority and women groups.

The purpose of D.V.P. is to present, throughout the school year, speakers whose topics cover subject areas that are requested by students and those areas we feel may be relevant and interesting to University students. Speakers this year have given talks on Science Fiction, Motion Pictures, the U.S. Space Program, Prison Reform, the Opera Social Structure and Change, the Indian Culture, and we have just completed an International Poetry Festival. Upcoming speakers include Len DeCaux on Labor problems, Charles Silberman on Education, and author poet Piri Thomas. We will present our Martin Luther King Memorial Series April 9-12.

We need people who are willing to work hard to make D.V.P an effective, student oriented operation. Applications can be picked up in the Student Activities Office at the main desk and should be returned today. All applicants are subject to an interview by D.V.P. members. If you want to have a part in educating and entertaining your fellow students, PLEASE pick up an application for D.V.P. today!

Alcohol His Way Out

By DRS. McCASHIN and KLEIN

Q: My husband and I have been married for two years. Bill has always been shy and reserved, whereas I am more outgoing and socially oriented. My efforts at getting him more interested in socializing seemed to be having some success until he began to drink rather heavily. Now it seems that he wants to stay home and drink every night. Things are worse than they ever have been and Bill refuses to admit that he's becoming an alcoholic. How can I get him to recognize his problem and seek professional help?

A: Alcoholism is becoming an ever-increasing problem for large numbers of people with the most dramatic upswing in frequency being among teenagers and young adults (a category we assume you and your husband fit). Similarly the most crucial first step in successful treatment is acknowledgement of the problem and motivation for change.

For a brief period of time (during the late sixties) it appeared that other drugs (especially marijuana) might replace alcohol in current and future generations, as the hypnotic of choice. This hypothesis has been soundly put to rest. Alcohol is more popular than ever and far more effective as a sedative/hypnotic than grass. Ironically, the non-addictive character of marijuana seems to have led ever increasing numbers of teenagers to indiscriminate indulgence in alcohol. Parents (so concerned that their children not experiment with drugs) have, far from warning their children about the dangers of alcoholism, directly or tacitly encouraged its use.

The specific situation you describe is typical in several ways. Bill seems to have become the "identified patient" (at least in your mind) while you play the role of concerned helper (parent). There would seem to be the danger of your becoming the stereotyped "alcoholic-spouse" to his "alcoholic." That is, you take a position of tolerant and sympathetic helpfulness which in the advance stage runs the risk of becoming ever-suffering martyrdom.

It seems clear that you and Bill had a problem before he started drinking. Your "efforts to get him more interested in socializing" were probably having only superficial success. Bill's drinking may be a way out of the lifestyle conflict you describe. Ultimately, of course, it is not a good way out. But it is a problem you share and you as well as he must recognize and seek help for this "problem." The Mental Health Service offers conjoint couples counseling. Perhaps if you talked about things with your husband in this contest, he would be more enthusiastic about seeking professional help.

Drs. McCashin and Klein will accept questions in strict confidence for possible appearance in YOUR HEAD. Send or bring your questions to 303 Machmer Hall.

Sick of fiddling around Cleveland, four musicians line up for trolley car to Detroit.

Cleveland Strings In Bowker

The Cleveland String Quartet will perform in Bowker Auditorium Monday evening, March 19, at 8.

Featured as the third "Young Artist Showcase" event of the season by The Fine Arts Council, the Cleveland String Quartet in its four-year history has established itself as one of the most important chamber music ensembles in the nation. Donald Henahan, writing in the "New York Times characterized The Quartet as "stepping into the front rank of chamber music playing with stylish readings that only the elite string quartets of the world would be likely to match."

Members of the Cleveland String Quartet have all won prizes in international competitions. From 1969 to 1971 they were artists-in-residence at the noted Cleveland Institute of Music and since 1971 have assumed the same position at the State University of New York at Buffalo, succeeding the famed Budapest String Quartet. RCA Victor has recently signed this ensemble to an exclusive recording contract. For its University debut, The Quartet has selected works by Beethoven, Mendelssohn and contemporary Soviet composer, Serge Slonimsky.

Reserved tickets are $1.50 for UMass undergraduates and $3 for others, and may be obtained from the Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, telephone 545-0202. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium one hour before the concert.

Research Seeks Ideal Dorms

A research project involving resident environment at the University is presently being conducted by David Bluestein and John McEleney, two UMass undergraduates.

Professional consultants for the research phase of the project are Dr. Richard Haase and Richard Story of the counseling center. The concerns of this project encompass two major needs: the first involves each residence hall's need for objective information concerning itself, and secondly, the undergraduate's need for accessible information regarding different dorms.

University Residence Environmental Scale (URES) is the title of the instrument used to measure such aspects of the dorm as cohesiveness, student input, academies and competition among members. Two forms of the URES will be distributed throughout dorms in the five residence areas on campus, with the aid of 15 undergraduate freshmen. The "real" form will deal with the residents' perceptions of the dorm as they see it and the "ideal" form will deal with what the residents feel their ideal dorm would be like. Of the 5500 students randomly chosen, 3500 have been given the real form and 2000 have been given the ideal form.

Students in the residence halls are assisting the researcher in distribution and collection of the date. The scales are being collected the same date as distribution. The method will contribute to the accuracy of summer orientation counseling. The information will also be made readily available to the heads-of-residence and to the students in time for freshman summer orientation counseling. The information will also be made readily available to the heads-of-residence and to the students currently living in the forms. Dr. Theodore Slovin of the counseling center and Dr. Thomas Wolff of Mental Health will be consultants to dorms whose residents would like to discuss the URES and its findings. "This is not an evaluation of the student and heads-of-residence some basic information concerning the dorms as they exist today."

The future of this project will involve a follow-up distribution to one-quarter of the dorms to discern whether or not any important changes have occurred after one year. If this should be the case, a second study involving the five residence areas will take place.

'72 VD Rate Highest Ever

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - The incidence of gonorrhea in the United States in fiscal 1972 was the highest recorded since the U.S. Public Health service began keeping VD statistics in 1919, it was announced Thursday.

The American Sociel Health Association said figures supplied by state public health departments showed a total of 718,401 gonorrhea cases - up 15 per cent from the 624,371 cases reported for 1971.

The actual incidence of the disease is likely much higher than the official reported figures, officials note, because many cases go unreported. One estimate placed the actual number of gonorrhea cases at 2.5 million in 1972, with 85,000 actual cases of infectious syphilis.

The number of reported cases of syphilis came to 24,000, up 3 per cent over the 23,336 cases reported in 1971 and the greatest number of cases reported since 1950.

This 3 per cent increase, however, was considerably lower than the previous year's increase of 16 per cent, according to Dr. William L. Fleming, a director of the American Social Health Association.

Atlanta, Ga., had the highest reported gonorrhea incidence rate - 2,522 cases per 100,000 population. Washington, D.C., reported the highest rate of infectious syphilis - 103 cases per 100,000.

Of 60 cities with 200,000 or over population, for gonorrhea, Minneapolis, Minn., showed a 118 per cent increase and Milwaukee, Wis., showed a 22 per cent decline.

"Noteworthy exceptions to the general increase in gonorrhea incidence," Fleming said "occurred in the State of California and in the City of Norfolk, Va., where vigorous control programs have been under way for some time."

"Over-all," Fleming continued, "gonorrhea continues to be uncontrolled in most areas. But there is some evidence of a reduction of the reservoir of asymptomatic female gonorrhea through screening programs and through contact investigation. This trend may offer hope for control for the first time."

'73 Anthology Chooses Mass. Review Stories

The Massachusetts Review has announced that two short stories, "Cambridge is Sinking!" by John Clayton and "Going Home" by James Kenary, have been chosen by Martha Foley for inclusion in her anthology, The Best American Short Stories of 1973.

Originally published in the Autumn 1972 issue of The Massachusetts Review, these stories will be republished next fall by Houghton Mifflin Co.

John Clayton, associate professor of English at UMass has previously published fiction in The Massachusetts Review and The Antioch Review, besides a prize-winning critical study of Saul Bellow that is now in paperback. Kenary is an undergraduate in the BDIC program at the University and a veteran of Vietnam. The story, his first, was based on his Vietnam experience.

The Best American Short Stories has been published annually since 1915.

Overing Named Labor Coordinator

Harold S. Overing has been named coordinator of labor relations for the University.

A New Salem resident, Overing has been at UMass since 1969 as a professional staff member to the assistant dean for administration in the School of Education. He came to UMass after retiring from a 32-year career with the United States Postal Service.

At UMass he has been coordinator of administrative support services for the School of Education, and for the past two years a member of the University's management negotiating team.

In his new position, effective May 1, Overing will be responsible for coordinating labor relations for the entire UMass non-professional staff, including contract negotiation and administration with both MSEA (Massachusetts State Employes Assn. and AFL—CIO Local #1776.

Correction

The Senior Committee Meeting scheduled for Monday will begin at 6:30 p.m., not 7:30 as stated in yesterday's Collegian. The meeting will take place in Room 174, Campus Center.

Future meetings will be scheduled on alternate Sundays at 5:30 p.m. Monday's meeting was scheduled a day later due to the N. I. T.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆—by SYDNEY OMARR—☆

"Can you tell me which signs have the reputation for being the most stubborn?—Harry Korman, Santa Monica, Calif. Answer: Traditionally the fixed signs are associated, on the positive side, with being determined. On the negative side, the determination turns to obstinacy. The fixed signs are Taurus, Leo, Scorpio and Aquarius.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Practical matters dominate. Check needs to those who depend on you. Be frank in making any appraisal. Emphasis is on work, health, contacts with those who share your interests. Be aware of details, fine points.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Good lunar aspect now coincides with romantic interests, creative chances, a variety of experiences. Relation with the opposite sex are intensified. Nothing is apt to occur halfway—it is all or nothing.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Study Aries message. Take nothing for granted. Do some personal investigating. Read between the lines. Accent is on the end of matters, completion of project, final decisions. Build for security. Long range view is necessary.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Emphasis is on short trip, messages, unusual calls. Be active without scattering efforts. Versatility now is your ally. Key is to select quality. Eschew apparent shortcuts. Know what you're getting—see in realistic light.

LEO—(July 23-Aug. 22): Accent is on money, valuables, ability to pay and collect. Use past experience. Financial gain is indicated. Realize you have something of value to offer. Means don't sell yourself short. Older individual becomes ally.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): You get what you want if willing to give up something that has been finished for some time. You will understand. Your judgment, intuition are apt to be on target. Look ahead. New starts can be profitable.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Areas previously dark will receive benefit of greater light. Means what you feared proves groundless. Co-operate in charitable drive, special project. Visit one confined to home, hospital.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Accent is on desire, ability to bring close to you persons, situations that are desirable. Your hunches prove accurate. You gain by sharing knowledge. Learn by teaching. Review recent lessons. Aquarian is in picture.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): If flexible, you make definite gain. One who has much in common with you provides boost up ladder. Room is made for you at higher elevation. Strive to move ahead—accept added responsibility.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You are able to put long range plans to work. Means what was far away comes closer to actuality. Open lines of communication. Write and advertise. Spread views. One who is very practical lends helping hand.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Exchange ideas concerning ways of profitably utilizing assets. Means get together with mate, close associate or business partner. Joint effort is most likely to bring favorable results. Gemini and Virgo are involved.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Accent is on public relations, your ties with mate, partner. Key now is to be co-operative, if diplomatic, you gain. Taurus, Libra persons become valuable allies. Home atmosphere improves if you are reasonable.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are introspective, drawn to law, capable of succeeding in television, poetic and basically romantic. You will do more traveling this year, could gain weight and May should be the most significant month for you in 1973.

Austin And Peters: From Rags To Riches

By BOB ESTELLE

Two of the big reasons why UMass is going to the N.I.T. this Saturday are Tom Austin and Charlie Peters. These two front court men, both substitutes as sophomores have improved tremendously.

Tom Austin was the starting center on the undefeated Julius Erving freshman team. He sat out the following season and came back as the back-up center to Dr. J. and saw action only in the final minutes of runaway ballgames. Last year, his playing time increased and he worked to improve himself to the point where this year, he has been a key factor in the Minutemen's drive to a third N.I.T. in four years. Says Jack Leaman, "In his final year, Tom Austin is now playing the type of basketball we felt he was capable of during his entire career. His height and his quickness and his ability to think have made him a tremendous asset on the front end of our full court press. He has acquired the physical maturity which gives him the strength to compete harder for a longer period of time. He's always been a good defensive player and now he's become an offensive threat."

Charlie Peters has also become a key man on Leaman's full court press. He was the starting center on a 4-15 freshman team that followed the Erving team but, through hard work, he has become the starting center for a team that has won 12 in a row. Coach Leaman feels that the way Charlie performs against Missouri's All-American John Brown will dictate how well the Minutemen do against Missouri on Saturday night. Leaman further states, "Charlie's continuous improvement has enabled him to become one of the top defensive centers in the East. He did not figure highly in our pre-season plans but through hard work and the desire to play, he has won the starting center position and has allowed no one to take it away from him. His spirited play and determination on defense have set the tone for the aggressive man-to-man defense that has enabled us to win the Yankee Conference championship and play in the N.I.T."

After this year, though, they both will be graduating and have already made their future plans. Charlie, an accounting major, has a job with a major accounting firm in Boston lined up and is planning on getting married next December. He states, "I like going to school here. UMass is one of the most beautiful campuses in New England. The academics here are as good as anywhere in the East. The business school has a great program with all the courses one would need to be able to get a job upon graduation." He also has the following comments on the support he and Tom, both fraternity brothers at SAE, have gotten. "The fans have been great. Especially those who followed us down to the Civic Center in Springfield and on the road all over New England. My best fan is my father. He's been to every game except for 2 or 3 since I was a freshman. The rest of my family and my fraternity brothers at SAE (80 going to the N.I.T.) are really our hard core fans."

Tom, a civil engineering major, is headed for a surveying job in Connecticut. Right now, though, he and Charlie are both looking forward to Saturday night's affair with Missouri. "The difference between West Virginia and now is amazing. The team play and the press have made a big difference. We've seen game films of Missouri. Coach Leaman feels we can beat them and we feel we can beat them. We think we can outrun them and we have more depth than they do and we ought to be able to go out and get them."

It's been a long and hard road for these two but the benefits to be reaped by beating a team like Missouri should be well worth it.

Afternoon Athletes: The Boys of Boyden

By STEVE FERRARA

Every afternoon you can go down to Boyden and see them. It's the same kids every day and they're always playing basketball or jogging around the gym.

What is it that makes these kids run straight from classes to the gym? What is it that makes these kids cut their late-afternoon classes just so they can shoot a few hoops?

In Philadelphia they call it "Hoopla". A Freudian might call it "displacement;" (i.e. the shifting of emotions from one object to another so that, as in a dream, the unimportant object seems important).

Maybe some of them are former high school players who just wouldn't feel right unless they work out every day. These are the most competitive guys who play their hardest in a full-court game as well as in two-on-two.

These same players are the ones who have contributed to make the Intramural Program the big success that it is.

Then there are the kids who just weren't good enough to play in high school but love basketball so much that they never gave up on the sport. These are the kids that aren't afraid to dream about playing professional ball because they know it will never happen.

Granted, some are there just for lack of something better to do. But I'm talking about the "afternoon athletes," the ones who are there every day without fail.

What is it that makes these kids show up every day?

Whatever it is that motivates them, it's the same thing that is compelling four thousand UMass students to crowd six or seven in a car to see their team play in New York, to crowd twelve into a hotel room to sleep off their drunken enthusiasm.

Whatever you want to call it, you'll see them at the NIT.

Basketball's Basement

By GEORGE NADEL

The Frankies have fallen; the 'Basement' has been painted red—Big Red. After six weeks as the nation's anchor, St. Francis (Pa.) startled even themselves by handling Detroit with ease, 84-70. That win opened the door for Cornell. Ranked No. 4 pre-season, The Ivy Leaguers won two of their first three games, dropped to 18th and appeared to be climbing out of their 'Basement' flat. A sharp U-turn (16 straight losses) allowed the Big Red to pass everyone in sight and claim season-ending No. 1 honors.

The '72-'73 season saw the NCAA attendence mark shattered, a record number of games stopped early and such antics as dousing the home team's coach with beer take place. A more common fan pastime is breaking the concentration of visitors at the foul line. With boos and whistles losing their originality, duck calls came into widespread use. Yet, not even the best-timed duck call can compete with the Ragin' Cajun Bellow, perfected by a Southwestern Louisiana fan. Just as the shooter sets, deep from the heart of Bayou Country a reverberating, rhythmic chant reminiscent of a Coyote in pain fills the air. Few teams have fared well from the line at Lafeyette and none have come away with victory.

'You're never a loser, unless you don't play.'—that's the attitude of Northwestern Captain Mark Sibley. Each of his three varsity seasons has ended in a last-place Big Ten finish. Earlier this season the Wildcats (4-20) were in the 'Basement', once as close to the lower echelon as 14th. Sibley's final game was against powerful Minnesota. The Gophers needed a victory to repeat as conference champions and came to Evanston planning on a cakewalk. As expected it wasn't close. Sibley hit a career-high 36 points, the Wildcats jumped to a 20-6 lead on their way to a 79-74 upset win and Minnesota was denied a trip to the NCAA tournament.

Providence Advances In NCAA

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP)-Marvin Barnes poured in 20 points and Ernie DiGregorio and Nehru King 18 each to lead Providence to an 87-65 route of Penn Thursday night in the opening game of the NCAA Eastern Regional basketball tournament.

Maryland and Syracuse met in the second game to determine the Providence opponent in the Eastern finals Saturday afternoon.

The regional champion meets the Midwest Regional survivor in the national semifinals March 30 at St. Louis.

Providence, fourth-ranked nationally, ran its winning streak to 20 and overall record to 26-1, against a Penn team that showed only 47 per cent on the free ball to 61 per cent for the Friars, who led at the half, 36-30.

The Providence lead was 43 points after eight minutes, but the Quakers drew a bit closer when Providence lost the outstanding outscoring at Barnes, who set up the final 6:14 minutes of the first half with three fouls.

Penn, 18th-ranked and now 21-6, cut the lead to three after five minutes of the last half, but Providence went on a 12-4 tear in the next five minutes and was never in danger again.

In all, five Friars scored in double figures. Kevin Stacom scored 16 points and Charles Crawford 12 against the team with the nation's best defensive average.

Barnes led the rebounders with 13 and DiGregorio handed out 10 assists.

Phil Sudhanson scored 18 points and was tougher on to lead Penn, which finished the game shooting 31 per cent to Providence's 46.

Bruins Tie For Second

BUFFALO (AP)-Bobby Orr tallied twice Thursday night, including a shot the length of the ice into an empty net in the final minute, and the Boston Bruins scored three times in the final period to defeat the Buffalo Sabres 4-1 in an impacted National Hockey League game.

By winning their fourth consecutive game, the Bruins climbed into a tie with the idle New York Rangers for second place in the East Division. The Sabres remained one point behind idle Toronto in the race for the fourth and final playoff spot in the East.

Norm Gratton gave Buffalo a 1-0 lead late in the opening period when Gilt Perreault shaved the length of the rink and led him a pass in the goalmouth which he nudged past netminder Jacques Plante. Orr tied it early in the second period with a low, hard shot from just inside the blue line after a passed from Ken Hodge in the corner.

The score remained tied until midway through the final period when Carol Vadnais fired a 40-foot shot past Buffalo goalie Roger Crozier after being bloqued with a forward in Buffalo's end. Phil Esposito made it 3-1 just 41 seconds later with his 40th goal of the season, a backhand shot after he circled the net.

Orr fakeed Gerine Joe an extra attacker in the final stages and Orr took a crossing pass from Plante and skimmed the puck all the way into the Buffalo net.

UMass-Missouri Even Match

By EARLE BARROLL

The word around campus has it that the UMass basketball team has an even shot at defeating Missouri tomorrow night in the opening round of the 36th annual National Invitational Tournament at Madison Square Garden.

"I'd say that is a fair assumption," said Jack Leaman yesterday in his office as he went over the finishing touches for his third trip in four years to the mid-March classic. "From what I've seen and what I've heard it's a pretty good matchup."

"It was awful tough to expect us to beat Marquette and North Carolina in '70 and '71 when both teams had initial aspirations for the NCAA."

What Leaman has seen and heard is a result of an intensive nationwide scouring of teams and coaches who've come in contact with the 16th ranked Tigers during the course of this season. "With no possibility of seeing them in person," explained Leaman, "I just went to their schedule, found out who I knew and began calling."

As the process Leaman's desk has been transformed into a stockpile of profiles and scouting reports that have taken over his mind and team during the past week. Yesterday afternoon the Minutemen completed their summer preparations at Deerfield Academy and this evening at 8 p.m. they'll leave for New York.

The same positive feeling that has struck this campus has likewise been the course for Leaman's Tigers since the season ended almost two weeks back.

"This is the first year that we'll be going down to N.I.T. with an air of confidence," noted Leaman. "I remember the first time we went down it was kind of a novelty. The second time we went to New York it was a break that we had to play the second-best team in the United States.

"But this time we feel we have a shot at Missouri. We don't have to worry so much as to what they're going to do to us as we had to with Marquette and North Carolina. Our feeling is that we are here to play—we belong and we can win."

What the Minutemen have in store for the Tigers is "scouting and running with control," Leaman continued. "We'll run right from the start hoping to get us up early and set the tempo for the game."

Leaman is concerned with the overall physical strength of Missouri, being that their frontcourt averages close to 230 lbs. per man and one guard tips the scales at 185. "I'm bringing Greg Deaver (the junior guard) along with us to New York," said Leaman. "He's extremely strong (6'4 with strong proportions and could bulge if we need some muscle up front of the game turns in that direction."

In the meantime Leaman plans to go with the same starting five that ended the season, 6' Horace Allen from Austin at forward, Charlie Paters in the middle and Rick Pitino and Bill Kinderman at guards.

Probably the biggest rumor to hit the metropolitan New York area in conjunction with John Pitino when Pitino and his teammate, left American John Brown, dead for the first time under the basket. Brown has been described as a "Charlie Paters who can shoot."

And for you Irish (Happy Tomorrow is St. PATRICK'S Day Digger Phelps of Notre Dame has guaranteed the hearers that his team will carry shamrocks into battle this night. The Minutemen are 19-4 going into the battle with a chance at a second 19 win season in three years (19-4 in '70). They also have the opportunity of winning their 10th straight (the outgoing streak of a dozen they made with a UMass team in the '60's that was 19-4. Missouri is 5-4, coming in the Big Eight and making its second consecutive appearance in the N.I.T.

After a week of Missouri, Missouri, N.I.T., N.I.T. and UMass, UMass, UMass, we can all join in agreeing that finally the tipoff—if it is—is in sight. At last.

Women Gymnasts In Finale

By MIK KNAPP

The varsity women's gym team will travel to Southern Connecticut State College tomorrow for their final dual meet of this season. The Su Tom, team has improved since last year, and this is also their final dual meet prior to the Eastern Regional Championships. The UMass team has worked out very hard this week and plans to make its strongest possible line-up in preparation for the Eastern.

Tomorrow's meet will see UMass entering the most multiple event competition ever. There are three: all-around, parallel bars, uneven bars (women's version, Roman rings and Russian Horse), the vaulters, and Anne Yeager. Anne has climbed into the all-around position for the first time since her freshmen year. Heidi Armstrong, Donna Falk, and Marion Kalish will be competing in three of the four events.

The remaining specialists, in order from Kate Cady (uneven and floor), Gaude Co (uneven bars and vaults) look for a big win and would like to see the team enter the Eastern with an impressive last performance. The Eastern will be held on March 30-31 at Temple University.

BC Falls 10-4

BOSTON (AP)-Junior wing Ken Pitts Burbak matched home three goals and had three assists Thursday in leading Boston University to a 10-4 victory over Boston College to advance to the finals of the NCAA hockey tournament at Boston Garden.

BC Captain Bob Sweeney scored three goals, the last tally coming in the final seconds.

Denver opened BC a goal when Kimberly struck at 6:47 of the first period, but then the Pioneers poured back for four consecutive scores, two on power plays, for a 3-1 first period advantage. Denver added four goals in the middle period to increase their cushion to 7-1.

The other scorers for Denver were Ed Hayes (3), Brent Affleck, John Chyzhe, Mike Sunnick, Rich Preston and Rob Palmer (1 each).

Survey Needed On Athletic Fee

Has anyone in the Student Senate thought that maybe a lot of people on this campus want to keep the athletic fee? Crazy as it may sound, I'd bet that a good number, maybe even a majority, of the students here don't mind paying an athletic fee of $10 or $15 semester.

But did the Senate ever stop to think about the possibility and ask the student body how they feel about this issue? Nope. I think that the Senate might not represent the student body's opinion as well as it would like to think.

I would like to see a survey of student's interests made. Project Pulse could handle this with little difficulty. Maybe the results would show a difference of opinion between the students and their representatives. Maybe not.

Contrary to popular belief, Frank McInerney does not smoke cigars. With all the propaganda going around lately, people are beginning to think that you can't get to the Athletic Director's office without first feeling your way through a thick cloud of brown sugar smoke in the Boston corridors.

Don Dinkelaker must have felt this way when he wrote his series on the "Big Business" here MDC. His sugar smoking factory down there. Dee wrote about the evils of the department in the past, that something must have happened to the final chapter of his series. He never even came to University to find out what the new A.D. planned to do about all the "corruption."

McInerney has shown that, since he took over the position in September, he is very willing to listen to the students. He issued the policy in the Springfield-Univ. Center games (that games would not be played down there when school is in session) and more recently has attended meetings of the Student Senate and the Black Athletic Council. I find him to be honest and very open to suggestions.

I personally am in favor of retaining the athletic fee.

I believe that most people on this campus are pleased with the level of excellence UMass athletics have reached. The crowds at sports events are proof of this. And it's not just the extra people showing up at the different events all the time. Recently the Cage was jam packed for the Purdue basketball game and, on the same night, the Boston Auditorium Civic was filled to capacity for the women's gymnastics meet against Springfield. I would like to see more money spread out within the athletic department, especially in women's sports and club activities where are presently underfunded at this campus.

Maybe the should be added to the fee so an ice facility could be built on this campus. This would certainly be in the best interest of the students.

I am not against holding into alternative plans to the fee, but only if it does not hurt the present programs.

UMass Reaps First NIT Gold

Bill Endicott, dribbling around a Missouri defender, helped keep UMass close in the first half so as up the second half surge to victory. Endicott was high scorer for the Minutemen with 21. (MDC Photo by Gib Fullerton)

By EARLE BARROLL

New York—The numbers game will become an obsession in UMass sports history. With them the thoughts of N.I.T. is past and remain just that—in the past. Night now the emphasis is on N.I.T. present and a clash with North Carolina tomorrow night in the quarter-finals of Madison Square Garden.

The Minutemen proved the winning combination a week Saturday night when they sent heavy favorite Missouri to an unanticipated early exit in their first ever opening round victory after two previous failures.

With this seemingly elusive platform achieved coach Jack Leaman said after the game, "Every time you do something good, you have to go one step further. Our next step is to win the tournament." Is it great? Well, it is when Leaman has a talent horde waiting to have him in the end.

The manner in which the Minutemen pushed off the nationally ranked upset hurdles on the newly side which you think about it. Said Leaman, "We didn't play well, but we did enough good things to beat a nationally ranked team."

Leaman has never pulled a punch. His above analysis is well documented. The Minutemen did not play well, but in the process they turned the game into a leap of faith, a team with a national tradition in action and a city into an emotional paradise for 7,000 plus UMass.

Twice the Greek had installed Missouri as six point favorites earlier in the week. The Tigers were even further by passing the Cyclones by seven more. And this was all augmented by some Louisville fans who surrounded the Minutemen on their way to the Garden with sharp barbs from "you got to be kidding" to "what's living."

But once on the court, the wits and the verbiage could not save the 16th ranked Tigers from having to explain to their dazed fans back home that a team from the Yankee Conference slipped the Big Eight. When queried about the after the game explosion Tom McLaughlin remarked, "We've never had given the credit we should be receiving.

"If you ask me if we're entering into another class by beating Missouri I say no. We're entering nothing, we're already there and have been there for quite some time. This tournament now gives us the opportunity to show all the doubters.

Missouri coach Norm Stewart, nationally shaken by the team's other admirers, "UMass beat us decisively and on that when rule that affectively."

He was also beaten by a balanced Minutemen attack that featured no less than five players in double figures—Bill Endicott (21), Tom Austin (19), Al Skinner (16), Charlie Paters (12), John Murphy (10)—and a rook, Tom McLaughlin with eight. The Minutemen also introduced the battler Tigers, in its and generally dampened their into submission.

Skinner's early effortlessness supplied by a super 6' senior John Brown who should be a first round draft choice by the pros. Actually UMass didn't do that bad a job defensing him considering how he is shots. But he hit on 10 of these along with nine of 12 charity tosses for a 29 point outing with 8 rebounds.

"He's a great player," insisted Leaman. "He's much better than I thought he'd be. He definitely underestimated him. He's extremely quick for such a big man."

The magnificence both teams experienced during the first half was related to the two week layoff. "Due to this I need a lot of players," said Leaman. "It took us time to get everything back, but when we needed it we played the last ten minutes of the season or the rest of the game."

At that point the Minutemen were holding a nine lead to 40 that was quickly negated by the Tigers and turned into a three advantage with just over five minutes to play. A Skinner layup and an Endicott steal gave the Minutemen back the lead which was escalated again when Austin cut his points in the second half and Paters scored.

Missouri closed to one point, and the rest was UMass point against Missouri's frustrations with the turnover running out. The Minutemen committed no turnovers during this time with their four corner offense resulting in free throw lines and a 3rd slam and 13 straight going into the North Carolina game.

It was all in the course of history.

Women Speak Out On Rape

By BRANDON BUSHEE

Seventy women discussed how they feel rape statutes exist to protect men, not women, at a rape speakout and conference last Saturday at the Unitarian Church in Northampton.

Co-sponsored by the Northampton area women's center, the conference included a workshop on the myths of rape, a discussion by rape victims, and a talk seminar workshop by an assistant policewoman.

"Rape is the only crime in this country where the victim has to prove her innocence," said the UMass Assistant Attorney for Students, Libby Stark. "In Massachusetts, a corroborating witness such as a physician is necessary just to get the case to trial."

Stan, one mentioned, "Many hospitals and doctors refuse to treat rape victims."

So many states a woman who was not a virgin cannot prior charges, Ms. Stark said. "If you be a non-sex your experience, you are considered to be giving less consent and again you cannot press charges. The law says you asked for it," she said.

Ms. Stark reported that the final decision to press charges is legally the policeman's and even if the case finally gets to court, the conviction rate is low. "Also, convicted rapists serve an average term of 5-7½ years," she said.

Ms. Stark conducted a workshop "to dispel the following myths" about rape:

"Women are attacked only strangers"—over 50% of victims are neighbors, acquaintances or relatives of the victim.

"Rapists are sexually deprived"—50% of rapists are married.

"Most rapes occur in dark alleys"—most rapes occur in the home of the victim or the attacker.

Ms. Stark said that prosecution of rape has a distinctly racial character because "90% of the men convicted of rape have been black" and "no white man has ever been convicted of raping a black woman in this country."

In the speakout, women community said they were treated with "disrespect and humiliation" by the police. Some said they were asked to repeat the physical details of the assaults several times. One speaker summed up the official's attitude as "they think you deserved it and you loved it. But it is illegal happened."

One woman said that there exists only a fine line between illegal and legal rape (sexual conversion). "Rape should be redefined to include sex when you don't want it, even if you're married," others agreed.

The conference discussed the possibility of establishing a "support group" to accompany rape victims to the police station. The victim would be informed of her rights by the gang rape committee. The support group would view the document with the assistant police.

At the end of the conference, policewoman Diane White noted some "unfortunate" victim in another women to put the attacker off the guard and give her a chance to run away. "She said to go for the eyes first—scratch or poke with your fingers." She said the nose and the Adam's apple are also very vulnerable.

The best weapon a woman has is legs, she said, because biologically women have much stronger legs than men.

Ms. White gave the following "tips" for hitchhikers to protect themselves. Before you get into the car ask him where he's going (it gives you time to check him out). If already in the car before threatened, take the ignition keys and throw them out the window. Slow the turn, step on the brake, break glass, scream—and as a last resort run in a ball if you jump out of the car.

Students Rate Transit Service

By HUGH OWEN

The Campus Transit System will distribute a questionnaire to students riding inbound buses this Tuesday and Wednesday morning. Southwest buses will not be included in this survey.

Students are to fill out the questionnaires on the buses and place them in boxes provided on the buses.

The questionnaire involves seven questions pertaining to how students usually commute, how many times a week they use the buses, and how would they get to the campus if buses were not provided.

The survey is funded by the Federal government, the University, and the Student Senate. The study is an attempt to determine whether student's traveling habits have changed since the buses began operating.

The results of this survey will be released through the Campus News Bureau in approximately 3-4 weeks.

What Is A Special Student?

By JOAN FASSNACHT

Special Students at UMass have recently protested the elimination of many of their spaces in the School of Education for next year due to budget cuts.

But what is a Special Student?

According to David P. Lawrence, a member of the Admission Office, the Special Student is allowed to take one or two courses each semester for a $12.50 per credit fee, plus the cost of an I.D. card. It is open to three main categories: full time employees taking job-related courses, wives or husbands of full time students, or wives or husbands of faculty.

Because the student pays only for the credits he takes, he receives no privileges, such as counseling and advising.

Special students are accepted into courses only one semester at a time, and must maintain a 2.0 cum to continue. A staff member given permission to take a job-related course by the Provost's Office is not allowed to register until after full-time students have.

When classes begin, prospective special students must go to the department in which the course they wish to take is located and secure permission of the instructor to enter.

Lawrence said the program only accepted students on a non-degree basis, and said the program was very limited. "I like to think of it as more of a courtesy service to certain people," he said.

The program currently has approximately 150 students enrolled. Speaking on the popularity of the program, Lawrence said "People are naturally attracted to the University by its magnetism. However, we do not accept transients off the streets."

"It should be understood that this is a special service limited to a select category of people."

C.C.-S.U. Director Still Sought

By AVIS YUNI

The Campus Center-Student Union (CC—SU) Director Search Committee hopes to have finished their interviews for the position by the end of March or first week in April and have their candidate shortly there after, Jay Denning, Co-Chairperson of the committee, told the Collegian Friday, March 16th.

So far, from the 500 applications and resumes received for the position, four candidates have been interviewed. Denning stated that the committee is bringing in more people, all of whom are in contention for the position.

In fact, the fifth candidate shall be coming to UMass this week. He is James Hauser, the Comptroller of Yonkers, New York. He was also the Vice-President of the Ford Motor Company.

As with the past candidates, he will be available to talk with students when he arrives, probably on Thursday and Friday of this week.

Of the four persons already interviewed, two are in-house candidates, present members of the campus-wide University community. One, Terry Grinnan, is the present Business Manager of the Campus Center.

Jerry Scanlon, another candidate, is presently the Acting Director of the CC—SU complex, as well as Assistant Dean of Students and Co-ordinater of Student Activities.

Denning said Scanlon has been at UMass for ten years and involved in student life for most of that time in one capacity or another.

One of the off-campus applicants is Robert Tarlin from Needham, Massachusetts. Tarlin has had many years of experience in the Hotel and Restaurant Industry, Dennis said.

He has been involved in and is currently dealing with the development of an $8 million tourist facility in Haiti. Tarlin was also the Assistant to the President of the Sheraton Corporation for a number of years.

The fourth candidate, Robert Magnuson, is from Freemont, California. Presently, he is Comptroller at the Stanford University Hospital.

Denning said that the committee, whose other co-chairperson is Arnold Millette, received 500 applications for the position from people in "all walks of life".

Since the start of the Director selection process last Spring, applications received have ranged from four star generals, disenchanted nuns, rabbis, priests, ministers and monks, to "a retired widow whose expertise was in rug making."

The resumes, Denning said, have ranged from one page to fifty pages in length, with forwarding letters from Henry Kissinger, educators, student activities, programming persons, etc. Agewise, the applicants range from 20 to 70.

The committee advertised the need for a Director in major papers throughout the country. They placed adds in The Amherst Record, The New York Times, The San Francisco Chronicle, and papers throughout the entire geographic area of the United States.

Also, the committee advertised in all types of professional journals.

Denning said the CC—SU Director's position is "probably one of the most crucial positions in the entire University as far as affecting student lives, because the Campus Center-Student Union is the center for student activities on campus."

"The Director will be in charge of running this (CC—SU) to the best of his ability." Denning said the Director relates to students with regard to fees, usage of the facilities, the different areas that students have a particular interest in that the Director can utilize in accordance with student desires, etc.

The Director is also directly responsible to the students.

Denning said.

Denning explained that the Directce's job, in general, is to run the CC—SU complex. He has under him over 300 full and part-time employees, and has to run a $7-1/2 million business that has both restraints and advantages that don't occur in normal business.

Paywise, the Director earns in the $20,000 bracket.

In the job, Denning said "one of the major problem areas is in the buisnss area - actual revenue producing areas.

Once those are straightened out we'll be able to drop the fee."

When a candidate is finally chosen for the office, Denning explained that the actual time of his take-over as Director of the CC—SU complex will depend on that particular candidate and how long it will take him to clean-up his private personal business before taking on this job.

At about this time the state legislators charged the UMass Board of Trustees with Continuing Education and space was not needed to be allotted for this, Scanlon said.

It was then decided that the Campus Center should be built as an addition to the SU rather than extending the actual SU building.

The CC was to be used for students in general, Continuing Education, and as a laboratory for School of Business Administration majors.

Scanlon said that Scott left UMass for another position in about 1964 and Mark Nolfsinger from the University of Michigan took over his position. In 1966, he resigned the position to become Associate Dean of Students.

When Nolfsinger left, Scanlon said, it was decided that it was too much for one person to handle both the physical aspects of the buildings and student activities.

An administrative decision was

WTOY, Student Station

By JOAN FASSNACHT

A relatively unknown yet ambitious student-run television station has been operating on campus since the Spring of 1970. WTOY, station, is completely owned, controlled, and run by students for students.

The station was founded during The Strike, by a group of students from Pierpont in an attempt to provide in-depth coverage of the Strike's workshops, demonstratiees, discussions, interviews, and spontaneous happenings.

Their goals have been to try to improve communications on campus by video-taping what has been happening and showing these tapes to interested students. The group also wishes to provide opportunities for students to gain experience in using television equipment and in producing creative programs.

WTOY is a Recognized Student Organization, and as such is funded by the Student Senate. It is located on the second floor of the Student Union. Close to 40 students from all over campus comprise the group at this time.

They invite interested students and prospective members to stop by and inspect the equipment and video-tape library in their office headquarters. It's available to be loaned out to students or groups, although to avoid damage, two one-hour workshops are required to familiarize students with the apparatus. The library also lends out tapes to groups, classes, and seminars for viewings. Some of the footage inclues tapes of the takeover of Dickinson Hall last spring and interviews with prisoners from Walpole State Prison when they were here for visitors' day last fall.

WTOY Secretary Dave Bunker is currently teaching a three-credit video-tape course, which is offered through WTOY. Approximately 25 students are presently enrolled.

This semester's emphasis on the making of documentaries has inspired students to film such subjects as abortions, Room to Move, the food services, dormitory life, and veterans services.

In an interview, Bunker discussed the future possibilities of campus video-taping saying, "We have heard that other schools in Boston and New York are beginning to become enthusiastic about filming campus documentaries and happenings. There is a great potential for colleges to exchange tapes, thereby keeping each other more accurately informed about what is happening on their own and on other campuses."

Last semester, WTOY presented video-tape showings at the Campus Center Coffee Shop. The continuous showings from 12 to 4 in the afternoon met with such an enthusiastic response from the audience that they plan to schedule more showings this semester. They also plan to hold a "Video Theatre" every Thursday night in the Student Union. Admission is free.

Future showings will include a video-tape of the Dance Marathon, as well as other student-produced tapes.

Because the concept of a student-run television station is so unusual, the station is experiencing growing pains. Bunker cited lack of money and equipment as their two biggest problems. "Right now we have only two televisions," he said. "We could use more TV's as well as other equipment. Because we do not have enough money for advertising, public knowledge about our existence is limited. We do not want to charge admission to the video shows, since we feel that we are providing a service to the students. We did buy movies and charged admission to students in an effort to raise money, but it flopped. We're planning to try again."

A Day (dring) At The Machines

By DON GLICKSTEIN

"You mother*!" I screamed at my first ball which rolled down the gutter of my first machine that I played in the First Annual Electric Pinball Machine Contest, held this past weekend in the Campus Center.

I really didn't end up doing that badly. By the time I finished playing the 10 contest machines, and with a little extra help from Super Star and Klondike, I had amassed a respectable score of 394,880.

The machines were in fine working condition.

The atmosphere was one of a tense excitement, the tings and the dongs of an active bumper, the sighs of a missed ball, the oohs and ahs of appreciative spectators, the bliss of a good score.

"Checker!" someone would yell for an official to mark a score.

A friend would pass by, notice me, and say sadly, shaking her head, "You, Don! A pinball addict!"

"Howaya doin." Another friend walks briskly by.

Fiddley foo. I let the ball in Spanish Eyes get behind my flipper and lose it.

Hey, will you get this high school kid outa my hair, telling me how to play Lawman.

One more machine to play. The Blue Max. The sweat is perceivable on my brow now. Gotta do good. Gotta get that trophy. Whata beauty! And that kid is the Collegian said I was anti-jock. Why it takes ptysical coordination, good eyesight, great reflexes to be a pinball wizard.

Tommy, can you hear me?

Now it's the world famous pinball wizard's last ball. Why I've shot pinball with the best of them . . . Zodiac . . . 3 Million Years B.C. . . . Grand Slam—there's a machine.

When you're in an auto accident, everything seems to turn into slow motion. My last ball is like that as I see it roll down a gutter and out-of-sight.

The First Annual Electric Pinball Machine Contest for me is over.

. . . and if all else fails, you can try pushing the ball with your finger, even if it is under glass. These students were among those participating in the first Annual Electric Pinball Machine Contest this weekend. (MDC Photos by Bill Beggs.)

It takes a lot of concentration to be a pinball wizard, and sometimes watching the other guy's style helps . . .

made to split the two functions and create two staffs. Terry Grinnan was hired as Business Manager of the CC—SU, and Scanlon as Co-ordinater of Student Activities, both of whom reported to Nolfsinger who was in charge of Residential Halls and the CC—SU complex.

About three years ago when the Trustees decided to switch to the Chancellor system for UMass, Scanlon said, the entire university was re-organized structurally.

Scanlon said that the two different but co-operating physical and student activities staffs were merged together officially under the Director.

The Campus Center was opened about two years ago and the CC—SU Director Search committee are now searching for a Director who will be responsible for the general direction of the total complex and all of its facets.

Budget Comm. Hits Concert Plan

By KEN SULIN

The UMass concert committee has been working this entire semester for their annual spring concert. All negotiations are now in the final stages and you may plan on another free concert in the stadium, tentatively scheduled for May 6th. At this point the groups to perform must remain unidentified, although a public announcement will follow in the near future.

The proposal the Concert Committee has drawn up is that beginning in the fall of '73 UMass will see five major concerts in the Cage during the course of the winter months, with a moderate admission charge. The talent will vary so a well-rounded cycle of music can reach the entire student body. Only being able to hold approximately 4,000 students, the Cage will be used to host concerts of rock, jazz, blues and soul music.

The rational being that students will only attend those concerts that suit them; they may go to only one or two but will have the option to attend all five.

The budgets committee feels the concerts should be self-sufficient and pay for themselves which would mean prices of five to six dollars per concert, with no SATF funding. In actuality they think a set price for tickets can be made to work without any subsidizing.

All systems are go except for one - the budgets committee. The administration has given positive reactions regarding use once again of the Cage, the students in general are in favor of more major concerts yet the budgets committee says no.

In order for the plan to work the Concert Committee suggested using a small portion of the SATF budget (SATF is the student activities fund for which you are billed $30.00 each semester). You may ask where does this money go - well the Collegian, Index, Transit Service etc. share large parts as do J.O.E., Belchertown Volunteers, etc. All the Concert Committee is asking would be $1.37 per student from this already established fee.

The question now arises; Do you think concerts can be an integral part of student activities? Presently UMass is the only major campus in New England that does not have a regular concert schedule. Do the students here get something they want from that $30.00 per semester fee?

At best you can expect a spring concert however it's now up to the student body for next year.

If you wish to express your opinions either for or against the proposal:

1) talk to any of the student senators
2) call the Senate at 5-0341
3) come to the RSO offices at 8 P.M. tonight and talk with the concert committee
4) attend the budgets meeting in room 805 of the Campus Center Tuesday at 6:30 P.M.

Team Stays In N.Y., NIT Foots The Bill

By STEVE CROWE

The University of Massachusetts basketball team will remain in New York through Tuesday night, following the National Invitational Tournament (NIT) Carolina game. Expenses are covered by the NIT Committee.

"The NIT picks up the tab from the time the team leaves the school until they come back," said UMass Coach Jack Leaman over the telephone Sunday night.

The team remained in New York in order to get more practice time. If they returned to the University Sunday, said Leaman, they wouldn't get back until late afternoon-to late to practice. Then, they would leave for New York again on Monday evening.

"Tommy McLaughlin (captain), after talking it over with the other kids, said it would be too much for the players to go home Sunday and then turn around and come back Monday," said Leaman. "And I'll go along with what the players want."

Last POWs Head Home

By ROBERT LIU
Associated Press Writer

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP) - The longest held prisoner of the Vietnam war and 25 other American POWs headed for home Monday with garlands of flowers around their necks and kisses on their cheeks.

They are the last of the 134 military men and six civilians released by the North Vietnamese and the Viet Cong in Hanoi Wednesday and Friday.

Leaving with them was Navy Lt. Cmdr. Robert J. Flynn, 36, of Colorado Springs, Colo., one of two military pilots shot down over China during the Vietnam war and freed by the Chinese Thursday.

The first of two C141 Starlifter flying hospitals, carrying 12 men, took off at 8 a.m.-7 p.m. Sunday EST-for McGuire Air Force Base, N.J., via Hickam Air Force Base, Hawaii.

The second plane, leaving two hours later, was bound for Travis Air Force Base, Calif., and Scott Air Force Base, Ill., also via Hickam.

The POWs include Army Maj. Floyd J. Thompson, 39, of Hudson, Mass., the longest-held captive; Philip W. Manhard, 51 of McLean, Va., the highest-ranking U.S. diplomat captured by the Communists, and Marine Sgt. Ronald L. Ridgeway, 23, of Houston, Tex., who was mistakenly declared dead in August 1968 after the decomposed bodies of several men were discovered in an abandoned outpost where his squad was ambushed.

Thompson, the senior officer on the first flight, and Manhard thanked the well-wishers who cheered and hugged the men and garlanded them with leis.

"You will live forever in our thoughts," Thompson said.

"Goodbye, God bless you."

Thompson, wearing his Green Beret uniform, told a newsman: "I thought I'd run out of tears of gratitude."

Manhard added: "For years and years I've bottled up all my emotions. Now I go around with a constant lump in my throat." He said he and Thompson had been in the same POW camp and were "like brothers."

Demo. Reform Chief Aiming For Fairness

By CARL P. LEUBSDORF
(AP) Political Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Barbara Mikulski, the head of the Democratic party commission seeking to remedy the woes of 1972 reform, hopes to succeed by applying a simple test: fairness.

"I don't want to get into ideological considerations," she said in an interview. "I want to be fair."

But she realizes that will be far from

But she realizes that will be far from simple in a party that ranges from white Southern conservatives to Northern ghetto blacks with a large sprinkling of blue collar ethnics in between.

"The thing that's so great about us, our pluralism, is the thing that gets us screwed up when we try to make rules," Miss Mikulski said.

Unlike the McGovern Commission, which started from scratch four years ago to overhaul the party's delegate selection procedures, the Mikulski Commission starts with its experience, its rules and a widespread awareness that the party can't afford another convention with 76 credentials challenges.

Starting with an organizational meeting in Washington in late April, the commission plans to examine the 18 McGovern guidelines in the light of a statistical analysis now in progress and the specific experiences of Democrats around the nation.

By Dec. 20 this year, it hopes to have completed its review of the guidelines and its proposed revisions so that 1974 and 1975 can be spent on working with state Democratic parties to carry out the changes.

Understandably, Miss Mikulski, a Baltimore city councilwoman, won't say much about quotas: the widespread view that the McGovern guidelines requiring women, monorities and young people "in reasonable relation" to their numbers led to an unenforceable, unacceptable system of percentage quotas.

At this moment, she and her staff director, Gerald Cassidy, are trying to find out how the McGovern commission's declaration that the guidelines didn't mean quotas turned into a series of rulings where a state that picked three men and one woman for the Platform Committee was told to make it two of each.

Before it even gets to work, the commission is in the center of one of the controversies at this week's Democratic National Committee meeting.

Resisters Claim Sweden Refusing G.I.s Asylum

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) - U.S. war resisters said Sunday the Swedish government has decided to refuse asylum to American deserters who left their military posts after the Vietnam cease-fire.

The American sources said the new policy was illustrated last week by the return of two black GIs to U.S. military authorities.

The Swedish Immigration Bureau, which has granted sanctuary to about 500 antiwar Americans who fled the draft or deserted, refused comment.

The two GIs were not identified. The exile sources said Swedish border police turned them over to the U.S. Army after they deserted from a base in West Germany because they considered the military racist.

Assassination Attempted, Cambodian Security Tight

By DENNIS NEEWD
Associated Press Writer

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) - Government soldiers rounded up half a dozen members of Cambodia's old royal family Sunday and tightened security in the capital following a bombing attack on President Lon Nol's palace in an apparent assassination attempt.

Troops in full battle order rolled up in trucks at the homes of several close relatives of deposed Prince Norodom Sihanouk, most of whom have been under virtual house arrest since his overthrow three years ago Sunday.

They were hustled off to Phnom Penh jails.

Guards around the home of Queen Mother Kossemak were reinforced, but there were no reports she had been arrested. The ailing president called off state and religious ceremonies marking Sihanouk's 1970 overthrow and remained in seclusion behind barbed wire defenses at his downtown palace.

Capt. So Potra of the air force swooped a stolen T28 fighter plane over Lon Nol's palace Saturday, blasting the palace guard's compound and razing the homes of more than 100 army families.

At least 36 persons were killed and 50 injured, by official count, in the blast and a subsequent fire that swept through the closely packed shacks.

Lon Nol, who since 1971 has been paralyzed on his left side and rarely leaves the palace, was unhurt.

He promptly imposed martial law, closed all newspapers except government information organs, and at least temporarily forbade all residents, Cambodian and foreign, from leaving the country.

Fresh troops were brought into the capital and whole sections were cordoned off, with army units camping in the streets.

Potra apparently escaped, and there was no firm news where he landed the stolen plane.

He was believed to have landed at a jungle air strip in the area under the control of Cambodia's Communist Rouge rebels and their North Vietnamese allies.

Lon Nol went on the radio to allege that the assassination attempt was part of a Communist plot to overthrow his government, but so far there has been no insurgent followup of the bombing.

ITT Papers Contradict Mitchell

WASHINGTON (AP)—Columnist Jack Anderson reported Sunday that he has obtained summaries of confidential International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. documents which he claimed contradict former Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell's sworn testimony last year to the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The documents were in a huge collection that ITT delivered under subpoena to the Securities and Exchange Commission, the columnist said.

Anderson also reported the summaries mention the names of President Nixon, Vice President Spiro T. Agnew, White House aides John Ehrlichman and Charles Colson, ex-Treasury Secretary John Connally, former Secretaries of Commerce Maurice Stans and Peter Peterson, Atty. Gen. Richard Kleindienst and former Asst. Atty. Gen. Richard McLaren.

The Senate committee asked the Justice Department to review transcripts of the ITT hearings for possible perjury but "despite some apparent misstatements under oath, no action has been taken," Anderson said.

Anderson wrote that he had read the summaries to Mitchell "and he repeated the denials that he had made under oath." A Justice Department spokesman said Sunday that the matters involving ITT are still under investigation. He declined to comment on Anderson's reports.

Last week, the House Commerce Committee's special investigations subcommittee voted 4 to 0 to make public, on Monday, a confidential SEC summary of SEC's secret files involving ITT unless the Justice Department or SEC presented, in writing, "a clear and compelling statement" that disclosure would prejudice rights of any person or firm.

This involves a dispute over congressional access to 34 boxes of ITT papers that SEC sent to the Justice Department last October.

Anderson said the summaries show ITT chief executive Harold S. Geneen visited Washington in early August 1970 to deal with the company's antitrust matter. The Geneen visit, "according to the memos, was to bring pressure on Richard McLaren, then the antitrust chief, to stop prosecution," Anderson added.

Anderson wrote that Geneen sat down with Mitchell, "who testified at the ITT hearing: 'My office calendar shows that this meeting could not have lasted more than 35 minutes . . . The meeting was held at Mr. Geneen's request to discuss the over-all antitrust policy of the department with respect to conglomerates.

"I assented to the meeting on the express condition that the pending ITT litigation would not be discussed. Mr. Geneen agreed to this condition. The pending ITT litigation was not discussed at this meeting."

30 Dance For Dystrophy

Put On Your Highheeled Sneakers..

By BETSY CAREN

"What an ache, exhaustion, boredom, oh do I ache," murmured a couple dancing in a marathon for Muscular Dystrophy as it wore to a close last night. However, while they soothed their injuries with Ben Gay, $4271 was raised for muscular dystrophy in this 52 hour dance marathon sponsored by Phi Mu Delta in the Student Union Ballroom. Two individual couples, Brian Boyson and Joanne Reagan from Phi Mu Delta at UMass; and Diane Goff and Barry Lyle, an outside group, won the contest by lasting the time limit and because their sponsoring organization raised the most money.

The contestants selected on a volunteer basis danced, ate, yawned, and slept starting at 6 P.M. Friday night till 10 P.M. Sunday night. The participants were given a half hour break every four hours and a rest period between 3 A.M. and 7 A.M. both Saturday and Sunday. Those who finished included: Ed Cutshall and Katy Gill; Greg Nepucci and Stephanie Monsch; Peter Montinello and Donna Cowdney; Al Roby and Laona DeNando (the first runner-ups); Charles Sackoki and Marlene Bennett; Richard Delault and Diane Dodds.

The couples came attired to dance in sneakers, hiking boots, loafers and bare feet, with almost everyone dressed in a T shirt and pants. However, not all the contestants were prepared to cope with the injuries that resulted, such as pulled tendons, sprained arms, and severe all-over body aches.

Barry Lyle, who injured his arm said: "I'd participate again for muscular dystrophy, but never just for the 'fun' of it."

Phi Mu Delta of UMass, especially Paul Cook (president); Wendell Cummings, Steve Lesser, Steve Levine, Al Elmont, Jim Pistorio, and Tom Barry worked conscientiously to make this affair a success. They counted all the incoming money, mostly change, listened to the complaints, handled all the arrangements, and were there to give support to the determined contestants.

The marathon began with just a handful of spectators, as Steve Levine, co-captain of the UMass track team, used a starting gun to officially get things under way. They were all enthusiastic about the marathon and confident that they would make it to the end. But, the music from Mack Snafu was not entirely pleasing; as one couple put their hands over their ears and groaned: "This band is too loud and seems to hit an off note once too often." When Maelstrom Blues

Jim Pappas

Band replaced them at 9:30, the contestants seemed livelier and more content with the music. Early Saturday morning, they danced to records, until their well-deserved break at 3 A.M.

The contestants found they had to contend with the tedium of dancing hour after hour during the day Saturday. In desperation the dancers played frisbee, cards, basketball, and read the Sunday newspaper.

One contestant, Ed Cutshall, said that "one of the worst things about this marathon is fighting the boredom. If only they had set up a volleyball court or something; anything would have helped."

According to Brian Boyson, "The hardest part of this marathon was between 2 A.M. and 3 A.M. Sunday morning. After our rest period, I felt a lot better."

Sunday brought with it the excitement and anticipation of who would collect the most money and whether or not everyone would have the endurance to finish. Friends of the contestants spent most of their spare time over the weekend raising as much money as possible for them.

"What An Ache... Exhaustion, Boredom... ...Do I Ache."

Brian Boyson said with just two hours to go, "I feel so washed out, I've almost lost my sense of perception. Friends and spectators who watched and talked with us, helped out a great bit. People who collected money and gave moral support, especially the fraternity, kept us from going crazy."

A large crowd gathered for the closing ceremonies, and cheered for the participants. The dancers kissed, hugged, and embraced each other, smiling in relief. Afterwards, they sat down and carefully massaged their aches and pains; with the reward of accomplishment beaming from their faces.

Indeed, the contestants were exhausted, but happy as they chanted when the marathon was officially over: "We want one more." Pendrift stayed overtime to play another song for them; they danced hard, while outside the ring, spectators joined arms and danced too.

Richard Margil, who danced alone, said: "I feel as if this is the nicest thing that I've done since I've been at UMass. The whole marathon and everyone here made it a real together thing." Mr. Margil entered the contest because he liked to dance and collected the $30 entry fee during his rest periods.

Music from the marathon was provided by groups playing for free including: Mack Snafu and Pomerian, Maelstrom Blues

Jim Pappas

Group, Big Screaming Magrew, Peazda, Steve Hudjick, Stillwaters, Rush, and Pendrift. Occasionally the couples would get a second wind and form ring dances or clap to the music while dancing. The oldies music was greeted with a special enthusiasm.

The National executive secretary of Phi Mu Delta, George La Tour, presided at the marathon along with muscular dystrophy representatives: Don Blais and Lee Ann Petruskiewicz. Sponsors who provided support included: Campus Center Board of Governors, Jill Cockran of student activities, Daniel's of Southhampton, Trico, John McCloud; and Coca Cola of Northhampton. Dennis Wasik, Slippery Rock, Pa., swallowed ten live goldfish during the course of the evening, for each time that a substantial total was raised for muscular dystrophy.

Jim Pappas

There were many people who assisted in this project, and at the conclusion it was obvious that each one was glad he had given his time and energy for something so worthwhile. And although the contestants may never want to dance again, because they did dance, some people who are inflicted with muscular dystrophy, may be able to dance for the very first time in their life.

WASHINGTON (AP) - David Eisenhower, turning 25 and about to leave the Navy, says he wants to break out of what he termed his "structured life" and get a job, perhaps in public affairs or journalism.

He's decided not to take the advice of his grandfather, the late President Dwight D. Eisenhower, that he go to law school next, because he wants to start doing something on his own.

Admitting that 2 1/2 years spend in the Navy "made me restless," young Eisenhower, President Nixon's son-in-law, said: "Now I'm trying to plan for my future. I'm 25 years old and my life's been very structured up to this point. I have to set my course in the next three weeks."

David said he may take on a major writing project, like a book about his grandfather. He said that public affairs, government and history were all he read - "all I've been trained for-that's my life."

He said that journalism "might be a good place to stop off for awhile" and jokingly suggested he might try "investigative reporting."

Talking with reporters at a White House party Saturday night, David and his wife, Julie Nixon, looked ahead to the first time in their four years of marriage when they will be without school or military obligations.

David, a lieutenant junior grade, gets out of the Navy in Florida on his 25th birthday, March 31, after serving two years, five months, of a three-year stint, including 11 months on sea duty aboard the guided missile cruiser USS Albany of the Atlantic fleet.

President Nixon's close friend from Florida, C. G. Bebe Rebozo, is renting the young Eisenhowers his newly purchased $100,000 suburban Maryland home.

Bus Use Surveyed

By HUGH OWEN

The Campus Transit System will distribute a questionnaire to students riding inbound buses this Tuesday and Wednesday mornings. Southwest buses will not be included in this survey.

Students are asked to fill out the questionnaires on the buses and place them in boxes provided on the buses.

The questionnaire involved seven questions pertaining to how students usually travel, how many times a week they use the buses, and how they would get to the campus if buses were not provided.

The survey will be part of the research provided for by the Federal Grant which operates the buses. The study is an attempt to determine whether student's travel habits have changed since the buses began operating.

The results of this survey will be released through the Campus News Bureau in approximately 3-4 weeks.

Student Senate Moves Meeting

Due to scheduling conflicts, this week's Student Senate meeting will take place in room 227, Herter Hall at 7 p.m. Included on this week's agenda are a series of amendments to the Residence Hall Act, the Legal Services Act, and a bill that would award credit to ROTC participants retroactively, for the period when academic credit was terminated.

"Focus" Wounded Knee

Tonight at 10, WMUA's "Focus" series will feature a discussion on the impending crisis at Wounded Knee, S.D., where a group of Indians has been holding out against Federal authorities after seizing the trading post more than two weeks ago.

Moderator Ken Mosakowski's guests on the first half of tonight's live, 60-minute forum will be Bill Lattrell, Judy Leblanc, and Paul Mishler, members of the UMass Committee to Support Wounded Knee.

On the second segment of tonight's program, Mosakowski will cite and comment on a report recently released by Congressman Michael Harrington (D—Mass.), itemizing President Nixon's proposed budget cuts in domestic areas and how Massachusetts will be directly affected. Should Nixon's proposed cuts be approved by the Congress, more than 80 major Federal programs funded in Massachusetts would be terminated or drastically scaled down for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1973, according to the congressman's report.

Especially hard-hit would be programs funded under the Dept. of Health, Education, and Welfare--including Educational Opportunity Grants, National Defense Student Loans, and Work-Study grants.

Congratulations

Congratulations to the UMass basketball team for their victory over Missouri, 78-71, in the first round of the National Invitational Tournament, Saturday night. This is the first time that a UMass basketball team has won an NIT game. The Minutemen will face North Carolina Tuesday night, back at Madison Square Garden. Again, we wish the team "good luck".

Congratulations to Chancellor Randolph Bromery, who was named honorary president of the Black Scientists Society last Thursday night, in recognition of his achievement in the sciences and his commitment to black students. The Society is angled toward heightening the awareness in the black community of the need for black scientists, bringing more black students onto campus who plan to major in the sciences, and to help black science majors now on campus.

Congratulations to Brian Boyson and Joanne Reagan, Diane Goff and Barry Lyle. These two couples won this weekend's Dance Marathon, sponsored by fraternity Phi Mu Delta to raise money for the Muscular Dystrophy Association. Both couples danced for 52 hours (with short breaks), but more importantly, they raised a total of $1763. Phi Mu Delta has so far collected $4271 for the Muscular Dystrophy Association, a truly worthwhile effort.

Finally, congratulations to Alan Bruce Corwin, the winner of the First Annual Electronic Pinball Tournament. Alan had a grand total of 532,810 points. Second place was Dan Palerno with 524,910 points.

Freedom Of Opinion

It is obvious there is a struggle between the President and the Press. Speeches by Spiro Agnew, imprisonment of newsmen for failure to reveal news sources, and refusals to renew T.V. station licenses, have characterized the struggle. The severe and unprecedented attacks by the Administration are aimed at two targets, opinion and fact.

The Administration's view of the Press's opinion is clear. While dining with Harold Wilson, President Nixon suggested the first moon astronauts might find a few contaminated pieces of the moon and give them to the press. Nixon was joking, but the story reveals his attitude and relations with the press.

Nixon's top aid, Bob Haldeman, once grabbed a news columnist's hair from behind and yanked the fellow's head back against the seat. "Oh, pardon me," said Haldeman, "I thought it was a girl sitting there." This was in response to a column profile which cited Haldeman as "brusque" and "clinical" with a "crew cut that hasn't changed since the beginning of the cold war."

Polarization of this sort is now the rule between the press and the government. Constant pressure, in ways seen and unseen by leading government officials, has attempted to reshape the opinion to resemble the images seen through the prism of their own power. This pressure has "made us all edgy" said Richard Salant, president of NBC news. "We've thought about things we shouldn't think about."

The cause for anxiety is understandable. The Press is not supposed to see things from the Administration's point of view. The Press is the adversary, critic and watchdog of the government. Its purpose is to pass on information so voters can make correct political decisions about how and by whom power is to be exercised.

This brings us to the struggle over facts. Facts are the subject of the Pentagon Papers. Subpoenas to newsmen to appear before grand juries are issued to uncover facts. Senate committee investigations, at present, are fighting to pry facts out of an unwilling Executive.

Factual information, on which opinion is based, about how the country is run, is necessary for voters to arrive at correct political decisions. Today our society is more complex than in 1800 or even 1940. Government reaches closer to the individual, and there are more relevant facts for the voter to know. Apart from efforts to suppress and monopolize them, facts are buried in the multiple creases of our culture. Facts are a resource of political power. If this resource is in the hands of a few, we no longer have even a reasonable facsimile of a democracy.

The First Amendment has been utilized to establish the freedom to express opinion, but now it has another purpose before it. It must be utilized to establish for everyone the right to know. The right to know is a new need which has arisen to sustain a modern democracy.

A freedom to express opinion is worthless, unless we know the facts on which to base an opinion. We must acquire the right to know, be it here at UMass or at NBC, because the complexity of our society has made it possible for a government to seek old ends in new disguises. It can pretend it serves the people when in fact it serves itself. It can pretend to deal with the problem of access to the media when in fact it seeks to control it. It can make gestures to freedom of opinion while it chokes passage to the facts on which opinion is based.

A Newspaper's Function

If you've picked up The Boston Globe lately, then you're aware of the controversy surrounding the eight days of articles by the Globe Spotlight Team. The series, ending last week, illustrated the widespread bookmaking operation in Boston, and disclosed that some policemen were frequenting establishments where illegal gambling was conducted openly. The reports have produced suspensions in the police department, and charges by Boston Police Commissioner di Grazia that the series "was slanted and extremely unfair". The Policemen's Association has officially recommended a boycott of The Globe and its advertisers. The Globe has put itself in the precarious position of alienating Police Headquarters, where much of a reporters information is gathered. It has also invited comment on the functions of a newspaper, and this at a time when the rights of the press are under constant scrutiny in Congress. It prompts one to ask what the Globe's motives were, and what it hopes to accomplish by this latest expose.

The Globe has favored legalized gambling in Massachusetts for years, and it seems that it was attempting to dramatize the fact that even a policeman likes to place regular bets on the horses, and the "number", or whatever. This, of course, would demonstrate the hypocrisy of having laws on the books, (no pun intended), that even the police pay no attention to. On the other hand, what we have are accusations, supported by photographs, against policemen, for breaking the very laws that the Globe is trying to change. The Globe is, in short, playing the role of prosecutor, fully expecting some degree of disciplinary measures to be taken. If the original intent was an attack on the gambling laws, it has turned into an attack on those who break them. The epitome of hypocrisy!

Considering the broader question, is this the function of a newspaper? A privately owned company can do what it damn well pleases as long as it hurts no one else, and a newspaper should be allowed the same right. If investigations by a newspaper concerning violations of the law result in the prosecution of wrongdoers, then that is plainly a public service. But to prosecute, judge and serve sentence is to abuse the media, and becomes another case altogether. It oversteps its function of informing the people.

In these times of debate concerning a newsman's right to protect his sources, and the accusations of the press acting irresponsibly, it serves no good purpose, and certainly doesn't help our case, to have the Globe conducting business in the manner of the past week. The newspaper in question generally lives up to the expectations of the public, and usually presents its case with good, sound journalism. I feel that in this case, however, there is room to responsibly question its judgement.

Over-reacting In The Wrong Direction

To The Editor:

Reading Howard Bloom and Steve Ferber's article "Terrorism in the U.S." (Collegian, 9 March) prompts me to write in today. I am struck by several points of misinformation, particularly regarding the 1970 bombing incident of the Army Math Research Center, University of Wisconsin. The falsities are relatively minor, but not only do they make me somewhat skeptical of the authenticity of other information in the article, but also serve as an impetus for thought about the type of reaction this article and others like it stimulate.

"Terrorism in the U.S." and other articles in the paper, (e.g., Bob Estelle's writings), make me feel and see that our country's political motion rightward is not only confined to a major group of politicians, or to so-called "Middle America", but also inclues a den of former idealists -- a large portion of college students.

Only a few years ago many people, especially students, were looking for new alternative views; for different lifestyles, different modes of dress, different systems of education, different means of releasing and preventing frustration. People were looking for all these things, and more, the most idealistic new view of all - a different way of looking at other people - an empathetic, compassionate view of all mankind, an anvisagement of every man being free from restraint, external and internal, to do what he wanted most to do.

After approximately a decade of incredible freedom, a beginning of openness - if only a surface showing of honesty, love, and paradoxically violence, it seems that many people are now pointing a condescending, threatening, and, perhaps, guilt-ridden finger at particular points within the past ten years. Incidents of terrorism and pseudo-liberalism are being given major priority in views of recent history and more positive points are being overshadowed.

If terrorism and pseudo-liberalism are viewed as negatives in these recent times and viewed as overreaction to a new freedom, must, then, we forget all positive aspects of a leftward movement and overreact in another direction. Must we abort all actions of the 1960's and early '70's, sit back, throw up our hands, condemn the terrorism without looking for any root causes, and start a reactionary force that can be as bad as bombs - maybe worse?

Female Chauvinism

To The Editor:

In response to the gross generalities of female chauvinism expressed in the letters of Dianne Snyder and Libby Rich; I think it is necessary to point out that it takes a male to rape a female; and any enlightening female dialogue regarding the issue of rape certainly should be subject to the understanding of the male side of the species.

The generalities of Libby Rich express gross sexism in regards to how men "get their kicks", and questions their sincerity on the issue of rape.

It will take education of both sexes to reach a human understanding and not a cast iron chastity belt. Perhaps if men are educated as to the horrifying effects of rape, less rapes will occur.

I find it insulting to exclude all males because of fear of intimidation, rape over-reaction, and large scale paranoia.

The solution to the problems you delineate is not the exclusion of males; but to reach out and endow your brothers with an understanding of your problems. As it is there are too many walls between men and women; rape is a result of these sexual blockades.

Health Fee

To The Editor:

In regard to your article of March 14 concerning the Health Service's budget, I'm afraid there was a lack of communication between myself and the reporter. The fee increase mentioned is not for the next academic year but for the one after. (Sept. '74-May '75). The article went on to say that this increase was to defray costs of new services. The new services included a dentist, triage and public health nurse, a problem pregnancy counsellor, a mental health minority staff member and a new full-time physician. These services are being recommended for next year and do not reflect any increase in the student health fee. These services will be financed by the income derived from the additional 800 students attending the university next year. Future fee increases reflect the general rise in cost of living and the inclusion of an emergency dental care program only.

Weightlifting

To The Editor:

This past weekend, the National Collegiate Weightlifting Championships were held at York College in York, Penn. UMass was represented by but one lifter while three had qualified for the competition. This was both an unplanned and unnecessary occurence.

Olympic Weightlifting is not a recognized collegiate sport at UMass. This past year has brought about the informal formation of an Olympic Weightlifting team which has competed in several New England contests while representing UMass. When the national meet came around, it became apparent that individual performance took preference over team performance. This was the reason for our not being able to lift at this meet. While another lifter was driving down on Saturday morning, he would not take the time or trouble to leave a day earlier in order to get his teammates there in time for the earlier competition and save travel expenses. Therefore, we found it impossible to finance the trip ourselves and did not send our entries in before the deadline. It should be noted that prior to the deadline, we had gone to the Assistant Athletic Director, Mr. Robert O'Connell, for possible financial assistance from the school. In lieu of the short notice Mr. O'Connell had, he still gave us all the help he could financially. We are very thankful to Mr. O'Connell for taking the time to assist us.

This financing would have been enough had we been able to drive down with the other lifter, but this was not to be.

Third World Women's Role

By ANNE SAUNDERS

"Why aren't more Third World women actively participating in the women's movement?"

The question is one which the Women's Movement has not been able to answer. I would like to take this opportunity to state our position on this question both realistically and honestly. The answer is very simple. The political goals of each group are different. And the goals of the American's Women's Movement once achieved, can have very little effect on the conditions of life for Third World people, which are Third World Women's primary concern.

Better job positions and more governmental slots for women as an ideal are virtuous. But as a strategy for liberation of a people, no matter who the people are, they are disfunctional. Integration into the economic and political structures of America on a job level will not work towards anyones liberation. Black people in this country are a testimony to that. I would not hesitate to say that there is at least one "high-Ranking Black High Middlemanagement Official" in the majority of the diversified corporate structures of America. But the only change that bought about for our people is that now we can say we've got them. But what else? The same is true for our "High Ranking Gov't Aides" and our representatives throughout the nation's capitals.

The most that the American Women's Movement can hope to acquire in this society, without the power created by the economic strength which only the large corporations and holding companies process, are these high middlemanagement positions. We see no need to struggle for that; we've already got that. That Third World people need, the further integration by Third World people and/or women into the middlemanagement sectors of America can't give us.

Middlemanagement people are consumers of "High Quality" commodities, but they are consumers nonetheless, and as such their ultimate power is buying power. Consumer power has never and will never overpower the powers which can sell and/or control land and its resources, the powers which can decide to pay wages or not to pay wages. Consumer powers cannot stop invasions or the occupation of world or even neighborhood communities by the "armed forcers". The goals you seek will not secure you the power to decide that two of your middlemanagement people are not expendible, therefore you will pay the ransom. The power you seek will not allow you to protect yourselves, much less the Third Worlds people.

On the question of the Women's role, we Third World Women have our problems with our men but we realize that those problems are microscopic when viewed against the larger problems our men face in securing the minimal gains this country has to offer. When we leave our men, or when our men are forced to split from us, is when our problems INCREASE not DECREASE. Our homes and families not careers, are the focal point of our lives. We will not become engrossed in the myth of "individual careers" as the Zenith of a women's life. To do so would only threaten those things our men have worked so hard to secure, not only for himself but for us as well. We have a life-long positive bondage with our men, which if broken can destroy us as a people. Our role is maintenance of the family around which our lives are centered. Our role is clear. And the clarification of the role of Third World Women illuminates very clearly the contradictions between our role and how the American Women's Movement perceives its role (as it relates to men and the family.)

Then there is the question of tactics, which are a direct reflection of political posture. Third World Women, in viewing the goals of the American Women's movement, analytically cannot help but see the movement as acting from a position which can give them no strength, not even in numbers. A position in which we cannot, for the sake of our survival, tie our energies up in. The Women's movement is primarily a movement whose concerns are motivated by social conditions. Consequently the thrust of the women's organizations have been of a social nature.

While our problems do reflect their image on a social level for Third World people, the problems themselves are most manifest on a political/economic level-a level that the American Women's Movement has not dealt with or even addressed itself to seriously.

And last but not least Birth Control/Abortion. Third World Women, more than most, know each very well. We know the need for each very well. But we also know and feel the need to continue to recreate that which we know to be FOR REAL. HUMAN LIFE.

We understand that it is not large families that prevent us from faring well in America, but America. We also find it very frightening that if we go to the hospital for some cold cures you have to pay, but they'll take you in, keep you overnight, and feed you even, to stop the life of your child from beginning, FOR FREE. Now that's a mindblower. And we don't want any.

We don't want the things you find it necessary to have, therefore we cannot struggle under the same banner.

This is not to say that there will not be issues on which we will agree. There will be and there are. And as those tasks are laid before us, I am confident we will be able to deal with them, both effectively and harmoniously. But we Third World women together with our men, must pursue our own course of action.

Counseling Workshops Planned

The Central Area Counseling Center plans to add to its present support groups and workshops, which include a "woman's support group" and a "quit smoking support group."

With substantial participation, the center will branch out into the areas of "academics" and "drug information" in the next few weeks. Any interested student is encouraged to sign up for these workshops by calling (545)5-0894.

The Center is located in the north-end of the Gorman basement in room B-2 and is available to any student who feels a need for discussion and/or direction concerning any particular issue.

The staff of the center is composed of graduate students (masters or doctoral candidates) in counselor education or clinical psychology. The staff are available from 1 AM to 9 PM weekdays for individual counseling on a drop in or appointment basis. The Center can be reached by calling (545)5-0894 from on or off campus. After hours call Parny at (545)5-4544.

The members of the center wish to strongly emphasize their willingness and availability to all students and their hope for participation in the new workshops.

Men's Center Begun In Amherst

Area men's support groups have gotten together to start a men's center in Amherst. It's open Thursday nights from 7:30-10:00 and is located at the Amherst Community Resource Center in the Common School just off Main Street.

All men (straight, gay, bi, married, single, student, worker or whatever) are invited to come down and rap, discuss the situation and men's problems or form new support groups.

For more information, call 253-2591 (Resource Center).

The Friday night demonstration will be followed on Saturday and Sunday by a workshop on "Aikido: A Way of Centering and Energy Awareness."

Frager teaches a form of Aikido which stresses fluid movement, and blending with others rather than blocking an opponent. Films of a Japanese Aikido master will be shown at the Friday night demonstration.

Mental, spiritual, as well as physical harmony and concentration are involved in this method. Dance teachers, movement therapists, and educators concerned with body movement will be especially interested in the demonstration.

For details, call the New England Center at 549-0886.

Financial Aid Deadline Extended To Friday

Because of what the Financial Aid Office calls "a confusing picture" regarding the amount of state and federal funding for student aid programs, the deadline for applying for financial aid has been extended from March 1 to this Friday, March 23.

The office said that in addition to uncertainties over state and federal funds for both graduate and undergraduate aid, some graduate students may be affected by decreases in on-campus employment opportunities.

According to the office, all students who have "serious need" for aid are encouraged to consider application for financial assistance through the Financial Aid Office.

While funds are limited, the office says graduate students in need of aid are eligible for some types of financial aid, and all students will be assisted as far as funds permit.

Medicare Reports To Be Made Public

By JOHN STOWELL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Breaking a seven-day policy, the Social Security Administration announced Sunday it will make public in the future all new Medicare survey and investigative reports.

But the agency said earlier reports will remain confidential. This was a blow to proponents of cradle-to-grave health insurance legislation who have sought the reports on private carriers.

Until now, and over the protests of newsmen and congressmen, the reports have been deemed confidential under the 1939 Social Security Act.

New regulations will make available reports on deficiencies found in state surveys of hospitals, skilled nursing homes, home health agencies and independent laboratories' performance evaluations on carriers, intermediaries and state agencies; performance reports on providers; and the names of doctors and providers found to have overcharged or convicted of submitting false claims.

It includes contract-review reports on the 24 commercial health insurance companies, the National Association of Blue Shield Plans and affiliates of the Blue-Cross Association which pay Medicare claims and are reimbursed by the government.

A Blue Cross spokesman in Chicago said: "We have always been accountable to the public. We support the idea of disclosure of information about administration of any public programs including information about Medicare and our performance."

Disclosure applies only to reports completed after Jan. 31, Social Security said, and in each case subjects of reports or surveys will have 30 days to submit statements before they are released.

Deficiency surveys will be made public, generally beginning in May, at the agency's 1,000 local and district offices, a spokesman said.

Performance evaluations will be open for inspection at 10 regional offices and the Baltimore headquarters.

In the case of doctors and providers found by intermediaries to have charged excessively, the agency said, names will be released only after consultation with a professional medical society and after the person has had a chance to respond.

Registrar's Closed Weds.

Closing one day a week is now standard procedure for the Undergraduate Registrar's Office and the Graduate Admissions Office in order to allow the staff to process the increasing flood of paper work.

As it has for the past two spring semesters, the Undergraduate Registrar's Office will be closed on Wednesdays from March 7 to April 11. According to Ralph D. Jones, Registrar, the requests for transcripts, employment references and grade corrections every spring increases the traffic in the office to the extent that the records file can not be kept in order.

Closing the office for one day allows the staff to restore the files to working order for the four days the office is open.

The Graduate Admissions Office has closed on Friday for the past three semesters in order to process the estimated 15,000 applications received, and will continue to do so.

The number on the staff has remained the same for the past two years due to a lack of funds, although the work load has increased considerably. In an attempt to compensate for this, a night shift, comprised of part-time employees and those on the work-study program, now works from 12 p.m. to 8 p.m. every evening.

Psych. Dept. Sponsors Speaker

A Stafford University professor will speak at a Psychology Department colloquium, "The Theory of Cognition and Basic Academic Skills", tonight at 4 p.m. in Thompson 104.

Dr. Patrick Suppes, who has been at Stanford since 1950, is professor of philosophy, statistics and education and has published more than 150 articles and books on topics covering the range of all three disciplines.

Director of the Institute for Mathematical Studies in the Social Sciences at Stanford since 1959, he helped form it. His early work at the Institute was primarily in mathematical learning theory and decision theory. In 1963 he turned to computer-assisted instruction.

Prior to the colloquium there will be a coffee hour in 423 Tobin Hall at 3 p.m.

Motorcycle Club Holds Meeting

The UMass Motorcycle Club will be holding a meeting tonight in Campus Center Rm. 174 at 7. The meeting is open to all University motorcyclists. Plans for the rest of the semester will be discussed along with plans to fight the parking increase in the Campus Center garage. Following the meeting the club will open its spring workshop.

UMass Students Act On Wounded Knee

A group of UMass students are circulating a petition supporting 31 Indian persons indicted by the government at Wounded Knee, S.D.

The petitions will be sent to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Senator George S. McGovern of South Dakota, and President Richard M. Nixon.

A table will be set up in the Campus Center Concourse all week for persons who wish to express their support for the Indians indicted at Wounded Knee.

A group of militant Indians has held a trading post at Wounded Knee for several weeks, and the government has set up blockades around the post. More indictments are expected to be returned against the Indians, who are holding the fort to dramatize conditions suffered by American Indians.

Indian Dramas Presented

The Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities and the Fine UMass Council will present the American Indian Theater Ensemble Thursday, March 22, at 8 p.m.

This Third World Cultural Series program, to be presented at Bowker Auditorium, will include the two dramas, "Na Haaz Zan" and "Body Indian."

"Na Haaz Zan," by Navajo Robert Shortly, depicts a sequence of the three worlds—the black, the blue, and the golden—as the Navajos emerge into the security of their land.

In contrast, "Body Indian" by Kiowa-Delaware Hanay Geiogamah, is a comedy about an overnight Indian drinking party, which takes hold of the stereotype of the drunken Indian and probes its roots and its consequences on individual lives.

This event will be open to the public, without charge, with seating available on a first-come first-served basis, beginning at 7:15 p.m.

Free Tax Assistance

The Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program will assist, free of charge, all students and staff with their 1972 State and Federal Tax Forms. Suffolk Room of the Student Union, Mon.-Thurs., 6 a.m.-9 p.m., and Fri., 9 a.m.-5 p.m.

Avant-garde Zaj To Perform Here

Zaj, an avant-garde group from Spain, visits here Thursday, March 15, and Friday, March 16, for a workshop and a performance, under the auspices of the Fine Arts Council. Members of the group are Juan Hidalgo, Esther Ferrer, and Walter Marchetti, all from Madrid and followers of John Cage and Marcel Duchamp.

Although they are all musicians, their imagery is not confined to music. Everything may become part of a performance: noises, gestures, movements, objects and the audience itself.

Zaj will perform in Mahar Auditorium at 8 p.m. Friday evening, and tickets are $1 for UMass undergraduates and $1.50 for all others. Tickets may be obtained by contacting the University's Fine Arts Council, 125 Herter Hall, Amherst, until 4 p.m. Friday.

UMass Presents An Evening Of Opera

The University music department will present soprano Dorothy Ornest in an evening of "Opera and Song," Wednesday, March 21.

The recital will begin at 8:30 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, and Ms. Ornest will be accompanied by Charles Fussell. Both are members of the UMass music faculty.

The dramatic program scheduled for March 21 will include "Nozze di Figaro," Handel's "Julius Caesar," and selections from "Il Travatore" by Verdie. Songs by Hugo Wolf and Johannes Brahams, and Purcell's "Aria of the Blessed Virgin," are also on the program. The recital is part of the UMass music department Faculty Recital Series.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

By SYDNEY OMARR

During a recent meeting with singer Gisele MacKenzie, the lovely Capricorn attempted to guess my zodiacal sign. She said, "sydney Omarr, you are a Virgo!" She was wrong. But Gisele is knowledgeable, intelligent and lively and she usually is right in what she says and does. When I told her my sign, she said, "You're really something." I took that as a compliment.

UCLA, Providence Highlight Weekend Tournament Play

By HAL BOCK
Associated Press Sports Writer

It's two down, two to go for UCLA's defending champions as they pursue a seventh consecutive National Collegiate Athletic Association basketball championship.

Indiana gets the next shot at the ranked Bruins in the NCAA semifinals Saturday in St. Louis. The other semifinal match sends Providence against Memphis State.

All four were quarter-final winners Saturday. UCLA won the Western title 54-39 over San Francisco, Indiana took the Mideast crown 72-65 over Kentucky, Providence whipped Maryland 103-89 for the Eastern championship and Memphis State took the Midwest title, defeating Kansas State 92-72.

Meanwhile, the National Invitation Tournament got underway in New York with Notre Dame, Louisville, Massachusetts and North Carolina moving into the quarter-finals with first round victories.

Notre Dame, celebrating St. Patrick's Day by wearing green sneakers, nipped Southern California 69-65, Louisville defeated American University 97-84, Massachusetts topped Missouri 78-71 and North Crolina swamped Oral Roberts 82-65.

UCLA got a big boost from its bench to overcome a seven-point San Francisco lead and defeated the stubborn Dons.

Reserves Tommy Curtis and Dave Meyers sparked the Bruins' 73rd straight victory. But don't look for the subs to start against Indiana.

"I plan to start my regular lineup," said Coach John Wooden. "I don't base my starting lineup on a momentary performance in a single game but rather on a year-long progression of practices and games."

Curtis scored 12 points on outside shots that ignited UCLA to its victory. Afterwards, losing Coach Bob Gaillard of San Francisco had some advice for Indiana.

"It's suicide to run with the Bruins," said Gaillard. "I believe to beat UCLA you must have a low-scoring game with the winner in the 50s. If you come in with the idea of scoring 60 or more, they will beat you."

Indiana, ranked sixth nationally, blew a 13-point halftime lead but came back to eliminate Kentucky behind the scoring of Steve Downing and the ball-handling of freshman Quinn Buckner.

Larry Finch poured in 32 points as Memphis State qualified for its first trip to the semifinals by eliminating Kansas State.

Providence got 30 points from Ernie DiGregorio and 24 from Kevin Slacom to wipe out Maryland. DiGregorio hit on 14 of 21 shots from the field and had five assists before fouling out as the Friars won their 17th consecutive game.

In NCAA consolation games, Syracuse nipped Pennsylvania 69-68, Long Beach State topped Arizona State 84-80, South Carolina stopped Southwestern Louisiana 90-85 and Marquette whipped Austin Peay 88-73.

Celts Top KC-Omaha; Clinch Division

BOSTON (AP)—Although his Celtics wrapped up the National Basketball Association's Atlantic Division by defeating Kansas City-Omaha 109-105, Coach Tom Heinsohn is looking beyond the pennant flag.

"That's step one," Heinsohn said after the game Sunday. "Step two is to beat out Los Angeles, and step three is to win the championship."

The Celtics have a season mark of 61-14, while Los Angeles of the Western Division is 55-20. One more Celtic victory or a Lakers' loss will assure Boston of at least a tie for the most games won this year.

Besides extra money, that mark is important for a playoff-bound team. Should a playoff series go the full seven games, the team with the best record gets home court advantage for the final game.

"We want all possible advantage in the playoffs," Heinsohn said.

The Boston coach had high praise for Kansas City-Omaha and the sparking play of the games' top scorer, Nate Archibald.

"They really hung in there," Heinsohn said. "We were never able to really bust it open. Then the kid Archibald got hot. We did as good a job as you can do on Archibald."

Besides firing in 35 points, Archibald had 16 assists. The NBA's leading scorer was 12 for 28 from the floor.

"This is not the end," Heinsohn said of the victory, "This is just the start of something." Although they were behind by as much as 19 points in the first half, the Kings exploded in the third period behind the shooting of Archibald, who had 17 of his 35 points in that period.

With eight minutes left, Nate Williams sank a free throw to tie the game at 87-87. The two teams then traded baskets until Cowens gave Boston the lead for good.

After Cowens made his tie-breaking shot, Archibald raced downcourt but missed a driving layup. Boston brought the ball back and Paul Silas tapped in a Jo Jo White shot, making the score 107-103 with 52 seconds left. John Havlicek sank two free throws for the final Celtics' points, and Williams tallied for the Kings' final score.

Boston led at the half 59-44, but Kansas City had pulled to within 83-78 at the end of three periods.

Paul Silas was a big man for the Celtics, pulling down 21 rebounds and adding 24 points. Havlicek had 28 and White contributed 26.

Williams 25 for the Kings and Ron Riley added 20.

Women Gymnasts Top Southern Conn.

By MDC STAFF

On Saturday afternoon in New Haven, Conn., the women's varsity gymnastics team won its final dual meet of the season by upending Southern Connecticut State College 99.55 to 94.3. The Eastern Championship bound UMass women looked very impressive and gave a true team effort in compiling their second highest meet score of the season.

The floor exercise event, as usual, was dominated by UMass. Anne Vexler was outstanding and earned herself a very respectable first place finish. A So. Conn. performer was able to steal second place, but Jeannine Burger, back in action after an injury sidelined her last week, snatched the third spot. Margie Combs tumbled high and nailed down the fourth slot. Thanne Poth, in her first routing in some time, looked good as she gave a solid backup performance.

The vaulting event held few surprises, other than the lack of landing mats and the substitution of sandbags in their place. Jeannine Burger soared to first place with a nice yamashita vault, and teammate Margie Combs was .05 behind her, with her version of the same vault. Cathy Wiggins of So. Conn. was third and Anne Vexler, vaulting for the first time since November 1970, did a straddled yamashita and finished in fourth place. Heidi Armstrong, Candy Gross, and Marion Kulick all did solid vaults and demonstrated the kind of depth that the UMass team does possess.

On the balance beam the team showed tremendous improvement and scored its highest event total for that event this season. Anne Vexler finally got it together and executed a solid routine that scored 8.80 and won first place. Polly Dellagoia of So. Conn. was second, and Jeannine Burger was steady enough to claim third. Heidi Armstrong, on the day before her birthday, had her best performance ever and took over the fourth spot, edging out Combs and Poth.

The uneven bars were somewhat of a fluke. The UMass team has not been beaten on the bars this year and still remain so, despite the outmoded apparatus So. Conn. put on the floor, in place of a set of regulation bars. Although most of the UMass performers had to chop their high calibre routines due to the hinderance presented by the bars, Jeannine Burger controlled herself and took first place. Heidi Armstrong did her best routing ever and finished second. Anne Vexler held on and took third.

In the all-around competition Anne Vexler captured top honors in her best, and only, performance for UMass. Anne competed in the all-around in high school, but up until this week had not been able to make a varsity spot. Jeannine Burger wasn't far behind Anne, and Margie Combs followed Jeannine. The highlight of the meet was the team effort, moreso than the efforts of any one individual. The team's performance came at a late point in the season but is encouraging with the upcoming championship meets.

'Red' on UMass

Red Auerbach, general manager of the Boston Celtics, called the Minutemen's 78-71 victory over Missouri Saturday, a "fine team effort."

"I couldn't pick out any one outstanding player," he said," everyone played well. This is a very well coached team."

Auerbach and Boston Celtic coach Tom Heinsohn were scouting players at the NIT at Madison Square Gardens.

When asked if he saw any pro prospects on the UMass team, he said he did, but refused to give any hints as to whom he or they might be.

"How about Tom McLaughlin? he replied, "Maybe."

Bruins, 7-1

BOSTON (AP) - Johnny Bucyk scored twice as the Boston Bruins exploded for five goals in the second period and went on to trounce the Atlanta Flames 7-1 in National Hockey League action sunday night.

Boston spotted Atlanta a 1-0 first period lead when Curt Bennett flipped in a short goal past Boston net-minder Jacques Plante.

Bucyk came back after intermission and scored his first goal of the period, his 36th of the year, when he drove in on goalie Dave Bouchard and poked home the puck.

Rookie Gregg Sheppard slapped home a 10-footer at 10:34, and Phil Esposito got his 48th of the season at 14:12 on a pass in front of the net from Ken Hodge.

Derek Sanderson got a short-handed goal at 16:20 of the second period after Sheppard had two shots in a row blocked by Bouchard. Bucyk got his second goal of the period in a 2-1-1 situation after taking a pass from Espotito in front of the net.

Bobby Orr scored at 12:11 of the third period when he came blazing down the ice, picked up a pass from Espotito at the blue line, skated up to Bouchard and flipped the puck into the left corner of the net.

Hodge had Boston's final score at 18:02, with Bucyk and Espotito giving assists.

The City Never Sleeps

By MARTY KELLEY

Gallagher's 33 Club—It was unusually windy for 3 a.m. in the city that never sleeps. However, only the alarming rush on the non-stop Yellow Cabbies screaming past the corner of the Gallagher's Club on 33rd Street could be heard. The cluttered litter in the impersonal gutter left a drunken impression of the morning after . . . But actually it was a continuation of the night after . . . A night never to be forgotten . . . Or to be relived..

For it was at Madison Square Garden, the mecca of Eastern basketball, on the border of emotionalinsanity, behind the stupor of St. Patrick, and in front of 6,000 . . . Massachusetts advanced. And for the hours after, living just had another meaning . . . Especially if you were in Jack's Corner, reacted to the Cow Bell, or just plain hailed the Minutemen . . . If you fit into all three, you definitely weren't alone . . . especially at McAnn's, the Blarney Rock, or Gallagher's.

It was a night you didn't mind sleeping 18 in a room at the McAlpine. The line outside McAnn's was five deep. There was good reason. For even if you studied three hours a day and went to Goodell twice on Saturday night for a month, stopping Missouri at the Garden was for you . . . It was for everyone. It will never be forgotten . . . As an individual event, if may not be equalled.

And as the Viking Warrior has but one dying request, to be buried in the sea . . . So true with captain Tom McLaughlin. Mac came back to New York City to calmly challenge the foul line at the Garden and bury Missouri with 4 straight free throws that set the stage for a rhapsody of love never before witnessed in an NIT first round game . . . The Irish cops on the endline will attest to that . . .

For it was they who had the unenviable task of restraining the UMass mob. With the final buzzer came the long awaited Garden explosion. The cops simply watched. They had to. And as the loyalists stormed the court and the youthful Minutemen who denied the "Bookies" 13 point epitaph, one could sense that the celebration would stagger on rather late . . . And it did . . . But the memory of the Missouri will stagger in infamy . . .

The win can't be explained in words. Let it be personified in the faces of those who were there, for it was "they" who fought the Irish bartenders till the city finally quieted. They came in hordes, by vans, in buses, by foot and by thumb, to somehow grab a bit of emotion . . . And there was plenty to go around . . .

And somehow, I just have to say that those who were there did it up right. They watched a team that was chided by the Louisville aggregation 'where's your Erving now, Minutemen' as they filed out of the Statler Hilton for the game, prove to not only their school but to themselves that they should be recognized. And there's no better source of notoriety than a quarterfinal tapoff with North Carolina in 36th Annual National Invitational Tournament at a place that over the years, we're starting to know well . . .

Yeah, beers at Gallagher's were a dollar and the line to get in was more obnoxious than the price . . . But yet everybody was loose that night. They had to be. So you didn't watch your wallet, the clock, or the path in front of you. You only knew that on that night the Minutemen made you winners and God, you wish them the best against the Tar Heels of North Carolina who slapped the Redmen (90-49 two years ago in the first round of the NIT) tomorrow night . . . And if Chancellor Bromery calls off classes Wednesday morning, you won't think twice . . .

The maids at the McAlpine have put her back in shape . . . The street cleaner went overtime at the corner of Gallagher's, McAnn's opened on schedule this morning, but no one will maintain the Missouri memory . . .

'74 Financial Aid Plan 'Hazy'

By BILL DENSMORE

The type of federal scholarship and loan aid available for college students across the nation in fiscal '74 is still "very hazy" according to Acting Director of Financial Aid Lynn E. Santner.

But Santner says "there's no question that money will be available but in what form and which programs no one can say."

"The battle between the President and Congress has a lot to do with this," Santner said yesterday, adding that "as of a week or ten days ago nothing was being leaked out of Congress" about the progress of various higher education financial bills.

According to Santner, federal student assistance totalled $1.4 billion nationwide in 1972-73, and if HEW proposals are fully funded for the coming fiscal year, the total outlay will be about $1.5 billion, with more money being channeled into low-cost loans instead of out-and-out gifts.

In fiscal 1973 UMass-Amherst netted $1.5 million of the total federal outlay, and added another $200,000 of its own funds allowing it to dispense about $1.7 million in scholarship aid to 20% of the campus student body, according to Santner.

And, he says what is becoming a familiar pattern of Presidential veto-Congressional override-Executive impoundment may well await any Senate or House action on the fiscal '74 student loan and scholarship proposals.

He says that the program is now being considered by the Education and Appropriations subcommittees of both bodies, and should reach the floor at any time.

Gerald A. Miller, also of the University financial aid office, said yesterday that a new aid structure being proposed at the federal level for fiscal '74 will be called the Basic Opportunity Grant (BOG) program and will be "aimed at students basically from low income families."

Miller explained that most of the upcoming legislation hinges on the funding success or failure of BOG.

"Some schools are going to get out way back in funds," he said yesterday, adding that "I'm not sure what's going to happen here."

The BOG set-up will award scholarship funds on the basis of family need. Applicant's parents will be required to fill out a confidential financial questionnaire which will be evaluated by a computerized system in New Jersey run by the College Scholarship Service.

The computer will suggest a "parents contribution" towards the applicant's total cost for a school year - the amount that the student's family can reasonably be expected to pay, considering factors such as family size, other children in college and usable income.

Under the proposed BOG system a student would then be awarded a scholarship amount equal to half the cost of attending UMass (books, supplies, food included) minus the "parent's contribution".

For instance, if the BOG program had been running this year, a student whose parents could afford to contribute $200 towards his education would have ended up paying a two-semester total bill of $1,400 this year.

Of a total bill (the financial aid office uses the term "budget" to refer to the total yearly cost of attending UMass) of $2,400, $200 would be paid by the family, and the federal government would absorb $1,000 through BOG.

The proposed legislation now before Congress would expand the Work-Study Program according to Miller, because work-study has been popular with students.

Under work-study scholarship recipients are placed in a 15-hour/week job for which they are paid in cash. Then the financial aid office figures the amount a student is expected to earn into their total stipend and awards a correspondingly smaller amount of free money.

Slated to be eliminated by the proposed legislation, according to Miller, is the National Direct Student Loan Program (NDSL) formerly known as national defense loans.

While there is no way of telling what Congress will appropriate for next year figures detailing the piece of the pie that UMass-Amherst got last year are available, courtesy of the Financial Aid office.

The NDSL program drew $300,000; while the workstudy program got $500,000. An Educational Opportunities Grant Program spent $590,000 on student scholarships. And nursing loans and scholarships amounted to $89,000 last year.

Finally, an estimated $3.0 million in low interest loans are distributed by private banks operating by arrangement with the federal government.

Under the private bank loan procedure, the student borrows at 7% simple interest. Simple interest is compounded only once, thus on a principal of $100 a student would pay only $7. What's more the federal government will pay all interest due on the loan as long as a student is attending college.

The private loans will be repayable in up to 10 years and may be as large as $2500 per year.

Gil Salk, coordinator of the draft counseling program spoke before the Graduate Senate last night concerning draft counseling services on campus. He said the selective service would continue to function and people would still have to register. Salk requested $400 from the body, but was only granted $200. After his request was amended Grad Senator Mike Curran suggested $200 be granted to the program now and the rest of the monies could be submitted for approval in the fall of 1973. Town Gives Frat Flak

By ED FOGARTY

The Zeta Nu Fraternity caught flak at last nights Selectmen Meeting for complaints received for "conditions" left after a last Friday night party.

Allen Torrey, Town Manager, said the complaint was lodged by a resident of Amherst Center about the beer cans left on the property. "I went down there to look myself and conditions were very bad", said Torrey.

In discussion the Selectmen said they had never had a problem before and they suspected that it was connected with the eighteen year old drinking age. Selectman Michael Sullivan felt that the fraternities were trying to "build up business' by attracting young drinkers.

Torrey said he wished that they "would please pick up the cans".

The Selectmen announced that this Thursday evening they will be meeting with UMass Administrators to discuss one-day beer licenses. The one-day beer license is the license fraternities and other University organizations use to supply beer at parties.

One of the issues to be resolved is to get the University to enforce the licensing. Up until now the University has generally ignored licensing procedure by ignoring if the organization has a license or not, according to one of the Selectmen.

The Selectmen resolved to send Zeta Nu a letter informing them that "In the future we would expect responsible behavior".

Torrey also spoke on the sewage problems in Amherst and pointed out that they are on the way to being solved.

Torrey spoke in reaction to a Feb. 16 letter from the Mass. Water Pollution Board. The letter said that no further sewage extensions would be allowed in Amherst until the West Street overflowing is solved and final plans for the secondary sewage treatment plant are drawn.

The ban on extensions is a major block to entrepreneurs in Amherst.

Torrey said that final plans for the treatment plant are expected to be signed this week. He added that the problem on west Street Pumping Station is under investigation. Torrey felt that the difficulties are caused by an electrical failure, and that it is probably a "sporadic condition" due to an unusual amount of water.

Plans for the Stanley Street Pumping Station have been submitted to the State Water Pollution Board, and Torrey said he expects the Station to be repaired soon. The Stanley Street Station overflows raw sewage into the Amherst Bird Sanctuary at the present time.

In other business, James King, spokesman for the Cable Communications Committee, presented to the Selectmen a short term recommendation report. The Committee recommended that the final responsibility to channel 8 (the town's cable station) rest "with the operator".

King pointed out that in the future Hampshire College will gain the capabilities for cable transmission.

At the present time only the Amherst Junior High School has the facilities for transmission.

"Because the cable system is limited the school system has accepted responsibility by default", said Merle Howes, Selectman.

A spokesman for Hampshire College said they may have the facilities within 60-90 days for transmission. Hampshire College is planning to build a microwave transmitter.

John Mueller, vice-president of the Graduate Senate and assistant director of the Rhetoric Department said at last night's Graduate Senate meeting that the Rhetoric Department would pay grad students $3,400 a semester to teach in the Rhetoric program.

Honors Program Revisions Affirmed

By AVIS YUNI

The new University Honors Program affirmed by the University Faculty Senate at the end of last semester calls for open eligibility, new requirements for remaining in the program, a redefinition of the Honors course and added credit for them, and new requirements for graduating with higher honors beginning with the class of 1977.

The core of the new Honors Program is a redefinition of the Honors Course. Beginning with the 1973 fall term, Honors Courses will be four credit departmental courses formed by affiliating a departmental or three credit course with an Honors one credit colloquium.

This addition of an extra credit above the normal three implies that such a course will demand more time from both the student and faculty member. This extra time need not necessarily take the form of an extra or fourth class meeting.

The intention is to have a wide variety of options open to a department that wishes to offer Honors work so the particular needs of that department and its student might best be served.

In a notice concerning the new program, the Honors Office listed some suggested optional forms that the Honors Course might take. These include a wide range of options for Honors work at different levels: introductory (possibly non-major), middle range and advanced.

In all options, the Honors Office stated that it is trying to achieve a group of students who work together at a higher level than is normally possible with the general student body at UMass.

Honors credit would be given for sustained higher level work rather than for a single project over and above normal class work.

Students taking Honors courses will be graded against the declared standards of the course and not against the work of the other students. In addition to receiving a grade, professors teaching Honors Courses will be asked to submit a detailed academic evaluation of each student's work.

These evaluations will augment the relatively inflexible letter grades and provide students with personalized examinations of their work. Because of this important individualized work, Honors Courses will be limited to twenty students.

Each department will be asked to designate an "Honors Coordinator" who would assign preceptors to Commonwealth Scholars and oversee the preceptorial system in his department.

He would direct the Departmental Honors Program and act as liaison between the Honors Office and his department in addition to negotiating the affiliation of the Honors Colloquia with departmental courses.

The Honors Council which will remain a sub-committee of Academic Matters will weigh the merits of each course presented by a department and grant or deny affiliation, on the basis of the proposed course's ability to offer Honors level of work.

Beginning with the class of 1977, and optional to members of graduating classes before that time, no student may graduate Magna Cum Laude or Summa Cum Laude without taking departmental honors. The level of graduating honors for any student who achieves a degree higher than Cum Laude will be determined by the student's department.

The University Honors Council strongly recommended that a department offer two different roads to higher honors - a thesis and a non-thesis route. The Council urged that an Outreach project suitably defined and executed be weighted equal to the more traditionally academic thesis under the thesis option.

Under either option the departments may include other requirements unique to their own disciplines.

The Honors office would like to see all departments make some provision for teaching some Honors work for freshmen Commonwealth Scholars and freshman who are potential majors within that department.

They stated one enormous advantage of the new Program is that many more Honors Courses may be offered beginning in fall 1973 and that taking Honors Courses in one's major would be much easier.

It is hoped that many more preceptors will be available in each department for Honors students under this new system.

It is also hoped that student majoring in a discipline will be able to find courses in that discipline at all levels which offer him the opportunity to do honors work and integrate them into a meaningful program which will culminate in his senior year in some form of individualized work.

Students admitted during summer 1972 or subsequently must abide by all rules of the new program while Honors students admitted prior to that must fulfill only those requirements that existed at that time.

IRS Chief Nominated

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Nixon nominated a prominent Cincinnati tax lawyer, Donald C. Alexander, Monday as the new chief of the Internal Revenue Service.

Nixon also made several other high-level appointments, including Donald E. Santarelli, a 35-year-old associate deputy attorney general, as head of the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration.

As the White House disclosed the appointments, it was learned that a top government banking job soon will be open. William B. Camp, comptroller of the currency since 1966, plans to resign for health reasons.

Alexander's appointment was widely expected. The 51-year-old Republican has served the administration previously as a consultant for the treasury department.

'Eimatai' On Sale Today

Eimatai, a Jewish newspaper serving western Massachusetts and published by the Five-College Jewish Collective through the facilities of N'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation, will go on sale tomorrow. Copies of the first issue will be available for ten cents at a table in the Campus Center Concourse.

The newspaper is an outgrowth of recent activities by the Collective to stimulate Jewish consciousness and community involvement through communication of ideas, events, and volunteer-project opportunities. The name "Eimatai" is a Hebrew word meaning "when" and was taken from a famous maxim used 2,000 years ago—"If not now, when?" In the Collective's words, being Jewish is more than just an accident of birth, and for those who want to do something about it, the time to begin is now.

Eimatai is a member of the national Jewish Student Press Service. Coverage is world-wide and includes several locations in Israel and the Middle East. Circulation will begin at 5,000. Eimatai will be sold in Amherst, Northampton, and Springfield, as well as the Campus Center.

Eimatai will be printing letters to the editor as well as original contributions. These should be submitted typed, double-spaced, and sixty characters wide to room 420 of the Student Union. There are many staff positions open to people interested in either joining the Collective, working as a volunteer or advertising representative.

For further information call Bea at 6-8110 or Isaac at 6-6976 or Jim 6-9942. The office number is 545-2526.

BDIC Sessions End

By DENNY MATTEAU

BDIC is wrapping up a three week series of informal receptions for students.

BDIC—Bachelor's Degree with Individual Concentration—will have had a total of 12 afternoon sessions by Thursday, the day of the concluding event.

Under the direction of Dr. Arthur F. Kinney of the English Department, BDIC allows students to negotiate academic majors not otherwise available at the university. The students can string together courses from various departments for such majors as photography and cultural studies.

The idea behind the receptions is to bring together academic sponsors and students "who wish to talk more about the academic possibilities available to the university," Dr. Kinney said.

Dr. Kinney has been the director of BDIC since its inception as an experiment in higher education in May 1970. In May, 1972, the program had shown itself to be valuable and was endorsed by the Board of Trustees.

Advocates explained that BDIC's value to the university community lies in the fact that it facilitates independent study at the initiative of the student, and it allows the University to watch burgeoning interests and to assess the value of these interests in instituting new majors, or modifying old ones.

Dr. Kinney explained the role of BDIC: "We can spot new trends in combinations of resources at the university . . . either because faculty are calling us with suggestions, or because students' interests seem to be clustering. We can watch these trends, see what facilities we have, and gather all the interested people together in a kind of cooperative . . . If the trend continues, and grows, we suggest the establishment of a separate major. If it diminishes, those students still interested can continue their studies within BDIC."

The reaction of students has been generally enthusiastic, although some possible improvement have been suggested. Tom Crol, who is working in psychology and educational mass communications, said, "BDIC is essentially a clearing house. You motivate yourself, develop yourself, and BDIC helps direct you, a little."

Students are admitted to BDIC through a system of interviews and proposals. Generally speaking, a student who has at least four semesters ahead of him must draw a proposal outlining the courses he intends to take, stating his goal and suggesting fieldwork possibilities, if there are any. He must find a faculty member to sponsor him. The sponsor should be somebody who has knowledge of the student's intended field and an active interest in supervising the student's work. Both the student and the sponsor are interviewed by the BDIC staff. BDIC is in Blaisdell House, a farmhouse behind Thompson Tower. Once admitted into the program, the student must submit a midterm and end-of-term report for at least the first two semesters.

Draft Counseling Funded

By LARRY CARPMAN

The Graduate Student Senate voted last night to appropriate $200 for the continuation of the draft counseling program.

Gil Salk, coordinator of the program, said, "the selective service will keep functioning whether the draft continues or not. People will still have to register."

Salk's original motion called for an appropriation of $400. The motion was amended by Senator Mike Curran who suggested $200 be granted now and that the request for the additional money be submitted again in the fall.

In other action, the senate voted to table a motion to renew Attorney for Students Richard Howland's contract. Howland's contract as lawyer for both the undergraduate and graduate students expires June 1st 1973 and the Undergraduate Senate has already renewed the contract.

The Senate allocated $160 to the Graduate Environmental Engineering Association for mailing and office expenses. The original motion called for $200 to be supplied for one year. The appropriation granted is until October 1973. A new request for the remaining $40 will be made in the fall.

In other business the Senate heard from Javed R. Chaudhri, a senator from the Anthropology Department, who spoke against university copyrighting of theses and disertations.

"Theses automatically become copyrighted by the University," he said. Students have no control over publication of their material. Publication should be restricted because some papers deal in sensitive areas such as Viet Nam and marijuana."

President Veda Ross said that the copyrighting issue had come up before and that a copyrighting service was discussed several times. "This is not a new question," said Ross, "and that is what is important."

In a final announcement John Mueller, vice-president of the Graduate Senate and assistant director of the Rhetoric Department, said the Rhetoric Department is looking for "good graduate students to teach the rhetoric program."

A teacher in the Rhetoric program earns $3400 for teaching one section of 3 hours a week for one semester. Nomination papers can be submitted to the Rhetoric Department.

Guards Ordered Back To Work

BOSTON (AP) - State Supreme Court Judge Edward F. Kennessey Monday ordered striking guards at Walpole State Prison to return to work immediately.

Hennessey acted on a request by Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn after Gov. Francis W. Sargent had declared he saw "no real progress made in negotiations between correction officers and the administration."

While Sargent had suggested the injunction take effect at 9 a.m. Tuesday morning-giving an opportunity for a negotiated settlement in the meantime-the order sought and received by Quinn took effect immediately.

Quinn said his office would try to notify officers who would normally report for work at 11 p.m. Monday that they should show up as scheduled. he said that if he were physically unable to notify them, he would instead seek to have the 7 a.m. shift report Tuesday.

Hennessey's order had the effect of lifting the five-day suspensions imposed on 120 striking guards who walked out last Wednesday.

But it left unchanged the possibility that striking guards could be fired following hearings which are scheduled to begin Thursday.

Correction Commissioner John O. Boone told the court Monday, "It is my intention to discharge."

"The case of a work stoppage has been proven in crystal clear fashion," Hennessey said in issuing the back-to-work order. He told officials of the guards' union to warn members of the consequences of refusing to obey the court order.

Witnesses for the officers' union unsuccessfully sought to argue at the court hearing that negotiations had not broken off and that guards had walked out in fear of their lives. But Hennessey said the only issue before him was whether there was an illegal strike or work stoppage.

Earlier, in announcing that he was asking Quinn to seek the court order, Sargent said there was still time for a negotiated settlement.

Human Services Secretary Peter C. Goldmark Jr. met with Howard V. Doyle, president of the labor council that includes the guards' union, for about an hour Monday but apparently broke off negotiations to confer with Sargent before the governor announced he would ask for an injunction.

Puffton Receives Survey Results

Fifty-nine replies accounting for 117 people were received by the Amherst Rape Crisis Committee in a survey conducted of Puffton Village. Five hundred questionnaires were sent out to residents of Puffton village to determine how many people living in Puffton felt threatened under their present living conditions because of recent thefts, rapes and other crimes.

The residents were asked to categorize the conditions of Puffton as adequate, inadequate or useless.

Four residents said that lighting of roads and sidewalks was adequate, while 62 persons said it was inadequate or useless.

Twelve persons said that the locks on doors were adequate; 46 said they were inadequate or useless.

Sixteen residents said window locks were adequate, and 39 said they were useless.

Fourty-five residents said police patrols, especially at night and during vacation were inadequate.

Nineteen persons said they had complained about door and window locks, 29 said they had not. Seventeen of those complaining to Puffton authorities said they hhad received no results.

Fourteen persons said they had seen a "Peeping Tom", one had seen an exhibitionist, one said they had been robbed, and one said they had been raped. Only eight persons said they had reported these incidents to Puffton or the police.

Fifty-two people said that improvements were needed for brighter outdoor lighting, better door locks and more secure windows.

Wounded Knee Demands Sioux Emissary

WOUNDED KNEE, S.D. (AP) - Militant Indians proposed Monday that the White House appoint a special emissary from the Sioux people to people to negotiate a mutually agreeable settlement of the Wounded Knee siege.

Russell Means, a leader of the American Indian Movement AIM, said the proposal had been delivered to the White House and developed for President Nixon. He did not elaborate further on how the plan was delivered.

A point in the Indians' counterproposal calls for the emissary to negotiate the settlement within 72 hours after his appointment, Means said.

The government had presented the Indians what Asst. U.S. Atty. Gen. Harlington Wood called their best offer Saturday. That proposal included meetings between government officials and AIM leaders at a neutral site in Sioux Falls, S.D. Indian leaders at Wounded Knee said the government offer amounted to total surrender.

Government and Indian security roadblocks remained Monday on the roads leading into Wounded Knee. Medical officials, some government representatives and newsmen were granted passage to and from the village.

Authorities reported Monday that no incidents had occurred since an exchange of shots Saturday night.

Customs Stop Englebert

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) - A sizable delegation met British pop singer Engelbert Humperdinck when he arrived at the airport here for a few days vacation. But it wasn't exactly a welcoming committee-nor welcome.

Customs officials called in police, after discovering a variety of pills and capsules in Humperdinck's luggage. They turned out to be tranquilizers, vitamin pills and other forms of legal medicine.

POWs Back Home

"In Dignity And Honor"

By JEANNINE YEOMANS
Associated Press Writer

Twenty-six liberated Americans returned to their homeland Monday, including the longest-held Vietnam war prisoner whose 9-year-old son was born the day after he was captured.

Army Maj. Floyd J. Thompson, 36, said Monday he was happy President Nixon had "the courage to bring us back in dignity and hope so that all was not in vain."

Thompson, a prisoner just two weeks short of nine years, commented after arriving at the Army's Valley Forge General Hospital outside Philadelphia.

Thompson, wearing the dress uniform of the Green Berets and holding a small American flag, said, "Having sometime who works is a full responsibility."

Thompson's wife, Kyes, waited for him Monday afternoon in the prisoner of the hospital ward where the returning POWs will be given a complete medical check-up.

The Army brought Thompson and four other soldiers in medical helicopters from McGuire Air Base in nearby New Jersey. A Civil Reflifter hospital 20 that flew the POWs to Britain from Travis Air Force Base, Calif.

Maje Floyd R. Hallett, a physician from Danville, Va., said, "This is absolutely the happiest moment in my life. I am so happy it is beyond words to my mind description. It's great to be back to uniform and to be standing on the soil of the United States. I love it very much."

When Hallett jumped off the chopper and saw his wife Isabelle, he grabbed her in a bear hug and lifted her off the ground.

Nixon Cuts Ed. Aid To Disadvantaged

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) The Nixon administration spelled out a new federal education revenue sharing proposal Monday it said would cut off aid for about 1.1 million disadvantaged students but give local districts the decision on how to spend their federal school money.

The plan immediately ran into heavy fire from Democrats and some Republicans on the House Education Committee, to which it was presented.

Caspar W. Weinberger, the new secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, said the proposal from behind do it would concentrate federal money on disadvantaged students and require that most of it be used to teach them basic mathematics and reading skills.

"It is time that the federal government ceased acting like a national school board," Weinberger said, "telling states and communities in great detail what they should spend and how."

But House Education Chairman Carl D. Perkins, D-Ky., said the plan would cut federal school aid from million to spot year. And Representative Hugh L. Carey, D-N.Y., asserted the requirement of reading and math instruction would put "federal clamp" on much of the money where there are only federal strings now.

Weinberger recommended President Nixon's request for $1.6 billion for this year under the new concept would provide $1.15 billion for disadvantaged students, $60 million for vocational education, $69 million for supporting services, $30 million for the handicapped and $100 million payment for local education of students whose parents live and work on federal property.

He said states would have to earmark the $1.15 billion for disadvantaged students. But on districts that need it most than with 1,000 or more students from poor families or at least one of the constituent from poor families before spending any on other districts.

John R. Ottina, acting U.S. commissioner of education, said the new federal aid would work out to about $30 per student under the new plan compared to $120 now.

And under persistent questioning from Perkins on how many school districts would lose federal aid for disadvantaged students, Ottina said about 1 million students would get aid under the new concept compared to about 2.1 million now.

Weinberger said the present system of federal aid for 3.45 million education programs encourage local districts to waste substantial administrative power in filling out applications for the money, often for programs that he said are ineffective or have outlived their usefulness.

Schools Shun Chicano Students

By LEE MORGAN
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) Mexican-American students in Southwestern schools receive far less attention from their teachers than Anglo classmates, compounding educational problems they face because of language and cultural differences, the U.S. Civil Rights Commission said Monday.

"The school system in the Southwest is failing to involve Mexican-American children as active participants in the classroom by not asked as Anglo children," Commissioner Manuel Ruiz, Jr. said. "Its most resources of verbal interaction between teacher and student there seems a great disparities in favor of the Anglo."

Averaged based on observations of six classrooms in six schools in California, Texas and New Mexico, the commission said, "Mexican-American students are ignored compared to their Anglo classmates," it said.

The average Anglo receives 16 per cent more praise and encouragement from the teacher than Mexican-Americans in the same classrooms.

—Anglos receive 30 per cent more educational attention from the instructors.

—Anglo students are asked 18 per cent more questions and spend six to eight 10 per cent more.

—The pattern emerged constant whether the room was majority Anglo or Mexican-American, whether the teacher was low or moderate, and whether the teacher was Anglo or Mexican-American.

Mitchell Believes Bugs Legal

By ERIC SEARS
Associated Press Writer

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) Former U.S. Atty. Gen. John N. Mitchell testified Monday that all tape he and his staff authorized were legal. Mitchell appeared at a hearing on a lawsuit challenging more than 100 Justice Department wiretaps.

At issue was whether Congress allowed only Mitchell and eight assistants to seek wiretaps from national judges or whether Mitchell could authorize other officials to request wiretaps.

In the hearing before U.S. District Court Judge William O. Mehrige, Mitchell said he personally authorized all wiretap requests when he was in Washington, D.C. When out of the city, he sent his executive assistant, Saul Limbenbaum, telephoned him and received permission to request wiretap authorizations.

Asked if anyone else were authorized to sign requests, Mitchell responded, "Not to my knowledge, although I have since been informed there may have been one or two cases in which someone else signed the documents."

Mitchell repeatedly said he did not remember any documents shown him at the hearing by defense attorneys. The documents included memorandums from his staff and the FBI requesting wiretap requests.

In the courtroom were 18 attorneys representing numerous persons arrested across the country in narcotics, gambling, extortion, racketeering and bombing cases based on wiretap evidence. Many were charged in "Operation Eagle," a major federal narcotics sweep in 1969.

The cases were assigned to Mehrige's court for consolidation, since several already were before the judge.

James Hogan of Miami, an attorney representing a man charged with gambling violations, asked Mitchell if he remembered documents presented to him to insure that the need for a wiretap was evident.

"I'm sure that the matter of need was inherent in the picture of all the applications would have been sent up to me," Mitchell answered.

Strike Hits Harvard Aid Policy

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) More than 150 graduate students and teaching fellows at Harvard University went on strike Monday to protest the university's financial aid policies.

Members of the Graduate Student and Teaching Fellows Union set up 15 picket lines and urged undergraduates and graduate students as well as faculty members to boycott classes.

The strike succeeded to protest a financial aid program which limits the amount available for graduate education.

States Given More Say In Voting Requirements

By VERNON A. GUIDRY JR.
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—A six-member majority of the Supreme Court Monday gave states more latitude in fixing voter residency requirements, but warned that 30 days "approaches the outer constitutional limits."

The majority approved 30-day periods in both Arizona and Georgia, thus rejecting a 10th decision which limited Tennessee to 30 days. The constitution "is not so rigid," said the unsigned majority opinion, that such local determinations on time periods must be struck down.

Arizona jagged its residency requirement to the closing of the registration process prior to elections. Georgia had no separate residency requirement, but there are closed registrations 30 days before state elections. The limits do not apply to presidential elections.

Justice Thurgood Marshall said the court could avoid "an unprincipled numbers game" only by demanding that states provide substantial evidence that they need longer than 30 days. Georgia and Arizona had not, said Marshall in a dissent joined by Justices William O. Douglas and William J. Brennan Jr.

In another 6 to 3 decision, the court told state universities that "the mere dissemination of ideas" on campus may not be halted "no matter how offensive to good taste."

Expanding a 1971 decision that found state campuses were not "streets" immune from the sweep of the First Amendment," the unsigned majority opinion ordered the University of Missouri to consider graduate student Barbara Papish.

The university expelled Miss Papish for distributing an issue of the "Free Press Underground" which had two lewd cover illustrations.

For February, 1969, issue carried a cartoon picturing police in the act of raping the Statue of Liberty and the Goddess of Justice.

The majority noted that the court had repeatedly upheld the authority of state higher education to control conduct related to dissemination of views.

The facts "show clearly that Miss Papish was dismissed because of the disapproved content of the newspaper rather than the time, place or manner of its distribution," said the majority.

In dissent, Justice William O. Douglas said decisions by the court could prompt widespread reductions by taxpayers and legislators to support higher education.

Brandt Moves To Keep U.S. In Germany

By WERNER THIELMANN
Associated Press Writer

BONN, Germany (AP) Fighting to keep U.S. troops in West Germany and to keep his party united, Chancellor Willy Brandt has resorted to a surprise move against growing anti-Americanism in the country.

A major topic Monday was an implied threat by Brandt over the weekend to resign as head of his ruling Social Democratic party.

He warned he would do this if the party's anti-American left wing, which wants to kick out 50,000 U.S. troops, proceeds against his pro-American foreign policy it a party conference three weeks from now.

Observers said Brandt bases these and other recent signs of anti-Americanism among some Germans would hurt U.S. congressional forces President Nixon is fighting forces that want to withdraw the troops.

The press Monday carried reports of an anti-American incident that has Brandt's government worried.

Organized by local leaders of Brandt's own party, about 3,000 Germans demonstrated Saturday at Kirchanschöring against activities of a nearby U.S. Army base.

The demonstrators protested the noise of U.S. helicopters, opposed plans to expand an airfield and demanded withdrawal of a U.S. combat helicopter unit recently moved there.

Brandt's defense minister, Georg Leber, took the incident seriously enough to tell the demonstrators in a telegram that he wanted to see U.S. Ambassador Martin J. Hillenbrand over the issue.

Leber met Monday with Gen. Michael S. Davison, commander of the U.S. Army in Europe, to discuss various issues. It was not known whether the weekend weekend demonstration was one of them.

The press and observers expressed surprise Monday that Brandt considered the anti-Americanism of his party's left, including the Young Socialist youth wing, a serious enough problem to threaten his resignation.

In administration language, Brandt told party leaders Saturday: "I could not bear responsibility for something that contradicts what I and others found toward approval for from the voters."

He specifically mentioned any adoption of the Young Socialists' Vietnam-inclusive policy at next month's party conference in place of his SPD moderate platform supporting the alliance with America.

Dollar Gains Strength

By JOSEF JOFFE
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) World money markets erupted Monday for the first time in more than two weeks and the dollar strengthened, proving an initial test of the new floating system of international exchange rates.

Financial sources warned it was too early to tell whether the floating system would finally resolve the monetary crisis of the past two months that there was greater encouragement that the dollar would, instead of the monetary turmoil, was improving.

The U.S. currency opened strongly almost everywhere. It later gave up some of the ground gained but still finished higher in most major centers including London, Paris, Brussels, Amsterdam, Frankfurt, Zurich and Tokyo.

Tokyo, however, was not particularly heavy, supporting that some of the big money managers were sitting on the sidelines, waiting to see how the markets adjusted to the floating system approved Friday in Paris by 14 of the world's richest nations, including the United States.

Finance Minister Valery Giscard D'Estaing of France, chairman of the Paris meeting, told newsmen that market activity Monday was in line with "the hopes and conclusions" of the conference participants.

Foreign exchange dealers here and on the Continent took an attitude of "we bet so great."

"It will take some time before market conditions return to normal," a Frankfurt banker warned. He said it would be "absolutely premature" to judge the Paris agreement on the basis of one day's trading.

Early POW Release Hinted

By GEORGE EMPEY
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) The chief North Vietnamese spokesman in Saigon said Monday night it is possible the last American war prisoners will be released before the March 29 deadline.

But the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong have not handed over the names of the 147 U.S. prisoners still in their hands, despite repeated American requests that were rejected again Monday.

A spokesman for the U.S. delegation to the Joint Military Commission said the United States, North Vietnam, South Vietnam and the Viet Cong can reach agreement on the number of civilian men in North Vietnam for hundreds of Americans listed as missing or whose bodies were never found. He said the task will take years.

But Hanoi was throwing between the Saigon government and the Communist side over the alleged origin of two military bases north of the South Vietnamese capital. Saigon threatened new military operations if the issue of the International Commission of Control and Supervision fails to investigate.

A U.S. source said, "It is a serious matter which threatens the whole agreement."

Floating Church Sails On Me. Coast

By PHYLLIS AUSTIN
Associated Press Writer

NORTHEAST HARBOR, Maine (AP)—Stan Haskell is a sea-going Billy Graham to the fishermen on the islands off the Maine Coast.

Winter and summer, the banker-turned-missionary seeks out his isolated parishioners using the Sunbeam, a 65-foot diesel-powered vessel that serves as a floating church and rectory.

Haskell, 52, recently took over as minister-at-large of the Maine Sea Coast Missionary Society. His smooth, lean face is still unfamiliar to most of the islanders, but he is welcomed and trusted because of those who have gone before him.

The interdenominational society, based in Bar Harbor, was organized in 1905. Since then, it has ministered yearround to the spiritual and physical needs of the island people, as well as those in many easterly mainland communities.

"We have church services, baptisms, weddings and funerals aboard the Sunbeam," said Haskell.

"I also do personal counseling, call on the ill and disturbed, deliver clothing, reading material, furniture and mail to the people," he said. "These are the kinds of needs you find everywhere."

"Some of the islanders are lonely," he said. "But they prefer it to modern civilization. They've lived here all their lives and wouldn't trade for anything."

The Sunbeam's second voyage under its new command took Haskell, his wife Ethel, 55, three crewmen and four passengers to Eagle, Vinalhaven, Isle au Haut and Monhegan islands.

Haskell was excited. He says he wants to expand the work of the society on many of the islands and is anxious to put his ideas before the congregations.

The trip from Northeast Harbor, home port of the Sunbeam, to Eagle Island begins at 7 a.m. The sea that day was calm, especially for mid-winter. A light breeze moved, and the temperature hovered in the low teens. Before long, an inch-thick coating of spray ice encrusted the cabin.

Two hours later, the Sunbeam's sturdy skipper, David Allen, 33, guided the vessel to a mooring off Eagle in East Penobscot Bay. The Haskells loaded a small tender with several chairs to take to a needy island resident.

After a short row to the beach, the Haskells trudged a mile across crusted snow before reaching their destination.

"Our friend was especially pleased with the wicker rocker," he said after the visit. Haskell said the middle-aged resident lives in two rooms of a former small hotel. The place has no central heating or electricity—only a woodstove like many island homes. The woman fetches water from a well and rain barrels.

"She had on four layers of sweaters to keep warm," Haskell said. "The temperature was about 45-50 degrees. She spends three days of the week getting wood and water, and on two days picks up food and mail off the supply boat from the mainland."

Lon Nol Forced From Palace

By DENNIS NEELD
Associated Press Writer

PHNOM PENH (AP)-Marshal Lon Nol has moved out of his downtown presidential palace following a bombing attack on the building by a Cambodian air force captain in a stolen fighter plane, government sources reported Monday.

The 60-year-old head of state moved Sunday with his family to a heavily defended villa two miles from the center of Phnom Penh, the sources said.

The villa grounds bristle with antiaircraft guns and are surrounded by a 30-foot wire fence as a precaution against rocket attacks.

Lon Nol's presidential guard has been reinforced by the 2nd Battalion of elite infantry and armored personnel carriers stationed around the perimeter.

Two 250-pound bombs fell close to the palace Saturday, killing more than 40 persons and injuring 50, mostly army dependents. Capt. So Potra, 32, who stole a T28 fighter place from Phnom Penh's Pochentong airport, still has not been traced. He is believed to have landed at an air strip in an area controlled by the Communist rebel Khmer Rouge and its North Vietnamese allies.

His mistress, Princess Botum Bopha, 33-year-old daughter of deposed head of state Prince Norodom Sihanouk, has been jailed. Some 20 other members of the royal family are under house arrest in the home of Queen Mother Kossomak, military sources reported.

Several opposition journalists and politicians including Keo An, an unsuccessful presidential candidate in last June's election, also have been arrested.

The government has linked So Potra's bombing attack with an alleged plot to overthrow Lon Nol. Diplomatic sources report that there is little evidence of any such plot. Thereare theories the attack may have been launched as a result of a personal vendetta by the captain, who is reported to hav been grounded by the air force for "emotional instability."

Hanoi was not among the cities bombed heavily by the American Navy and Air Force. Other towns were reported completely destroyed. A team of experts dispatched by an American congressional subcommittee visited Thai Binh and Vinh about 80 miles south of Hanoi. They found both completely in ruins.

Hanoi Slowly Recovering

By HORST FAAS
Associated Press Writer

HANOI (AP)-Hanoi is a city between war and peace. Officials are still counting the dead and wounded from last December's U.S. air raids and assessing the damage.

Premier Pham Van Dong and other government leaders exhort the North Vietnamese to remain vigiliant and ready for all eventualities. But the people of Hanoi appear relaxed, ready to enjoy life a bit more and eager to rebuild and improve their war-battered capital.

Hanoi's major, Tran Duy Hung, is a bespectacled doctor who has run the city since 1954. He is described as "a good friend of the late Uncle Ho Chi Minh."

"Our facilities are not as good as in your countries," he said in greeting some Western newsmen, "not even as good as in Saigon."

"Except for five relatively calm years after we took over from the French colonialists we always had to be vigiliant and prepared for war and attack."

At first glimpse from the air, central Hanoi still looks like the graceful French colonial city of 250,000 it was before all the fighting began 30 years ago.

There are no skyscrapers, no freeways and no pollution clouds.

A close look, however, shows the cracks and wrinkles of age, facades that have not been painted for decades, dilapidated, overcrowded mansions once inhabited by French colonial officials.

Massive trees that still line every boulevard benevolently hide much of the damage that decades of neglect, austerity and war have done to the "Flying Dragon," as the name Hanoi can be translated.

While Hanoi obviously has suffered from the priorities of a war economy, massive destruction by the U.S. air war is limited to a few areas-most notably where bombs hit residential areas.

Hanoi's Major said that in the whole municipality of 597,000 square kilometers, in the December raids alone 19,000 homes were destroyed.

While it is difficult to confirm these statistics, occasional stray bomb hits are visible all over the city. A bomb that hit the Cuban Embassy missed American POWs by only a few hundred yards.

Massive destruction can be seen in a densely populated poor district along Kham Thien street, hit in December by heavy bombs dropped by B52s.

The target may have been the Hanoi railroad station, about 500 yards away. It remained intact.

The scenes along Kham Thien Street recall destroyed cities in Germany after World War II. Temporary bamboo and patch-roofed shelters have been built by survivors on the rubble of their flattened houses.

To get to their homes people have to use trails that circle craters made by 1,000-pound bombs. These craters are filled with stinking refuse and foul water.

One family lives in the still-standing half of its two-story house, as if on a stage. In the evening a curtain is pulled to replace the missing wall.

It is unclear how many people were killed in this worst raid on any residential area in Hanoi. The major speaks of several hundred. But Western sources who were in Hanoi during the raid and witnessed rescue work believe several thousand were killed.

They believe the North Vietnamese government seeks to protect its reputation of having been generally successful in holding down civilian casualties by evacuating all but the most needed and by building as many air raid shelters as possible.

In the ruins of Kham Thien district, heavy casualties are evident eveywhere. In one home-a one-room shelter in a multistory house that collapsed except for the ground floor-six tablets on the ancestor altar bear the date of a B52 raid.

The widow who lived there broke into tears when questioned about the loss of her husband, four children and a relative.

Kham Thien is one area in Hanoi where children do not joke with Western visitors or pose grinning for photographs. According to residents, many are orphans living with relatives.

The other showpiece of destruction of nonmilitary targets is the Bach Mai Hospita, reported as twice hit by B52 raids.

Bach Mai, Hanoi's largest hospital, is destroyed from one end to the other.

It may be assumed that the adjacent railroad refueling and parking area was the real target. Rails lead past the hospital, but they were not put out of action.

When American pirsoners of war ride in buses from Hanoi prisons to Gia Lam Airport they can see the result of what the U.S. Air Force called a 100 per cent successful raid on the Hanoi railroad yard and repair facility.

It was utterly destroyed. Railroad cars were thrown about in the blast of heavy bombs. Almost no building can be recognized for what it once was.

Bombs that splashed into neighboring paddies are almost forgotten. Farmers filled in the holes and rice is already greening.

Corruption Feared

Boston Police To Be Reorganized

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - Fear of corruption throughout the Boston Police Department, fed by allegations of bookie payoffs and kickbacks, has led to a top-to-bottom shakeup of the force that will be detailed in a reorganization plan to be made public this week.

Suggestions that cops were promoting activities they should have been policing climaxed last year when a gambling raid turned up an alleged bookie payoff list that named 58 officers. Among them were two highly-placed superior officers, at least one district commander and several vice squad members.

To meet this and other complaints, Boston's new police commissioner has set up an inhouse anti-corruption squad, a mailbox for anonymous citizen tips, investigations of 91 policemen and a reorganization of the department.

Dissatisfaction with the 2,700-man department accelerated with publication by The Boston Globe of two investigative stories-one detailing alleged car towing kickbacks, the other naming alleged gambling operations being ignored by police.

In an attempt to clear the department's image, Mayor Kevin White shuffled the department's top management late last September and then named as commissioner Robert diGrazia, who gained a reputation as a liberal reformer while police superintendent in St. Louis.

During his four months on the job, diGrazia has vowed to root out corruption. "The integrity of the Boston Police Department is an essential element of the public's confidence in the department," he said.

His methods have been controversial. For instance, he demanded that some officers turn over complete financial statements or take psycholigical and intelligence tests.

DiGrazia's actions have been met at almost every turn by opposition from the police unions, the Boston Police Patrolmen's and the Superior Officers Association. They have sought but failed to get court injunctions to limit him.

As the reorganization approaches, several top policemen have quit the force. The latest was Superintendent William A. Bradley, once the No. 2 man on the force. He resigned Wednesday, reportedly at the urging of diGrazia.

But one of the most potent forces behind the reorganization has been the alleged bookie list, seized by a district attorney gaming raid last May and leaked to newspapers months later.

The raid on the home of Francis Vitello, 54, of Boston, reportedly uncovered a list that named 58 officers, along with their nicknames, phone numbers and sums of money. The list has never been made public.

Besides the list, the attorney general's detectives seized $1 million in securities, $99,000 in cash and deposits totaling $35,000 in bank books.

The list has resulted in four separate investigations, by the district attorney, the state Department of Corporations and Taxation, the U.S. Justice Department and the Police Department.

Any criminal charges will be brought by the district attorney. The police investigation is solely for departmental disciplinary action.

Last month, diGrazia received a nine-volume preliminary report from the police probe, and he said it contained "contradictions, discrepancies and omissions." It implicated some not on the list while clearing others.

So he ordered 91 officers to fill out questionnaires detailing their personal incomes since 1966. He demanded proof, such as bank books, of all holdings.

The reports were due last week, and 15 turned them in, three refused and the rest asked for two more weeks to finish working on them.

To help decide what to do with whom in his reorganization, diGrazia hired private consultants to give psychological and intelligence tests to top officers. This move was fought in court unsuccessfully by the police unions.

Expected in this week's reorganization are laundering of the vice squad and organized crime unit, transfer of supervisory personnel to different part of the city and elimination of overhaul of the hackney, robbery, bank, shopping and pawn units.

The changes, diGrazia said, will be "earth shattering."

Environmental Department To Be Revamped

BOSTON (AP)-Legislation mandating the state to "identify and protect areas of critical environmental concern" was filed Monday as part of the governor's Phase 2 reorganization of the Department of Environmental Affairs.

The legislation is the sixth reorganizing package to be filed by Gov. Francis W. Sargent. The remaining four departmental reorganizations are expected to be filed by the end of the month.

The reorganization will merge 49 existing environmental agencies into a single department, Sargent said.

"This proposal will give the state the effective and efficient structure we have needed for so long," he said.

The legislation will abolish the Department of Natural Resources, the Metropolitan District Commission and the Department of Agriculture and establishes five regional offices of the department.

Under the proposal, the new department would prepare detailed maps outlining critical area of environmental concern. The maps would be filed with the registry of deeds, and no development covered by the Environmental Policy Act would be allowed to proceed without a finding by the department that these areas would not be "significantly damaged."

Maine Votes Vets Back To November 11

By PHYLLIS AUSTIN
Associated Press Writer

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP)-The Maine Senate sided with tradition Monday and enacted a House-passed bill to change the Veterans' Day observance back to the original date of Nov. 11.

The vote was 18-3. Seven senators were absent.

For the past three years, Maine has celebrated the holiday on the third Monday in October-in line with the rest of the nation.

But this year, an intensive campaign was mounted to change Armistice Day back to Nov. 11 so the observance wouldn't be just another Monday in a three-day weekend.

At a public hearing on the measure, 250 of Maine's 150,000 veterans appeared in support, and nobody spoke against it.

Sen. T. Targpy Schulten, R-Woolwich, was one of two senators to oppose the bill.

"It is bound to have an adverse economic impact on us," said Schulten. He told his colleagues that if Maine went back to the original date, the state would be closed down when the rest of the country was operating and the opposite would be true when the other states were observing Armistice the third Monday of October.

The economic impact, Schulten said, would have the effect of "taking food out of the mouths of children who need nourishment."

The remark triggered a peal of laughter from two veterans' lobbyists and irked Schulten. He said tersely: "Mr. President, I seemed to have said something funny, with that twittering in the gallery."

The leader of the proponents was Sen. Harrison L. Richardson, R-Cumberland, chairman of the legislative veterans' affairs committee.

"I don't want to see the veterans join the euphoria of the other three-day holiday weekends," said Richardson, a Korean War vet. "I don't want what happened to Washington's Birthday, with its full page sales ads in the newspapers."

Seven Latest POWs From Mass Arriving Soon

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Massachusetts' seven latest returned prisoners of war spent Monday in debriefings and exams, while another New Englander was scheduled to arrive at McGuire Air Force Base in New Jersey.

Army Sgt. Don A. McPhail of Chelmsford, Mass., was one of the 12 returnees who left the Philippines Monday on a flight to McGuire.

Four of the seven who arrived at Westover Air Force base in Chicopee, Mass., and Boston Naval Hospital on Saturday were from New England.

Six of the seven went to Westover, where they started their first full day of routine Monday by having a big joint breakfast in the base hospital dining room.

The latest Westover returnees are Lt. Col. Roger Ingvalson, 44, of Sanford, Maine; Maj. Russell Temperley, 37, of North Falmouth, Mass.; Capt. Lauren Lengyel, 37, of West Peabody, Mass.; Capt. Wallace Newcomb, 32 of Painted Post, N.Y., and Capt. Robert Jones, 29, of Chatham, N.J.

Navy Lt. Timothy B. Sullivan, of Springfield, Mass., returned to the Navy hospital in Boston.

Clean Up

The lowering of the drinking age has caused relatively little problems on campus. However, Zeta Psi fraternity has apparently abused the newly acquired privilege.

At last night's Amherst Selecemtn meeting, gripes were aired concerning the deplorable conditions left after a Friday night party at the fraternity. A resident of Amherst Center complained that beer cans were left on the property after the party.

Town Manager Allen Torrey said, "I went down there to look myself, and conditions were very bad."

The problem did not exist before the drinking age was lowered. Selectman Michael Sullivan felt that the fraternities were trying to "build up business" by attracting young drinkers.

If the fraternities are trying to attract new members, then they surely won't do so by keeping their premises so messy. Leaving empty beer cans strewn about after a party only helps to encourage negative remarks about frat life, and presents a poor image of Greeks in general. This kind of irresponsible behavior will make some people wonder whether lowering the drinking age was a mistake, and certainly won't help when the state legislature considers lowering the age of majority.

Jetty No: do everyone a favor and take the time to clean up after your parties. You'll clean up your image, and the image of college students as well.

Grade Control

By MARSHALL T. SPRINGER

In one of their more spirited meetings so far this year, the Faculty Senate voted last week in a special session to create a Grade Control Commission to regulate the amount of good grades given out at the University.

Dr. G. Green, sponsor of the motion, which is called the Grade Stabilization Act, gave an impassioned impromptu speech which touched a responsive chord in everyone.

"I never got as good grades as these dumb kids do, and I'm a professor," he emphasized, so the fact that his students, previously thought dumbest, were caused to resemble "these, here."

The Commission is charged with the job of seeing that the general University average does not exceed the farm of 2.0. It will be the policy body of the University that will grant exemptions to certain professors centered only on even students. Also created was a regulatory arm, the Curve Board. The Curve Board will conduct hearings, monitor alleged "liberal" faculty, and establish the "Force of Flunking Index". It will probably be the policy of the Board to try to keep the price as high as possible.

"The composition of the Board will be as widely representative of Faculty opinion as we can make it," said Dr. Green. "We might even put a couple of liberal people on it."

When asked by such regulation might stifle academic freedom, Dr. Green replied, "This inflation has got to stop." "I don't care how it's done." "If this continues, the University will lose all academic credibility." "I'd never be able to get that job at Harvard." "We'll change the grading system so that there aren't any A's or B's in it, if we have to."

When asked if the improvement of teaching might be the reason for the increase in the number of good grades, Dr. Green stated, "Lesson five one of the organizers for the Union here." "If the grade point average is rising, I know that the Faculty aren't responsible for it." "Why do you think that we're organizing the Union?" "It's unorganization."

Dr. Green closed the interview with a statement that Academic Standards must be upheld. He then left for a meeting protesting the use of exploitive teacher evaluations of the University.

Jokers And Fakers

I. "And the Copyists Shall Inherit the Earth . . ."

Tradition is king; and the Lord help any who should be so bold as to destroy that most lusted after of qualities-peace of mind. Or is it cowardice? Lissen man, we gotta follow orders . . . yep . . . just like the Nazis.

Copy, copy, copy . . . just once more and you'll get it right; and if it doesn't happen then, then you'll stay up all night. That's it folks; a rhyme without reason (in all senses of that word). If you're so cruel as to suggest that something different might be done, then you're out on your ear—or deemed crazy . . . whichever might be considered the more convenient of the two. The more productive. The more easily copied . . .

In a mass-production society, one such as we are live in, there is really no such thing as freedom. It's so much easier to compare things . . . "we strive as the grey matter. And anything that can't be categorized can be rather easily ignored.

II. "The ear expecting much . . ."

Now, I'm not expecting anybody to really read this column and think about it . . . you know . . . the tumultuous ramblings of a madman . . . and be really can't write that, tell, he's just trying to be different and freaky. No.

This is the way I write. I ramble—and I see what's on my mind. You know I wear kind to you? No, I wouldn't if I could.

We all grow in different ways. As it has been and perhaps always will be. I don't know. But at least I've got enough guts to make myself, and to grow! as the Temptations sing, to carry me to show anything from your friends. Hell, you . . . there are others.

III. "I don't feel it has Worth, but there's just something about this place . . ."

But have we all "found himself" Maybe. Those words that I quoted above were the thoughts of a woman that told me about her feelings when she entered the Collegian offices. I've been around the Collegian offices a long time so it doesn't bother me (anymore) a lot. Much. But I walk into any place where students gather to get something done (the words ring of high school experiences) What is, this Student Senate?

We are all trying to do something professional here, whether we realize it or not. Or what it is . . . so the your rule is to up the ante faster than you can say "expert". Some feel it running around with a third degree engineer's license, and they tend to forget that they were once in the same position that you, you naive punk—that you were in. And they forget that they might have once wanted to try something different, but they haven't had time for that, because they spent a hell of a lot of time and energy learning the ropes to becoming a professional that they've been deprived of any creative energy they once had. And why? Because they've become experts.

They are professionals. They do not think about what they are doing. It is easier to react through rules than it is to react through thought or emotion. Dictators you see. You walk into the Student Senate and the air of «hope» is so thick that you can't think of anything except "I wonder if I'm in the right place. All I want is out of here . . ."

Professional students! Don't make me laugh, gentlemen, you're tickling me . . . !

Concepts of importance (especially to those who lack it) are hard to give up. There never was any such period as "yesterday" . . . it's just a different way of looking at things . . . or else an incredibly strong memory, which should make a genius something akin to a very weak computer. Concepts of superiority also show a rather nasty tendency to destruction of supposed "inferior" types. The law of the jungle, dear boy . . . yes, yes, English imperialism, the American way of life and all that.

IV. "The Matter: We grey matter"

Professionals by professionalism's sake, but for what sake, tonight? You remember, but don't you? Now just ask and be shocked to be blamed for all the crimes that were committed in his name. Nice guy. Could be my twin twin.

Any road, let us ancient Sanskrit saying mean "to do" . . . nice, simple, and philosophic. Never had a need in it's life until it was stranded from people that I let anyone kid you: jokers, so bring them off you that act and are impartial. You'd do just as well saying that your brain and the organs that you breath is an aquatic industry. And you just may as well become a machine where you let rules—and phony "standards of excellence" rule you. Breathe in life. I don't get my juices measuring things on a yardstick anymore. My gratitude to: Dan Van Fleet, Vivian Hunnicutt, and Esther Farmer of "Joy" the name of the only alternative hand herein. Thank you/mother.

Bugging Boyden

Wiretapping is a practice that seems to have increased in use lately in the last few years. Everybody is getting in on the act of electronic bugging. The Democrats, the Republicans, ITT, and now would, we believe, is the Collegian.

That's right. The Collegian for the last two months has tapped the wires of Frank L. Boyden Gym to investigate just what's all that student affairs money is going.

The other day, Charles Cotchipaul, MDC staff reporter, was monitoring the phones from his secluded outpost on the roof of SGA Tower. This is what he heard:

Ring-ring-ring. "Hello, football office."

"Hello, this is Jack Lantern. Is Coach Hatchetman in?"

"I'll connect you."

"Jack Hatchetman speaking."

"Jack, Jack Lantern, how have you been?"

"Not too bad, thanks to the injuries from the Collegian having been giving me a pain lately, but I don't worry about them too much. It was until then a bunch of complimentary tickets for next season they'll get all our backs."

"Who's going pay for them?"

"We got money of course, don't worry about that. The athletic fee is still in effect so we're on flush as ever."

"Yeah, I know. That's really the reason I called you."

"Don't tell me you've been taking crap from those reporters too."

"Well not really. It's just that we have to enlist a circle of strangers to bring to New York with us tonight to the N.I.T."

"So what, they already talked about that. It's been avoided."

"I know, I know, but one of our guys gets drunk from strangers, so I thought I'd get him a couple of proprietors."

"Jesse, Jack, I don't know. These reporters have such time to do they might make a breakdown over it. Hell, this guy who gets drunk drives for some Wrigley's. I can stick in Wrigley's. I can get you a hellova deal on Spearmint."

"That sounds good. What the hell, these guys are getting free scrapes free anyway. I can't help it if the guy gets loose. Yeah, get me a gross of them. How much will that be?"

Silence on the line for two minutes.

"Jack?"

"Still here Dick, how much?"

"How's $10 sound."

"Great, and I don't think the students at UMass would mind if they spent money to keep one of the basketball players from getting loose in you."

"No, why should they?"

"Well, those dorm reporters have nothing to do, you know they might try to poke fun of us or something."

"Don't worry about them, I'll have Marty Nolly fix things up. What else is on your mind Jack?"

"Well you know we're going to win tonight Dick, and I'd like to get a deal on some rooters caps."

"Why don't you call Vic Fazio, he gave me fifty Celtics after we beat 76."

"Yeah, good idea . . . I heard he had connections for getting caps. Look, Dick, my secretary is at the door telling me that my brother, who owns a chain store in Kansas, is on the other line, long distance. Thanks for the help."

"Sure, Jack, anytime. Good luck in the game tonight."

"Thanks, Dick."

AIM Misses The Target

To The Editor:

It is positive the American Indians fighting back. Nobody, with the possible exception of John Wayne, would deny that they have been oppressed. Indians have been the victims of racial hate on our movie screens and in our school textbooks. In the past they were openly slaughtered and their treaties blatantly violated by the U.S. Government.

Today the oppression is much more subtle. Here and there an Indian is murdered, with little if any publicity from our "free" press. Indians are exploited into wages of cheap labor when business and Government feed the American public their familiar line, "Look what we're doing for these people. We're giving them jobs!" Funny how they sneak every single job "given" to a minority person, but never mention how much profit they're making out of the deal.

While politicians apologize for past wrongs, they do nothing about present abuses, until a crisis arises. Indians in South Dakota have been living with racial exploitation for decades, but until the Wounded Knee incident, what had federal George McGovern done for them? For example, AIM, which is owned by McGovern stockholder James Kerr, pays Bordeaux Indians $1.40 an hour to produce machine gun belts on a deserted SAC airbase. For this "humanitarian" service, AIM received a $50,000 Federal grant for "Indian training" and a $1.5 million grant for an Indian "vocational village". Naturally, the Government didn't give the money directly to the Indians—they'd probably spend it all on fire water, right? After that money passes through the hands and pockets of AIM, there probably won't be enough for a nice pack of Lorillards, never mind a decent school or job training program.

The racial actions of the American Indian Movement (AIM), however, fall short of a good fight, because of nationalism. Many Indians are themselves are being involved in a fight against the statement for so called "Indian rights". What they don't realize is that black, white, Spanish, and Indian working class people all suffer from the same economic exploitation - low wages, high prices, long working hours, etc. Racism, although it serves to divide and against minority groups, hurts all workers, including whites, because it stirs up resentment among workers and encourages them to fight each other, instead of uniting as one class against the only class that has any gain from racism, the major group of exploiters. This is the ruling class, made up of the giant capitalists and their flunkies (also relatives) in high governmental positions.

Taking over new town is not the solution. And appealing to the government to do its duty is like asking the cop who just beat you up to be the judge how to beat you a fine in you could call the police. Militant Indians must unite with the only people who share their interests, which history has clearly proven not to be the Government or Big Business. The only group that doesn't profit from racism is the working class. Indians must forget all that garbage about the "white man" robbing them of their lands and realize that the ruling class that's been doing all the robbing, is the majority of 90% of the population.

Down With Farah

To The Editor:

In a show of support and solidarity with our Mexican-American sisters and brothers who are on strike of the Farah Manufacturing Co. in Texas and New Mexico, a group of people picketed Carlson's firm, Shop in Northampton Saturday morning. Carlson refuses to discontinue the purchase and sale of Farah slacks. The success of these slacks is part of a nationwide struggle to apply economic pressure on the Willie Farah-owned company, in order to crush the cruel and intransigent resistance to the unionization of the company employees, 80% of whom are Chicano and 60% of whom are women.

Farah workers are fighting the average weekly take-home pay of $60 which, generally, means a family of four, $40 below the officially inadequate, federally calculated, poverty level. Female employees, upon returning from maternity leave, are assigned to the bottom of the pay scale, no matter how long they've worked there. Paid sick vacations are available only after two years employment. As for job security, workers can be fired at any time; there is no grievance procedure. Speed-ups on the production line are commonplace. Wage increases depend on workers meeting impossible-to-achieve quotas, for small wages are frozen.

Recently, in palpable retaliation against unionization, Mr. Carlson announced a paternalistic bonus plan, ostensibly to forestall unionization. The offer failed miserably, generating a lot of bad press. Either Carlson or his co-managers emerged from the building, having carried out all the pickets looking another from the rear under the chair's awnings. He stood there within two yards of the same student, alone in the average and simplemindedly told him his racial mind with the star. "Hey don't belong here. You must want Yakahama pants."

Many contemporary domestic their sympathy and support. The national boycott of Farah pants has to date been, with a heavy sales slump, a loss in the stock value, and a 1.1 million dollar loss for the year. Farah can't last much longer but we all must continue to pressure him and the interests he stands for. Join the New American Movement, Young Socialist Alliance, Campus Coalition, Young Workers Liberation League, People's coalition for Peace and Justice, AFL-CIO, Amalgamated Clothing Workers Union, American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees Union, supported picketing at Carlson's, 16 Main St., Northampton, Saturday the 24th of next. Also call Mr. Carlson at work, 584-3131, and let him know what you think of his shamanity.

Knowledge

To The Editor:

Last Wednesday, I wrote a letter telling about Gerry Mangum's 3 which was answered by a letter printed this Tuesday. After reading it, I realized that I should have been a lot clearer in referring to what Mahesh is given as "success". There are so many labels that would be put on this, which will result never convey what this truly blissful experience is. Maybe you could experience a lot of this feeling all of alcohol or drugs, or being in love, or acquiring fame, etc. But these only last a while, where this experience lasts forever. Instead of discussing like anything else, the more you meditate on this "Knowledge", the higher it gets. And this Knowledge isn't something for just certain group of people, but is the thing that is bringing all human beings together as brothers and sisters. This "organization" Divine Light Club, isn't what gives peace, it is one tool or means used to propagating it. Knowledge is so much more that Divine Light Club. So if people are interested, they come to our programs every Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in the Campus Center. If you want peace.

'The Jungle Freaks'

To The Editor:

Tonight it may have only been an oversight. I want to correct the omission of "The Jungle Freaks" from the reviews in last Friday's PAGE 9 entertainment. It is a fact of the American film critic's education that he characteristically oriented only toward American film or those European directors who win the attention of the American critical establishment through overwhelming popularity in their homelands.

It may seem incomprehensible to a mainstream unsophisticated public, but there are other good films "out there" other than "The Emigrants" and the usual Fellini, Truffaut, Bergman, etc. In particular, the cinema of the Third World is passed over as too "primitive" for attention. "The Jungle Freaks" in fact, had to change its name from "Mozambique" in order to gain any audience. However, the detail is unnecessary since, once lured into the theatre, the audience has acclaimed the film as a masterpiece.

The film is not for the squeamish, since the director, Joaquim de Santiago has based his tale on the ecologies of cannibalism. Violence and myth is interwoven with satire cunningly to produce a film rich in both history and visual images. The swimming pool show in which the guests are lulled into the amusement of the other guests tape the film off to an elaborate series of events that leads to the destruction of an anti-hero who has been changed from black to white man. The film is being presented by the Amherst Film Coop and an attempt will other notes to help the audience understand any underlying cultural or historical images.

Budget Committee

To The Editor:

Your article regarding "Budget Committee Hits Concert Plan" appearing in Monday's Collegian contains several misleading statements which I should like to rectify.

The most obvious error is the statement: "All the Central Committee is asking students to do is take money from discretionally established fees." This is NOT already established. It is derived from the total amount of funding for the fiscal year for the various student activities, and then divided by the total number of students. The Budgets Committee is presently working to lower this fee, and has initiated such action by the introduction and subsequent passage by the Student Senate of the criteria for funding for which (previously outlined in the Collegian). What this criteria does, is eliminate several small interest groups from the coverage student's semester fee, and will result in a lower SUFF next year. Secondly, the Concerts Committee is asking for subsidized concerts. What this basically and simply means is that every student will be paying a fee every semester for the proposed concert series. But what is not made clear in the article is that out of an estimated 11,000 undergraduate total year, only 4,000 students can attend any one concert. I hardly think this can be equitable every student having "the option to attend all five". That should be a crock. What this "option" will amount to is being the first in line for the ticket counter for every concert. AAA can will be paying twice (SUFF and admission) to go through the same hoop.

In short, it is unfair to make every one pay for something that obviously everyone can't use. The Budgets Committee is trying to lower the $40 fee for next year to a minimum amount. They feel as I believe most students on this campus do, that with everything else rising in cost, it is unfair and either unethical to expect students to pay for things that they don't need, use or want. Budgets will be meeting Tuesday and Thursday of this week, at 7:30 p.m. in room 803-07. Why don't you make a point to come by and let them know how you feel about your money. I think it is unfortunate that students have to pinch every penny that they have when they never question the fact that they are forking out $60.00 a year for things they don't even have real.

Americanized Hibakusha

To The Editor:

"Clothing had been burned and blown and shredded from their bodies; scorched skin hung in blistered strips from their faces and hands; nearly all were deathly sick and vomiting. In the park itself some twenty soldiers, members of an antiaircraft unit perhaps, lay in one immobile group, a collective symbol of horror. They had been staring at the sky when the bomb went off, and they continued to stare from suddenly hollow eye-sockets, the fluid from their melted eyes running down their cheeks." (Fred Cook, The Warfare State).

Two thousand pounds of TNT were in every bomb that devastated London, Hamburg, Berlin, and other WWII cities. Twenty thousand tons were in the A-Bomb. It is naive to suggest that the effects of the 100,000 vaporized bodies and another 100,000 screaming human beings remain in our consciences. Many United States' citizens felt no qualms at all. Many felt nothing but awe at the bombastic display of sweeping victory. None felt melted eyes running down their cheeks. With the H-Bombs (20 A-Bombs in one), Dr. Edward Teller's to design them, and even greater packages of sufficient annihilation, an A-Bomb is a laughably insignificant weapon. Yet, someone has felt the aftermath of Hiroshima, and still does today. Hiroshimans who have "survived," August 6, 1945 and their affected offspring are called "hibakusha." They are obviously deprived in a number of ways and have been labeled social outcasts. They have lived with death, watched it, and now suffer from the experience.

To justify Hiroshima with "war is inevitable," "that's the price you pay," or "there was nothing else we could do," is irresponsible, immature, and immaterial. Pacified rationalization in this respect has happened because there are few people who can materialize a shredded, blood-stenched human being in their midst. Those who believe they have a feeling for what happened concentrate their chagrin with "That sadistic bastard Truman—it was all his fault." Bullshit. It was our fault, the next time we do it it'll be our fault, and unless it never happens again it will always be our fault. That includes all forms of murderous aggression; namely, war. People in the military or heading for careers in the military tell us "someone has to do it". If they feel they have to destroy, then they should be placed with people who, incidently, have been incarcerated for much lesser crimes. Without appearing to be at all crass, the military surely has more to offer than suggesting that persons in the services have the duty to take up arms. And surely the Military isn't proposing that all the people it serves should be overshelmingly supportive of all its motives (Madison and Jefferson did establish that the Armed Services would service the citizens, not visa-versa.).

Granted that mammoth, encompassing influence of military propaganda on all of us, especially aimed at those in power, it seems unfair to staple the coffin of Harry S. Truman with "Father of the Hibakusha". True, he pushed the button, but who wired the mechanisms were the Teller's, the Goldwater's, the McCarthy's, the General Walker's, the Robert Welch's, the Joint Chief's of Staff, the National War College's, the Charles Wilson's, and take a breath and continue. Plant here an "exaggeration" and stop reading this foolishness, or think for a second and decide to find out what's been going on in Eisenhower's forewarned military-industrial complex, which isn't just a teeny-bopper placard, it's real. It's the officers who do the pushing, it's ROTC where they came from, and it's us doing the supporting.

ROTC on campus allows a diverse education for our peers bent on military futures. Maybe it's the diverse education which changes some of their futures, makes them more receptive to the problems of the civilians, or even makes them more well-rounded individuals. Maybe this diverse education justifying academic freedom for all, including military personnel, isn't really any more diverse than one from West Point or other such institutions. Possibly civilian students are the ones getting diverse educations, per order of the generals. There's an American Legion and Rotary Club in every town; there does not have to be ROTC on any campus, nor should there be. The military controls business, politics, education, and the media, and continues in it's attempts to marionette us into Americanized hibakusha.

To The Editor:

For the past six years, we have been faithful readers of the Collegian. More often than not, we found the editorials at least tolerable, occasionally stimulating.

In the last year, however, we have noted a definite decline in the quality of editorial writing. It appears that the staff has lapsed into self-indulgent, banal verbiage, which rivals only Nixon speeches in sheer subhuman stupidity.

We would like to suggest that you reevaluate your ability to perceive and articulate real human concerns. But on second thought, continue your ramblings to strengthen the old saying, "Those who tell don't know and those that know don't tell."

The Right Thing To Do

To The Editor:

Can anyone explain why someone has to steal a knapsack from the University Store, leave the contents on the steps to Draper Hall, and disappear with the bag and some of the possessions therein? It was decent of him to leave the study material behind. Maybe next time he will leave a note propped up by the pile, reading; "I have stolen the bag that contained all this. Will the finder please restore this to the rightful owner". In this way, the finder won't have to walk by the goods three-days-running, before picking them up and investigating their ownership.

If what this person did was the right thing to do, then I move that the war in Vietnam, the shooting in Kent, the control over marijuana, and armed University Security guards are the right things too. If however, what he did was wrong, then I don't see any outcry against his wrong- doing.

Two wrongs never did make a right, never have, and never will. Don't kid yourself. And don't, please, try to fool another. Not when both have to lose. Enough said.

Peace, in Jesus. No other way.

Phone Co. Fights For Increase

By NILS J. BRUZELIUS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP)—The New England Telephone Co., armed with hundreds of thousands of dollars to spend on lawyers and "expert" witnesses, will go to work Tuesday to win a $122 million rate increase it requested last year in Massachusetts.

Arrayed against it, and representing the state and in particular the Consumer's Council, will be the Consumer Protection Division of the attorney general's office. Thus far, the division has been allocated $24,000 for its special expenses on the case.

The Department of Public Utilities DPU hearing, due to begin Tuesday at 10 a.m. at the Saltonstall state office building, will open as usual with testimony from politicians and members of the public.

On Wednesday, once the shouting's over, the lawyers on both sides will get down to arguing the legal and financial points, using the testimony of specialists placed on the stand by each side.

In its prepared testimony, already submitted to the DPU, the company presents 10 witnesses. As of Friday, the attorney general's office had made arrangements to call two witnesses, who will share the $24,000.

Consumers' Council Chairman William F. Willier has alleged that the telephone company is prepared to spend $1.2 million, or one per cent of the requested rate hike. Spokesmen for the firm deny this, but they don't say what the company has budgeted for the case.

"The allegation that we're going to spend $1.2 million on the rate case is untrue," said Paul Spears, a company spokesman. "We'll spend substantially less than one per cent of what we're asking for. The precise amount depends on how many days of hearing there'll be and how many requests we get to provide information."

The company has said the proposed increase would increase its gross revenues by 22 per cent. The average residential customer's bill would go up by $1 to $2.35, the firm said.

Past experience, in Massachusetts and nationally, suggests the telephone company is likely to get about two-thirds of the increase it seeks. Asst. Atty. Gen. Paul G. Connolly Jr., who will handle the ease for the Consumer Protection Division, is expected to try to show the company is entitled to much less, perhaps one third or less of what it asked.

For the DPU, the current rate proceeding is only the latest chapter in a series of telephone cases that have been in and out of the department and the courts for nearly four years.

It was July 15, 1969, that the company filed for a $55 million rate hike. A year later, June 10, 1970, the DPU granted $7.7 million, but on appeal to a single justice of the State Supreme Court in August that figure was raised to $33 million.

On Oct. 1, 1971, NET filed a new rate indrease for $79.5 million, while the full bench of the Supreme Court continued to consider the issues in the first case. On Nov. 11, 1971, the court ruled that the telephone company was entitled to a higher rate of return than allowed by the DPU, meaning it probably deserved all of the $55 million from the first case, and more.

The DPU, faced then with deciding again on the first case and ruling on the new increase, settled with the company on a $65.6 million increase to cover both. The decision produced a storm of controversy, partially because no public hearings were ever held on the $79.5 million hike requested the second time around.

The upshot was that in the two cases the company won increases totalling $98.6 million, out of the $134.5 million it had sought.

About six months later it filed for the $122 million rate hike now pending. After it was postponed for 10 months the company asked for an "emergency" increase of $61 million, but this was refused by the DPU.

Although the telephone company doesn't say what it expects to spend on the current rate proceeding, there are records at the DPU on what it spends each year for regulatory cases in Massachusetts.

Last year, 1972, these special expenditures, which don't include the cost of work performed by the company's own employes, totalled $137,000. In 1971, it was $102,000; in 1970, $207,000, and in 1969, $27,000.

The total, for the years covering the last three rate cases, is about $473,000. It must be noted that in all but one of these years the expenditures include cases before the DPU not involving rates.

Man Admits To Air Force Forgery

BALTIMORE, Md. (AP)—Thomas E. Southerland pleaded guilty today to four counts of possessing false military identification and leave papers in a case the government earlier said involved heroin smuggling.

The government dropped three other counts related to military identification from the grand jury indictment.

Southerland, 31, changed his plea before final arguments could be made before the jury of eight women and four men at the end of the four-day trial.

The defense rested Friday without presenting any testimony.

Southerland, of Castle Hayne, N. C., was arrested at Andrews Air Force Base Dec. 11. He was indicted by a federal grand jury for using false military identification and leave papers to obtain a ride on an Air Force plane from Okinawa to Thailand and then from Thailand to the United States.

Although the government indicated that flight was tied into an eight-year heroin smuggling plot, it produced no evidence at Southerland's trial to substantiate that contention.

Jump In Income Noted

WASHINGTON (AP)—National personal income jumped by $8.3 billion last month, mainly because of another sizable increase in private payrolls and a boost in social security benefits, the government said today.

The Commerce Department said the gain, at a seasonally adjusted annual rate, brought personal income to an annual pace of $993.9 billion in February. This compared with a $2.7 billion increase a month earlier.

Special factors held down the January increase and helped expand the February boost, the department said.

The department said that social security benefits added $1.1 billion to the increase in February. A month earlier, workers found their personal income dropped substantially because they had to pay an increase in social security taxes voted by Congress.

The Commerce survey showed that private payrolls increased $4.5 billion compared with $5 billion in January.

Rivers Swollen By Weekend Rains

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Water from the flooded Tombigbee River left Columbus, Miss., "a virtual island" Monday as rivers swollen by the weekend's torrential rains crested on the day before the start of spring.

In Michigan, residents started mopping up after a wind and snowstorm dealt the Great Lakes area winter's parting punch and then moved East, where it dumped up to one foot of snow Monday.

More than 2,600 evacuees were reported in northern Mississippi, where flood losses are expected to top $25 million. Gov. Bill Waller has termed the situation "extremely critical."

The Tombigbee at Columbus crested at 13 feet above flood stage early Monday, and officials at Greenwood have ended sandbagging operations along the Yazoo River and hoped for a crest late Monday.

A flood stage of a river is the level at which it is out of its banks.

In Chattanooga, Tenn., Mayor Robert Kirk Walker estimated 700 homes, 200 businesses and at least 12 manufacturing plants were damaged by the water from the flooded Tennessee River.

He estimated 2,000 workers were thrown out of work temporarily pending repairs. Property damage, he said, may top $35 million.

In Brainerd, an affluent Chattanooga suburb, one homeowner remarked, "Rescue workers came by and picked us up, but we had to leave all four of our automobiles in the driveway and they're all nearly covered."

CACC Branches Out

The Central Area Counseling Center will soon be sponsoring several support groups and workshops in the following areas: currently a "quit smoking support group" and a "women's support group". In the next few weeks, given substantial participation, they will branch out into workshops in such areas as "academics" and "drug information".

The center is located in the north-end basement of Gorman House, room B-2. It is available to any student who feels a need for discussion and/or direction on a particular issue.

The staff is composed of graduate students (masters or doctoral candidates) in counselor education or clinical psychology. They are available from 1 A.M. to 9 P.M. on weekdays for individual counseling on a drop-in basis or by appointment. The center can be reached by calling 5-0894, on or off campus. For concerns after hours call Parny at 6-4544. If you are interested in any of the above areas of workshops, please call these numbers.

The members of the center wish to stress the fact of their willingness and availability to all students, and their hope for participation in the new workshops.

Exhibit Calms Kids' Fears

BOSTON (AP) - Claudio Villalba, a six-year-old Colombian boy who has spent the last six months of his life in hospitals, Monday toured an exhibit which shows children like himself how not to be afraid of hospitals.

Claudio has not been able to speak or swallow since when he swallowed a near-fatal dose of sulforic acid at his home in Bogata six months ago. The acid seared his throat and larynx, and he was brought to Massachusetts General Hospital last month for throat reconstruction surgery.

Surgeons at the hospital operated on the boy's throat March 7 and a hospital spokesman said Monday that "the boy is doing well after the first in what may be a series of operations."

Claudio, who was discharged from the hospital last week, is living with his mother in a Boston apartment until he has recovered sufficiently for a second operation.

Doctors say the acid burns produced three obstructions in the boy's esophragus and all will have to be repaired before he can again swallow properly. Claudio now has a plastic tube in his throat to aid him in breathing and swallowing.

On Monday, Mrs. Jessie Sargent, wife of Massachusetts Gov. Francis W. Sargent, took Claudio and his mother, Mrs. Libia Villalba, to Boston Children's Museum.

At the museum, Claudio saw the hospital exhibit, which is designed to familiarize children with hospital instruments and procedures, and thereby lessen their fear and apprehension when they have to visit a hospital.

The boy also toured other exhibits and visited with the animals in the museum's petting zoo.

Mrs. Sargent has taken a special interest in Claudio because Bogata is located in the state of Antioquia, the sister state of Massachusetts in the partners of the Americas Program.

Quinn Waits On Indictments

BOSTON (AP) - Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn said Monday he will not immediately seek any further indictments in the recent murders of eight young Boston-area women.

After the latest in a series of meetings with local law enforcement officials concerning the murders, Quinn said the meeting was productive, but he said, "We will still need lab reports."

Quinn said that the lab reports are coming back from state and federal police labs, and he expects the results soon.

Another meeting with the law officers has been planned within the next two weeks, Quinn said.

Indictments have been returned so far in the murders of Ruth A. Hamilton, 23, of Cambridge, a Winthrop art teacher, and Damaris Synge Gillispie, 22, a Boston University coed.

Anthony Jackson, 33, of Boston, has been charged with those murders.

Alden To Speak

The Department of French and Italian has invited Professor Douglas W. Alden to the University of Massachusetts on Tuesday, April 3.

Alden, editor of the twentieth century volumes of the Critical Bibliography of French Literature, will meet with interested faculty in the third floor lounge of Herter Hall from 4-5:30 p.m.

In the evening the department will host a meeting of the American Association of Teachers of French to welcome Professor Alden in his capacity as president of the national organization. He will speak on what the AATF can do for itself, and the future of French.

Dr. Alden is a professor and former department head of the Department of French at the University of Virginia.

"Cutting Out" Show Planned

A Butterick fashion show entitled "Cutting Out" will be presented in Skinner Hall auditorium April 5 at 7:30 p.m., consisting of spring and summer fashions for the beach, camping, or for the city.

The show is open to the public without charge.

Butterick is sending Andrea Barnardi, its UMass representative, 24 outfits from its spring and summer wardrobe, for the show.

Refreshments will be served after the show.

Muskie Urges More Spending For Public Transportation

WELLESLEY, Mass. (AP) - Sen. Edmund S. Muskie suggested Monday massive spending for public transportation and letting people ride subways and buses free as a means of turning aside the nation's reliance on the automobile.

"I do not believe that American can survive the decade of the 80's with the kind of transportation system we have today," the Maine Democrat told Wellesley College students.

"We must turn away from our sole reliance on the private automobile," he said.

Muskie proposed a six-point plan to do this:

—"Undertake a massive program of capital improvements for public transportation systems and commuter railroads to provide a mass transit system which in terms of convenience and safety is a realistic alternative to the automobile and highways in areas of concentrated population."

—Open the Highway Trust Fund so that local communities can decide how they want to spend the money.

—Consider free mass transit in the cities.

—"Require that the automakers provide us clean, safe and fuel-efficient cars."

—"Remove artificial restrictions on taxis which keep their number low and costs high in many cities."

—Make sacrifices, such as fewer cars per family and less downtown parking.

Meeting Today For Special Students

The Special Students Group-for-Action of the School of Education announces that there will be a Special Students Meeting today, at 3:30 in the Mark's Meadow School Auditorium.

Dean Mortimer Appley of the Graduate School and Dean Norma Jean Anderson of the Education School will explain Fall '73 admissions policy to Special Students caught in the crunch of reduced degree program slots for Fall '73.

New Year For Baha'is

Members of the Baha'i Community of Amherst will join with millions of Baha'is around the world in observing Naw-Ruz, the Baha'i New Year, Wednesday. Naw-Ruz translated means New Day.

Baha'is and guests will observe Naw-Ruz with the communities of Amherst, Belchertown, Northampton, Montague, Shutesbury and Sunderland joining for dinner and entertainment at field house, South College, tonight at 6:00 p.m.

Pattabi Raman, Chairman of the Amherst Baha'i Community, stated that the Baha'i Faith, which originated in Iran (Persia) in 1844, has a calendar of its own. "The Baha'i Calendar is based on the solar year, consists of nineteen months each with nineteen days, with the New Year falling on the vernal equinox (March 21). The solar year is equalized by four (five in leap year) intercalary days preceding the last Baha'i month. The years, months, and days are named after the attributes of God:ie., Splendor, Beauty, Sovereignty, etc." he said.

Prior to Naw-Ruz, Raman explained, Baha'is the world over observe a nineteen day period of fasting from sunrise to sunset to refresh and reinvigorate the spiritual forces latent in each individual.

JOE: 'Children First'

The Juvenile Opportunities Extension volunteer program (JOE) is presently undergoing a period of transition, and as Spring recess fast approaches, the coordinators of the program are considering its immediate future and are reviewing its past record.

The JOE program considers itself a growing program. Success can only be determined on an individual basis with long term claims of accomplishment left to the future. What is being considered by the JOE coordinators and its active volunteers is what more can we do for kids. The motto is "Children First". If you want to be involved come to the JOE office any afternoon in room 122 of the Campus Center.

The JOE program is one of the volunteer programs supported by the Department of Youth Services that works with troubled youth throughout the state. The two components of JOE serving youth in western Massachusetts are an attempt to remedy juvenile delinquency, and to offer a better solution to men and women in prison, 75% of whom appeared before a juvenile court as teenagers.

The first function of the program is the work done by its volunteers for the kids at the Westfield Detention Center. Two nights a week these volunteers conduct special activities at the center. This serves as an important diversion for the inmates, and is also an added help to the staff.

The second function of the JOE program is aimed at offering the inmates activities outside of the Center.

Anywnere from 5 to 8 youth enjoy a swimming excursion to the Curry Hicks Pool. Swimming equipment is provided along with certified instruction in life saving and skin diving. This activity provides a potential Detention Center volunteer with the opportunity to become a parole volunteer.

The swimming program has been operating only for the Spring semester and it is not limited to kids at Westfield.

The basic philosophy behind the JOE program is to help the Department of Youth Services create community based treatment programs. In the past the parole volunteer program operated separately from the Westfield group. What is occurring now, and is the main point of transition in the program is the problem of tieing the two components of the program together.

This simple idea has many ramifications which hopefully will be knitted together in a summer program that is currently being considered. The basic problem concerning the two operations is that the center program functions mostly as a group while the parole volunteers function individually.

Basically the parole volunteers work on a one to one terms with a youth who is currently on parole from the Department of Youth Services. The objective of each volunteer is to provide supportive services to the youth so that they stay out of trouble and progress as a functioning member of society.

Conference On Capitalism In April

During the first semester of the academic year, 1972-1973, a new student organization was formed on campus: The New American Movement. The body of this group was made up of student radicals who see a socialist based movement as the only hope for a viable future in American society.

On April 4th, 5th, and 6th, the UMass-Amherst College chapter of the New American Movement will sponsor a symposium entitled "Capitalism and Racism". The conference will deal with the rise of capitalism in America and will draw a clear line between capitalism and racism in America. Some of the topics to be included in the symposium are: "Capitalism, Sexism and Racism", and "U.S. Imperialism and Racism: A History of the relationship."

Two of the major speakers at the conference will be Dr. Herbert Aptheker and Doctor Earl Ofari.

Perhaps the most famous of Dr. Aptheker's works is his documentary, American Negro Slave Revolts. Dr. Aptheker's other works on the early history of black people in this country, and his interpretations of the work of the famed black historian and scholar, Dr. W.E.B. DuBois, puts him in a position of vital importance in the make-up of this conference.

Drug Use By Blacks To Be Discussed

This Time It Should Be Different

By STEVE FERBER

Madison Square Garden-NYC—At 9:17 p.m., March 17, 1973 the red palm disease struck Madison Square Garden. Upwards of 5,000 UMass fans were raving mad, a little bewildered, a little confused but abundantly enthusiastic as they stormed their way past ushers and policemen alike to congratulate their Minutemen on victory number one in the NIT.

Madison Square Garden might well have to go back tens of years to recall a time when a horde of fans burst onto the playing floor after a first round victory in the NIT. After all, they were just in the quarterfinals. They still had quite a ways to go. Was it the surprise? Was it the shock of a victory down in New York? or was it just plain Massachusetts enthusiasm?

Every single fan in the country likes to boast about their fans. Basketball enthusiasts at UMass are no exception. Deep feelings of pride swell in the hearts of Cage rooters when reminded of the fact that few come into the Cage expecting a victory and even fewer come out with one.

Fans of the Minutemen were swarming the Garden area last Saturday night. The chants of Minutemen followers were so loud and obnoxious that people in the streets of the city were turning to look at 50 strong, frolicking towards the Garden yelling at ear shattering volumes

Yet while others boast of their team support, UMass fans are indeed that most true to their claims. Three years back, a New York Times writeup of the UMass-Marquette NIT game dealt more with the size and noise generated by the then-Redmen fans than with the technical aspects of the game. Indeed the turnout and support was overwhelming.

North Carolina struck hard two years ago and somehow with Dr. J. went that pride which had packed the Cage hours before gametime.

It became difficult to separate the cause and effect relationship between last year's team record and the diminishing fan support. Yet they were significantly related, and few denied it.

The season of 72-73 started off as slowly as '72 had ended. Days of Erving had passed, and few expected greatness. True, two freshmen teams collectively amassed 37-2 records and now were both on the varsity squad. But no, NIT dreams were just that, dreams.

Suddenly back in the thick of post-seasonal aspirations, the Minutemen fans turned it on, and goodbye Northeastern, goodbye Fordham. Then came Missouri.

The Pep Band was ready. In his hand the drummer held the power. And yes, the fans were ready. Voices set, hands well prepared and feet ready to stomp.

And so it will be tonight. It will be hard for those same fans to block out the horror show two years back when 41 huge points separated the teams that meet this evening. Back in force though they'll be, en Mass to New York City.

Expected will be a drastically different result from the days of '71. With the help of the most enthusiastic fans in New England the fans and players might enjoy a just desert and a ticket to the semis.

Ernie D First Team All-American

By KEN RAPPAPORT
Associated Press Sports Writer

NEW YORK (AP)—UCLA's Bill Walton, the "big Red Machine" of college basketball, and another California golden boy—Ed Ratleff of Long Beach State—were named to The Associated Press 1973 All-America team Monday.

The standout UCLA center and super Long Beach State guard, the only repeaters from 1972, were joined in the select circle by three Eastern stars—forward David Thompson of North Carolina State; guard Ernie DiGregorio of Providence and center Kermit Washington of American University.

Despite bad knees, Walton was a runaway choice for first team All-America picked by the nation's sports writers and broadcasters.

The 6-foot-11 junior, a bony redhead, dominated just about every game this season for the top-ranked and unbeaten Bruins. Walton's average of about 20 points and 17 rebounds a game were only part of his contribution to his team. His true worth was measured in shot-blocking, intimidation and as trigger man in UCLA's polished fast-break.

Ratleff, leader of Long Beach's Pacific Coast Athletic Association champions, was another easy All-America choice. The beefy, 6-6 senior averaged 23 points a game this season.

Thompson is only 18 years old but already coveted by professional teams. Considered by some to be the most exciting player in college this season, Thompson has been rated by one scout among America's top 10 basketball players—including pro and college.

The flashy, 6-4 sophomore excited crowds this season with a facility to out-jump players several inches taller. He averaged 26 points a game, leading the Atlantic Coast Conference, and was the heart of a North Carolina State team that went undefeated through 27 games.

DiGregorio is a ball-handling wizard who personally took charge of Providence and moved the Friars into the NCAA playoffs with a 23-2 regular season record.

DiGregorio averaged 24 points a game, many of them on long shots. The fans love him best when he knifes through a crowd for a basket inside or shoots a behind-the-back pass to a teammate underneath for an easy layup.

Washington's statistics were the most spectacular of the All-Americans. The 6-8 American University star averaged 20 rebounds and 20 points a game in his college career, joining an elite group of only six others in history—Elgin Baylor of Seattle, Bill Russell of San Francisco, Julius Erving of Massachusetts, Artis Gilmore of Jacksonville, Paul Silas of Creighton and Walter Dukes of Seton Hall.

Members of this year's second team All-America include Doug Collins of Illinois State, Keith Wilkes of UCLA, Dwight Lamar of Southwestern Louisiana, Jim Brewer of Minnesota and Kevin Joyce of South Carolina.

The third team consists of Bill Schaeffer of St. John's, N.Y.; Mike Bantom of St. Joseph's, Pa.; John Brown of Missouri; Tom McMillen of Maryland, and Richie Fuqua of Oral Roberts.

Bad Knees

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP)—Manager Eddie Kasko and trainer Buddy LeRoux insist it's too early to worry, but there has been growing concern among the Boston Red Sox over Orlando Cepeda's knees.

Nearly three weeks after the start of training, Cepeda still hobbles, favoring the left knee which was operated on last summer. If the regular season started today, the 35-year-old veteran would be a $65,000-a-year liability.

Only a homerun just about every time at bat could compensate for the big first baseman's inability to run. He makes 275-pound Frank Howard of the Detroit Tigers look like an Olympic spring champion.

Cepeda was used as a designated hitter in weekend games with the Detroit Tigers and the Minnesota Twins.

There's a Time to Go National And That Time is Now

By MARTY KELLEY

Madison Square Garden, New York City—They flocked to wherever they could get a beer . . . And plenty at that. At that strange impersonal hour that seemed to linger even into the quiet of this city's early morning light, they were in control. and they had a reason to celebrate . . . And God knows they did following their first glance at NIT gold . . . Only the poor get rich.

But they say the richness is in spirit and spirit only. That's about the best way you can describe the total agregation of UMass fans following the first NIT win over Missouri (78-71). Although just yesterday, it remains for tomorrow. If it proved anything it showed just how faith can be quite plausible.

Although the Minutemen had faith they had as well, a heavy dose of talent. Critics questioned that around the corner of 33rd Street (Madison Square Garden) after the UMass reps were fruitless in 1970 (62-55 loss to Marquette) and 1971 (90-49). However, who's in whose class now? The Missouri win represented the singular most impressive hurdle in the history of UMass sports. But what gear do you leave the program in? Now?

"There's no question in my mind, said captain Tom McLaughlin, that we definitely belong on the same court with Missouri and North Carolina. It's about time people started taking us on a national level. For that's what we think of ourselves." If it weren't for Mac's four clutch free throws in the 11th hour of the Garden opener, national would still be squelched with New England.

And so it's the Tar Heels tonight as the love affair with the NIT continues. Although Missouri coach Norm Stewart characterized the Minutemen as a team he couldn't compare to any in the Big Eight, he was quick to realize that this team simply can't be prejudged. For against his Tigers, and soon to be personified against the Tar Heels tonight, there's that little extra that doesn't show up on any Minutemen scouting chart.

If at the Garden, you'll see it tonight. It can be compared to the suppressed rising above the obvious to meet the oppressor head to head. For tonight at Madison Square Garden you'll witness a fight for respectability. Only the Friars of Providence College have reached that plateau. But slowly the Minutemen want to pack their bags, leave the sheltered life of New England, and follow the vagabonds throughout the country. Tonight is their second sojourn out of New England; Missouri was the first . . .

Yes, the word is "national" and a win over the Tar Heels all but puts that word into the UMass basketball vocabulary for all time. You weigh that factor with a two year lease on a 41 point loan to the University of North Carolina, and baby, you got some tension in the city tonight . . .

The walls at the Statler Hilton right now probably look a little gray to the University of Massachusetts basketball team. Saturday night they were all sorts of shapes and sizes to the fans. But it's time to forget the past and look to the future. With North Carolina only hours away the success of the basketball program could be years ahead of it's time with the final score that announcer John Condon delivers to his near capacity Garden gallery.

It's sure to be front page Chapel Hill, North Carolina . . .

Tar Heels Next For UMass

By EARLE BARROLL

The question is simple: What can two years do to a basketball rematch that culminated the initial time in one team completely humiliating its opponent by 41 points?

As of yet no one has pin pointed the answer and only until the two teams in question go at it tonight at Madison Square Garden (7 p.m.) will the solution be finalized.

UMass and North Carolina, two teams that were not scheduled to be in New York if a poll was taken a couple of weeks back, will tap off the quarterfinal round of the National Invitational Tournament at 7 p.m. this eve.

If you go back to March of 1971, the time 11 a.m. on a Saturday morning, you'll find that a UMass team with Julius Erving was annihilated, 90-49, by a Tar Heel squad that was looked upon earlier in that season as the only team in the country to have a shot at interrupting the UCLA dynasty.

It was in that campaign that North Carolina lost a slow down game to South Carolina for the Atlantic Coast championship and then turned on the N.I.T. with the bulk of its wrath in easily disposing of everyone in sight including the team it will be facing tonight, in name, not personnel.

Again this year the Tar Heels found out the perils of their Conference's year ending headache when they were stunningly bounced from the NCAA picture into the N.I.T. compliments of last place Wake Forest, which up to that point had been known only as the school Arnold Palmer attended.

Already Dean Smith's cagers have begun their warpath to the title crushing the Oklahoma circus, Oral Roberts, 82-65 in the second half of the Saturday evening doubleheader. The only thing the Tar Heels had to cope with in this game was stomach cramps from laughing at the ORU offense that consisted of the first man over the ten-second line firing it up at the hoop.

Besides their 11th place ranking in the national polls, North Carolina was picked by Basketball Weekly along with UCLA, Minnesota (also in the N.I.T.) and Memphis State of making it to the final four in St. Louis later this week. Of course "Ernie D" and company would have had something to say about that.

As far as the Minutemen are concerned they haven't had much time to think about their historical opening round victory over Missouri. Right now the emphasis is on a Tar Heels' front court that measures 6'9, 6'10, 6'9 and features Olympian Bob Jones and a backcourt that springs to life around the kamikazee tactics of George Karl, who has to be the most underrated guard in the country.

Leaman has been talking about using Tom Austin (6'9), John Murphy (6'8) and Charlie Peters (6'7) up front together at different junctures of the game depending on the frequency of UMass rebounds. He has also spoken of slowing the game down being that North Carolina was the pioneer in the multi-player thinking that UMass has parlayed into their 20-6 record and N.I.T. invitation.

Whatever both coaches choose to throw at each other there is still that stigma of '71 that surrounds every movement prior to the tip off and during the early stages of the game. Is North Carolina the team it was two years back? Even if they aren't it is still expected that they will appear in the final against Minnesota on Sunday. Where does that leave UMass?

Peter Broaca, who was a UMass assistant in '71 and now the head coach at Coast Guard, saw both the UMass and NC games on Saturday. Before he left on Sunday he made this observation:

"North Carolina is not the team it was two years back. UMass is definitely a better team than it was two years back. But it is only pure speculation as to what this will do to a 41 point margin."

AL SKINNER plows through the middle for one of his 6 field goals in Missouri victory. Bill Endicott (12), and Tom Austin (44) watch the proceedings for the Minutemen while Al Eberhard (44) looks on for Missouri and awaits a possible rebound. (MDC Photo by Gib Fullerton).

If for some reason you can't get to the Garden tonight for the quaterfinal UMass-North Carolina game, follow all the action on WMUA, 91.1 FM. Kent Best and Don Gorski will bring you all the play-by-play and color starting at 6:50 p.m.

The student station will also be piping the game to other communities in the state via a hookup with other local stations. That's UMass and North Carolina on WMUA at 6:50.

The NIT is no time to experiment but that's what WTOY, the university's video tape station, will do tonight at Madison Square Garden. The station will make its first sporting venture in its history with a live taping of the North Carolina-UMass quarterfinal game to be shown on campus in the very near future.

Marty Kelley will handle the play-by-play and Earl Barroll will provide the commentary in this WTOY first. Hopefully, the broadcast will be shown on the wide Blue Wall screen complete with sound this Thursday night...

Wake Forest Beat 'Em

By STEVE CROWE

Does Massachusetts have a chance against the Tar Heels of North Carolina tonight at Madison Square Gardens?

This is the question many fans are asking around campus and the answer might very well affect the number of fans who will make the long, expensive trip back to the City.

Well, Wake Forest was the last team to defeat the Tar Heels. It was during the Atlantic Coast Conference Tournament two weeks ago that the cellar-dwelling Wake Forest cagers stunned everyone with a 54-52 overtime upset victory over previously 8th ranked North Carolina.

With the score tied 48-48 in the closing seconds of regulation time, North Carolina was holding the ball for the last shot. With three seconds left the shot went up, bounced off the rim and Olympian Bobby Jones tapped it in to give N.C. a 50-48 lead. Wake Forest called time out with one second left in the game.

Freshman jumping jack, Lee Foye caught a full court pass from beneath the N.C. basket and relayed the ball through the rim from four feet out at the buzzer.

After both teams scored baskets in the overtime period, N.C. decided to hold the ball for the last shot. Tar Heel star guard George Karl took a hook shot with 5 seconds left, but the shot missed everything. A Wake Forest guard took the rebound and threw the length of the court to another guard who dropped a pass underneath for a Phil Perry game-winning lay-up to end the game.

Wake Forest used tough 2-1-2 and 2-3 zone defenses and a quick three-guard offense to beat North Carolina, according to Wake Forest sportswriter Bill Watson. Almost all of the scoring came from the guards, who shot a tremendous percentage from the floor.

North Carolina doesn't have great outside shooting," says Watson, "but they are tremendously disciplined, very confident, and they don't get rattled. What they do have is a super coach in Dean Smith. He likes to substitute about every two minutes."

George Karl didn't impress Watson that much. "Hotdog Karl isn't that good. He's the type of player who dives into the scorer's table but he chokes. He blew two games against State this year, the same way he did against us, by trying to do it all by himself in the closing seconds."

Of star forward Bob Jones, Watson said, "He moves well without the ball and he shoots a great percentage, but he takes most of his shots from within 8 feet, rarely from any farther out than that. He also plays tough defense."

"The team plays a man to man defense and the players like to jump switch all the time. The guards don't play defense exceptionally well."

UMass Coach Jack Leaman says the Minutemen are "quietly optimistic" about the game with North Carolina.

"We want to bring their big men down away from the basket. The whole objective is to keep the game around the foul line where our quickness will mean more than their height," he said.

Leaman added that "North Carolina is a very fine basketball team and to say we're confident of beating them might be an overstatement."

Minutemen Fall To N.C., 73-63

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

NEW YORK — In the final eight minutes the highly favored (at least 12 points) and taller North Carolina Tarheels pulled away to defeat UMass 73-63 in a physical, multi-player contest last night in Madison Square Garden.

Both sides came out pressing and substituted freely. At the half, the Minutemen had to settle for 30-30 tie. They out hustled, and out-rebounded, North Carolina, but poor shooting kept them from taking a lead. A six-foot-nine senior, Tom Austin, in his final appearance as a Minuteman played his finest game ever to lead all scorers with 21 points and all rebounders with ten.

It was a game of "almost", similar to the first UMass NIT appearance four years ago. The Minutemen played a tough defense, never lost their poise, and only a few missed buckets kept them out of the winner's column. The Tarheels were much taller and when they went one on one under the basket against the Minutemen, they were nearly unstoppable.

The press worked for awhile, but the big men for UMass (Austin, John Murphy, Charlie Peters, and Al Skinner) were hampered by fouls. Skinner fouled out in the final minutes while the rest got four.

The UMies (3,500) were there and controlled the cheering throughout the game, as they had the most to cheer about most of the way. The Tarheels did not destroy the Minutemen with their height advantage, and only a poor shooting performance (38.6 per cent from the field, and 56.3 per cent from the line, as opposed to North Carolina's 44.4 per cent and 73.5 per cent) kept them out of weekend action at Madison Square Garden.

The fans did have a lot to cheer about. The Minutemen came back twice, once in the first half when they were down by seven (25-18) to tie, and then again in the second half, when they were down by ten (51-41) to pull within four with ten minutes to go.

There were many fine performances. Austin was immense as stats testify and was all over the court–only foul trouble and fatigue slowed him down.

Skinner had some great spots against the tall ones (six-nine, six-ten) and only an end line at one point kept the Tarheels from tearing out their hair in frustration. His "this way, that way, and lay up" almost worked.

Another time, Skinner stole the ball twice, and then went at least six inches over the rim to tap the ball between two huge, astonished Tarheels.

The rest of the Cagers kept trying, but shots would not go in. (27 for 70). But the determined Minutemen did not despair, through and made up for it by hustling and getting those rebounds (UMass 34, N.C. 35.)

UMass's superb defense is what kept them in the game. People like Skinner, who shot only 3-10, Bill Endicott 4-13, Tom McLaughlin, 0-0, and Jim Burke 0-3, did not let the defense lapse. The press on a normal shooting night would have found UMass in the game. Foul trouble kept the Minutemen out of the press in the second stanza, but the defense continued at the half court line.

With eight minutes to go, George Karl and reserve six foot nine Mitch Kupchak began to stretch the four point lead. The physical play under the boards began to take effect.

The size and muscle of the Tarheels prevailed, and UMass had no choice but to foul. The point margin lengthened at the end, but it had been a tough contest most of the way. The benches were cleared in the final minutes.

In the first half, UMass and North Carolina took turns burning each others on defense. The clinging North Carolina press, and the trapping UMass press illustrated the different varities of getting the ball.

The height of the Tarheels (six foot nine, six foot nine, six foot ten) up front hurt the Minutemen underneath, but the Heels were hampered by the hustle and quickness of the UMass defense. The action was brutal underneath. Austin and Murphy accumulated three fouls each, while Peters had two. Olympian Bobbie Jones had three for N.C.

For UMass, it was a team effort. Skinner and Burke were active in the press forcing mistakes. Peters was muscling underneath for rebounds, and sliding across the floor for loose balls. UMass hit only 37 per cent of their shots in the first half, and rebounded N.C. 17-16.

"Physical" was the word to describe the action. Eight players for each side saw extensive action. After the game, Peters said "This was the most physical game for us all year. Against Missouri, I was pushing against one man, John Brown, but tonight, there were three of them. While I was pushing against one of them, someone else was pushing against me at the same time."

The UMass players were extremely disappointed after the game. "I think we played well," said Coach Jack Leaman after the game, "They're a fine basketball team, a fine defensive team."

Leaman added, "Their size hurt us. Our kids weren't taking their shots, they were falling away on their shots. Skinner didn't take it to the basket like he normally does, because every time he turned around he had a six-ten player on him."

The turning point, according to N.C. coach Steve Smith, was when "We missed two in a row (shots), we switched to a zone to stop Murphy." That was when there was a four point scoring margin, and then it zoomed to as much as 14 points.

The seniors, Austin, Peters, McLaughlin, and Chuck Olsen, who went in at :41, made their final appearances.

UMass finishes the year at 20 and seven, with Coach Leaman looking ahead already to next year, while North Carolina is 24 and seven, and advances to a Saturday' semi-finals against Nortre Dame.

AAUP Backs MSP Ties

By CINDY GONET

The American Association of University Professors (AAUP) last night endorsed a Professional Unity Agreement with the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) for the purpose of collective bargaining. This ratification is pending the approval of the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP).

The Executive Committee called the special meeting as a result of the MSP's action in obtaining 30 per cent of the faculty's endorsement, and the subsequent formation of the Unity Agreement for the joint effort of the MSP and AAUP in a collective bargaining drive.

This agreement differs from the one endorsed by the AAUP on February 8, in the clauses of acceptance of the AAUP policies stated in the AAUP Red Book, and the modification of the dues structure.

The appropriate dues will be effective upon the ratification by both parties. Local AAUP dues will total $18. Local MSP dues will be $3 and MTA (Massachusetts Teacher's Association), an affiliate of MSP, dues amount to $15.

Effective July 1, 1973, the AAUP factor in the coalition will pay dues of $4 to local AAUP, MTA dues of $76, and optional dues to the National AAUP. MSP will pay $3 to local MSP, $76 to MTA, and optional National dues.

Upon signing of the first collective bargaining contract, the local AAUP will be required to pay $4 to their chapter, MTA dues of $76, and National dues of $20-$36 (depending on rank). MSP will pay $3 to their local chapter, $76 to the MTA, and $25 to the National.

At the outset of the meeting, Chairperson, Joseph Burroughs outlined the history of the AAUP's stand on collective bargaining. Burroughs reported that in October of 1971, the local AAUP voted unanimously to endorse the policy of the National AAUP in pursuing collective bargaining as a major method of realizing goals in higher education.

On February 14 of last year, the local AAUP voted to endorse the National policy, to seek to become the agent for the UMass/Amherst faculty and to authorize the executive council to act for a collective bargaining drive.

In May, authorization and designation cards were distributed. By September, 25 per cent were returned. Fifty per cent of the cards endorsed AAUP as bargaining agent, 35 per cent didn't wish the faculty to engage in collective bargaining and the remaining 15 per cent were undecided or endorsed another agent.

On February 8 of this year a Professional Unity Agreement was drawn up which was presented to the AAUP and ratified with amendments. The issues which were not agreed upon concerned an incompatibility in dues between the MSP and AAUP, and an incomplete endorsement of AAUP policies.

On March 6, the MSP petitioned with authorization and designation cards, receiving over 30 per cent of the faculty's endorsement.

By March 13, the AAUP and MSP attempted a final effort for coalition. Agreement was reached and a draft was submitted at last night's meeting, passing with the approval of 30 of the 43 members present.

The AAUP also filed for the bargaining representative with a 10 per cent show of interest.

On March 27, the MSP will stand a hearing with the State Labor Relations Board. The election for bargaining agent will be held on April 25.

With the approval of the Professional Unity Agreement, the AAUP/MSP will appear on the ballot as affiliates because when the MSP filed with the Labor Relations Board, "it was with the agreement of the executive committee of the AAUP, that an Agreement would amend their positions," Surinder Mehta said, Vice-President and Treasurer of the MSP. "This will not require any new A&D cards," he continued.

Howard Brogan, President of the MSP pointed out the reason why the coalition would prove much stronger than either of the unions attempting to be the agents, "The MSP has more lobbying power than the AAUP, which doesn't agree with lobbies on ethical grounds. The NEA (National Educational Association) the National chapter of the MSP has 1-1/4 million members; the AAUP has 90,000 nationally." Brogan also pointed out that the MSP—MTA—NEA is financially more prepared to equip the agent with needed resources and staff.

Dorm Rents To Increase

By JOAN FASSNACHT

Dormitory room rents will apparently increase anywhere from $4.00 to $11.00 next semester, depending on the residential area a student will live.

The Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee recommended to the Administration an increase of $4 for residents of Orchard Hill, raising their rent to $675. Residents of Southwest will pay an additional $9.00 or $680.

Because Brett and Gorman have been renovated, their rent will rise from $611 to $615. Rent increases for the other traditional dorms were not mentioned. The rent for Sylvan will remain at $700.

In order to hold the rent for Sylvan at $700., it was advised in a revised proposal that the rents for the other areas on campus would have to be raised more to cover the deficit that exists there. Due to the fact that Brett, Gorman and Orchard Hill have already paid off construction costs, their rent increase was held to $4.00. An increase from $611 to $615 was proposed for Brett and Gorman; and to Orchard Hill an increase from $671 to $675.

Because Southwest subsidizes the Sylvan Area, a $9.00 increase

Electoral College To Choose SGA President

By MARY MULLOY

The President of the Student Government Association will be elected by electoral college for the first time as a result of a referendum passed by the student body two weeks ago. Previously, the Student Senate was solely responsible for the election.

Barry Cohen, Chairperson of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee who first proposed the electoral college and David Booker, Speaker of the Senate, announced the arrangements yesterday for a convention and election, which will be held April 23, in the Campus Center Auditorium.

Any undergraduate in the student body wishing to run for SGA President must first obtain an application for nomination, which is available in the Student Senate office as of today. He must then acquire 25 undergraduate signatures supporting his candidacy and return the application to the Senate office by 5 p.m., April 16. A list of candidates will be published in the Collegian the following day.

Representatives of area governments and the senate comprise the members of the Electoral college. Each area will have a certain number of electoral votes: The Senate will have 48 votes, Southwest and the Commuters Executive Assembly will have 9, and Orchard Hill, Sylvan, Central, Northeast and the Greeks will have 6 votes each.

Candidates should contact their area government representatives and campaign to solicit their support and votes. Students who have a preference will have until April 23rd to inform their representatives of their choice. At the convention the candidates will present speeches after which the voters will meet in caucuses and vote to determine the winner.

The winner must receive the majority of the total 96 electoral votes. Candidates will receive only the proportion of votes awarded to them, not all or none as in the national elections.

Cohen said that the new method is a "move towards decentralization and lessening the power of the Senate." He prefers to think of the electoral college as a "transitional stage between senate control of the election and popular vote."

However, Booker said that whether this will occur depends on the "future composition of the student senate and the student body." Booker also emphasized the fact that he thought the President of the Student Government Association has a very important influential position with a lot of responsibility. In addition to being a Trustee, the President serves on a number of committees and reserves the right to speak at Faculty Senate Meetings.

Initially, the referendum was voted on by the student body. Of three possible choices 1,750 students voted for the electoral college, 518 students voted for senate control (the old method) and 1742 students voted for the popular vote. The electoral college won by a slim margin of eight votes. Later the referendum passed the Senate and has been amended to the SGA Constitution.

Any potential candidates or students having questions should contact Cohen or Booker at the Student Senate office, 545-0341.

'Bogus Bills' On Campus

By BILL DENSMORE

If cashiers have been looking at you a second time lately when you hand them a $20 bill it isn't because of your roaring good looks.

Actually you and your 20 are being sized-up for honesty because there have been a number of "bogus bills" floating around campus in recent weeks.

According to Secret Service agent Robert E. Lilley of the Boston bureau, several bills are still being circulated from a Springfield counterfeiting ring broken up last December 22nd.

Because of the publicity surrounding the seizure of the plates and plant during December, some innocent holders of the bogus bills have saved them hoping to unload them on unsuspecting recipients later on, according to the secret service bureau.

The bills have turned up at the Campus Center store, the various Mu[illegible]ties on campus, and at several banks in town. All are denominations of $20, but a single fake $10 has been discovered.

According to the secret service office and several recipients of the bad money, the bills were printed using a photographic, off-set method rather than by engraving. Consequently the detailed shading behind Andrew Jackson's portrait on the front of the bill was blurred.

The backs of the fake 20's were printed darker green than the real stuff, and the paper used was smoother, thinner, and had no red or black threads as real money does.

All the fake bills have serial numbers which begin and end in A, and all were issued at the Federal Reserve Bank of Boston (hence a "1" shows in each of four corners on the front of the bill).

The bills are series 1969A.

If you have one of the bills you're out $20 because they're not worth the paper they're printed on to anybody. The secret service yesterday advised that the bills be turned into the University Police Department along with any information about how they were obtained.

An attempt to knowingly pass funny money is considered a serious federal offense, even if the person trying to pass it was not the original counterfeiter.

Students or staff with information about the bills may contact Detective Phil Cavanaugh at the Department of Public Safety, 5-2121 for information about what to do.

No, this isn't President Nixon's latest way of shoring up the devalued dollar!

The first six serial numbers listed here are fake bills, according to the Secret Service. The last three have been provided by managers of various area and campus business as bills they have found to be fake, and therefore should no longer be in circulation.

If you think you have a fake bill, check with Detective Phil Cavanaugh of the University Police, 5-2121.

Senior Committee Votes On Funding

By DON GLICKSTEIN

The Senior Committee voted Monday night to spend $2500 for Senior day festivities. A subcommittee was formed to plan details for the day. Plans will include unlimited quantities of beer for imbiding graduates, beer mugs, and bands.

Other sub-committees were formed to recommend the class gift and to interview prospective student speakers for Commencement.

In addition to the student speaker, an informed souce said that an invitation for featured Commencement speaker was sent to Ms. W.E.B. DuBois, wife of the late founder of the N.A.A.C.P. and author of The Souls of Black Folk. It has not been learned whether Ms. DuBois has accepted the invitation.

Except for the student speaker, all Commencement orators are chosen by the Board of Trustees.

Seniors pay a $10 graduation fee which pays for their diploma, their caps and gowns, and the pomp and circumstance of the ceremony.

The Student Senate also allocated $14,000 to the seniors. Senior day expenses, the class gift, and a compulsory contribution to future alumni expenses are financed by the money.

The next Senior Committee meeting will be held on Sunday, April 8, in Room 176 Campus Center at 6:30 p.m. The Class Gift sub-committee will meet on Thursday, April 5 at 6:30 pm in Room 174 Campus Center. All seniors are invited to attend both meetings.

D.C. Theft Trial Continued To June

By DON BISHOP

The trial of two former UMass employees accused of stealing an unspecified amount of meat from the Worcester Dining Commons, was continued until June, yesterday, upon the request of one of the defendant's attorney.

Hampshire County Superior Court Judge Paul A. Tamburello granted the continuance to lawyer Edward N. Donnellan, whose firm is representing one of the defendants in the case: Raymond M. Grabiec, former head cook at the Worcester Dining Commons.

Donnellan asked for the continuance on behalf of his partner Daniel M. Keys, who will be representing Grabiec. Donnellan stated that Keys was currently on vacation in Florida, and therefore was not able to attend yesterday's session.

The other defendant in the case, ex-UMass patrolman Thomas F. Quinlan, was not represented by an attorney yesterday, but his case was automatically continued until June, because the trial of both men is at present a joint one. Whether a move will be made in the future to sever the cases, is still a matter of speculation.

This latest sitting of the Superior Court is due to end this week and it will not re-convene until sometime in June.

The two men were secretly indicted by the Hampshire County Grand Jury last month, on charges of taking property from the Boarding Hall Trust Fund of the University. Both pleaded innocent to the charges at that time.

The office of District Attorney John Callahan is representing the state in the case, based on their own investigation into the incident along with that of the Campus Police. Initial evidence presented by Callahan brought the Grand Jury's indictments.

Quinlan and Grabiec were asked to resign from their jobs back on December 15, following a Department of Public Safety (Campus Police) investigation into an inventory shortage reported on December 9.

A food check taken at that time by Food Service employees, revealed the loss of a still unspecified amount of meat from Worcester Dining Commons, where Grabiec was head cook.

The December investigation by the police followed on one made in November. The earlier investigation came in response to an MDC story purporting Food Department thefts by dining commons employees.

While no evidence of theft was found in November, the investigations of December did bring official allegations of larceny.

One area newspaper has reported that Quinlan may seek compensation for the loss of his job, if the final outcome of the court proceedings are in his favor.

Ballot Restrictions Approved

By VERNON A. GUIDRY Jr.
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Holding that the one-man, one-vote principle does not apply in such cases, the Supreme Court Tuesday agreed to permit voting by property owners only in such governmental units as watershed districts.

Two 6 to 3 decisions approved ballot restrictions of districts in California and Wyoming where votes were given only to landowners, including corporations, with the votes weighted according to the size of the holding.

First declaring that the districts had limited purposes and did not exercise "normal governmental authority," the majority said a state "could rationally conclude that landowners are primarily burdened and benefited by the establishment and operation of watershed districts and that it may condition the vote accordingly."

Justice William O. Douglas dissented sharply, saying the majority did violence not only to the Constitution but the environment as well.

Writing for the majority in the California case, Justice William H. Rehnquist said the Tulare Lake Basin Water District falls into exceptions in the court's previous ruling extending the vote in popular elections.

The restrictions had been attacked by small landowners and non-land-owning residents as unconstitutional.

"Nothing in the equal protection clause of the Constitution precluded California from limiting the voting for directors of the district by totally for directors of the district by totally excluding those who merely reside within the district," said Rehnquist.

Noting that a function of the district was flood control, Douglas said all should vote equally, be they landowners or one of the 77 persons who make their homes in the district.

Douglas said the largest landowner, J.G. Boswell Co., votes 37,825 times and in 1969 voted its corporate interests rather than those of the residents in refusing to allow diversion of flood waters.

"One corporation can outvote 77 individuals ... Four corporations can exercise these governmental powers as they choose ... the result is a corporate political kingdom undreamed of by those who wrote our Constitution," Douglas said in a dissent joined by Justices Thurgood Marshall.

Under Orders From Kleindienst

FBI Files Kept Secret

By TOM SEPPY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Under order from the attorney general, L. Patrick Gray III refused continuously Tuesday to answer questions on material contained in FBI files.

Sen. Birch Bayh, D—Ind., said the order by Atty. Gen. Richard G. Kleindienst and President Nixon has given what he called a "black eye" to Gray, who testified before the Senate Judiciary Committee during hearings on his motion to be the FBI director.

Sen. John V. Tunney, D—Calif., said Kleindienst's action "clearly demonstrates that the attorney general is concerned about revaluations contained in the Watergate file. We have learned some things from information provided by Mr. Gary; the question is 'how much more is there in those files'."

At the White House, a Nixon administration spokesman said support of Gray for the FBI post has not diminished and that Nixon had not abandoned him, as alleged in a newspaper account.

"I have the impression that the President's support is exactly the same as when he sent it nomination up, and that is full," said Sen. Hugh Scott, R—Pa., a leading administration spokesman on Capitol Hill.

Scott said, however, that the administration support of Gray "does not include the television spectacular on Capitol Hill."

"The White House has nothing to hide," he said. "And that is an authorized statement."

Gray declined to discuss what he called "matters of substance." In his five previous appearances, Gray has discussed data contained in the FBI files and supplied, upon request from committee members. the information pertaining to investigations conducted by his agency.

Under orders given to him Monday, Gray said, he could make information in the FBI files on the bugging of Democratic headquarters in the Watergate complex available to four persons- the committee chairman, the ranking minority member and the counsel for both political sides of the committee. Previously he said any member of the Senate, but no staff member, could see the material.

Gray said he did not question the orders of the attorney general because "I'm a bureau chief in the executive branch. I serve at the pleasure of the President. I take my orders from the attorney general. I do accept those orders."

U.S. Considering Proposal To Extend Peace Commission

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)-The United States is considering proposing an extension of the four-party joint military peacekeeping commission for Vietnam beyond its expiration date of March 28, U.S. sources said Tuesday.

The objective would be "to create a better atmosphere for a true and realistic cease-fire" and to accomplish many tasks left undone, one source said.

Such a proposal also might help the United States to maintain a forum for its charges that North Vietnam is infiltrating large numbers of troops and war materials southward and preclude resumption of large-scale hostilities.

The possible extention proposal has been a close-kept secret in both Washington and Saigon. Although it has been discussed with the Saigon government, it has not yet been formally proposed to the North Vietnamese and the Viet Cong delegations to the four-party joint military commission.

"I have no information whatsoever on this subject," said a spokesman for the U.S. delegation. "There could ultimately be a request for an extension, but I have nothing on this. This is all I can say."

The United States has been unhappy with the failure of the commission to implement a true cease-fire and to check the alleged North Vietnamese infiltration and other violations of the peace agreement. The military commission's failure also has hampered the work of the four-nation International Commission on Control and Supervision, which also has been a disappointment thus far.

The Paris peace agreement provided that the four-party military commission would be dissolved within 60 days after signing of the agreement Jan. 27. North Vietnam and the United States would pull out, and the military peacekeeping role would be taken up by a commission made up of representatives of the two opposing South Vietnamese parties-the Saigon government and the Viet Cong.

Perhaps the commission's biggest accomplishment has been the carrying out of the repatriation of both American and Vietnamese military prisoners, although it has failed to reach an agreement yet on the exchange of Vietnamese civilian prisoners.

Both Viet Cong and North Vietnamese spokesmen said that efforts would be made to complete the repatriation of American prisoners as well as Vietnamese military prisoners by next Sunday, three days in advance of the deadline set by the peace agreement.

The International Control Commission meanwhile intervened to prevent serious confrontation between Saigon military forces and Communist command troops.

Officials of the four-nation peacekeeping commission said it had agreed to investigate charges by the South Vietnamese command and the United States that North Vietnamese and Viet Cong forces had laid siege to two government base camps at points 30 and 50 miles north of Saigon.

U.S. Ready To Conclude Canal Treaty

By WILLIAM F. NICHOLSON
Associated Press Writer

PANAMA (AP) - The United States said Tuesday it is ready to conclude a new treaty with Panama on the U.S.-run Canal Zone, but is not yet willing to give up control and defense of the waterway itself.

U.S. Ambassador John Scali, making his first full speech before the United Nations Security Council, acknowledged that the current, 70-year-old treaty "needs to be brought into line with the realities of the world today, as well as with the mutual interests of both countries."

Foreign Minister Juan Antonio Tack of Panama, replying to Scali's speech, accused the United States of wanting only "to change the name but maintain the status" of the Panama Canal.

"The situation is potentially explosive and might endanger world peace," Tack said. "Nine years of negotiations have not brought us forward...."

Scali said the United States "is ready to conclude a new treaty promptly.

"At the same time, we believe it necessary that the United States continue to be responsible for the operation and defense of the canal for an additional, specified period of time.

Dollar 'Seesaws'...

By DONALD FORBES
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP)—The dollar was unsettled in world money markets Tuesday, notching gains against several key European currencies but slackening against the French franc and the pound sterling.

Dealers said they were not surprised by the up-and-down state of currency exchanges. Dealing was not heavy on this second day of exchange operations since the adoption in Paris last Friday of a new floating system of international exchange rates.

Gold markets were also subdued, an indication that monetary stability is returning after two speculative attacks on the dollar this year, the first of which led to a 10 per cent devaluation.

Definite trends still have to emerge from the floating markets and rates of the major European currencies veered sharply against the dollar between the opening and close.

European dollar price changes were slight, however, and one New York international banker said the money markets were simply marking time Tuesday, awaiting Washington's response to prime interest rate increases posted Monday by several U.S. banks.

Dr. Arthur F. Burns, chairman of the Nixon administration's Committee on Interest and Dividends, scheduled a meeting Thursday with representatives of the banks to discuss the 1/2 percent increase to 6-3/4 per cent.

The prime rate is the minimum fee banks charge on loans to their best corporate customers. It often sets the pattern for other interest rates in the U.S. economy.

The New York banker said interest rate differentials from country to country were one factor which could contribute to mixed movements among currencies such as occurred Tuesday.

In Frankfurt, the dollar closed against the West German mark at 2.8280 compared with 2.875 Monday.The final rate showed a recovery for the American currency, which at the start of the day had dipped sharply to 2.8160 marks.

In Milan, where the official exchange market reopened Tuesday, a day later than in other European centers, the dollar strengthened immediately against the Italian lira.

...As Nixon Grabs...

By JOHN LENGEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-The Senate Tuesday approved another year of presidential authority to regulate wages and prices after voting to restore some federal rent controls.

But the Senate generally backed away from moves to tighten President Nixon's approach to controlling inflation.

The final version of the bill was passed 85 to 2 and sent to the House. The "no" votes were cast by Sens. Marlow Cook, R-Ky., and Mark Hatfield, R-Ore.

Before approving the bill, senators rejected, 52 to 36, an amendment to freeze wages, prices, rents and interest for six months.

The rent-control amendment, sponsored by Sen. Clifford Case, R-N.J., would apply to low and moderate rental housing in some 60 metropolitan areas, rolling back rent hikes to early January when Phase 2 ended.

Luxury housing would be excluded, leaving poshness to be defined by the Cost of Living Council.

For rents to be controlled, there would have to be a vacancy rate of 5.5 per cent or less.

Exactly which metropolitan areas would fall under the controls is uncertain and remains to be determined by the Cost of Living Council if the bill is enacted into law.

...The 'Brass Ring'

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Nixon administration Tuesday sought in a variety of ways to assure American housewives that food prices will not keep going up indefinitely.

The Cost of Living Council issued a white paper saying that food prices should increase at a much slower rate in the second half of 1973.

The Council's deputy director issued a statement in apparent conflict with Herbert Stein, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, but the Council corrected his statement later. Deputy Director James McLane had said in a statement that government actions to increase the food supply "will result in lower prices during the latter half of this year."

The Council said later it was correcting his statement to read that government actions "will result in lower food price increases . . ."

Stein and the Council had said that only the rate of increase would decline.

Also regarding food prices, Secretary of Agriculture Earl L. Butz told congressmen there are "a few damn fools" within the administration who disagree with his position against a freeze on prices farmers get for food products.

But he said he felt President Nixon's statement that the government would not impose such curbs was "a firm one."

McLane had said he would not totally rule out the need for controls if food prices continue their upward spiral.

At the Council's news conference, McLane and Gary Seevers, special assistant to the Council of Economic Advisers, said the rate of increase in food prices would decline by the end of the year but the overall retail price of most foods could still be higher than at present.

VP Testifies Before Senate

ITT 'Plan' Revealed

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-ITT vice president William R. Merriam told the Senate Tuesday his company pressured the White House and the State Department to threaten Chile with economic collapse.

Chile's Marxist president, Salvador Allende "had stolen our property without compensation," he said.

Merriam, who headed the Washington office of International Telephone & Telegraph Corp., acknowledged that the purpose of the pressure was to force Allende "to pay us off." Merriam added: "That's all we wanted."

The ITT official, who is now stationed in Italy, was the leadoff witness as a special Senate foreign relations subcommittee launched an investigation of the influence exerted by large American firms with vast holdings in other countries.

The soft-spoken witness resisted suggestions by subcommittee members and lawyers that he did more than exchange information with William P. Broe, the Central Intelligence Agency's top man for clandestine operations in Latin America.

Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., asked: "Did you consider yourself an agent of the CIA?"

Merriam responded: "Oh, no, Sen. Percy."

"I talked to Mr. Broe many times, just when we had something to tell each other," he added.

The ITT official said "the highest people we went to" were Arnold Nachmanoff, then chief adviser to Henry Kissinger for Latin America, and Charles Meyer, assistant secretary of state for Latin America.

Among the suggestions ITT made to the government in 1970-71, he said, was that "entry of money into Chile should be temporarily stopped with a view toward a total cutoff."

The witness said the response from Kissinger's office as "a little more than perfunctory." As for the State Department, he said ITT considered it less important than the office of President Nixon's national security adviser.

Merriam also testified that an 18-point program aimed at Chile and prepared by Jack Neal, ITT's international relations director, was sent to Penter G. Peterson, then the assistant to Nixon for international economic affairs. It suggested the government have American, foreign and international banks restrict loans to Chile and that U.S. munitions manufacturers be asked to delay arms shipments there and that the government "get to reliable sources in the Chilean armed forces."

If Allende was pressured, Merriam said, "he might be more congenial to paying us."

ITT claimed a 70 per cent interest in the Chile Telephone Co., worth about $150 million, when it was expropriated by the Allende government in September, 1971.

Britain Offers Peace Plan: Limited N. Irish Self-Rule

By ARTHUR L. GAVSHON
Associated Press Writer

LONDON (AP) - Britain proposed a Northern Ireland peace plan Tuesday that would hand back limited self-rule to feuding Protestants and Roman Catholics- if they agree to share power.

Downtown London and the British Parliament were under a bomb alert as William Whitelaw, British governor of the torn province, outlined a new constitution of compromise that he hopes will end 3-1/2 years of Irish terror and strife.

Its main terms as presented to the somber-faced British lawmakers:

—A new 80-seat assembly will replace Ulster's 51-year-old Stormont Parliament, disbanded in 1972.

—Members will be elected by the fall on a proportional representation system giving voters the chance to name first, second and other choices.

—The assembly will be topped by an executive, or "cabinet," which will fairly reflect the strength of each party. Each member of the executive, or "minister," will run a department and will be advised by a committee chosen from among assemblymen on the basis, again, of reflecting party strengths.

—For the indefinite future Britain will keep control of security and take on new powers to beat militant extremists of both sides.

—A charter of human rights will outlaw political and religious discrimination.

—A Council of Ireland will be set up to promote north-south cooperation if both sides agree to participate in its work and to the preconditions the British have set for it.

The proposals were made in a White Paper, or official policy document.

First reactions to the British plan were guarded because several key parties and groups had agreed in advance to consider carefully the 34-page document before commenting. The Official and Provisional wings of the Irish Republican Army said they wanted time to study it.

But a leader of the militant Protestants poured cold water on the proposals. "We'll make it unworkable," insisted William Craig.

Bombings and gun attacks persisted in the province, meanwhile, a bomb wrecked a hotel in south Belfast. In Londonderry a British soldier was lightly wounded by a sniper's bullet.

Security precautions unprecedented in peacetime were mounted in London as the government unveiled its new proposals.

In substance it was a settlement that calls upon both sides to yield something of their aspirations in order to end the anguish of a people who already have seen 754 killed, thousands maimed and millions of dollars of property destroyed or damaged.

Britain's peace clearly requires that Protestants, who form two-thirds of Northern Ireland's 1-1/2 million people, and Catholics must agree in advance to share the limited power that Britain is offering to restore.

Whitelaw offered a twofold pledge in the hope of reconciling the conflicting aims of Protestants who want to keep Ulster part of the United Kingdom and Catholics who want it united with the Irish republic.

Whitelaw addressed yet another warning to militant extremists of both sides that Britain intends taking "all steps necessary" to end violence and gun rule.

Walpole: Injunction Ends Strike

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP)-Striking guards at Walpole state prison returned to work under a court order Tuesday, but they were kept away from inmates because of fear of violence.

Meanwhile, state police and supervisory personnel who filled in for the guards during their five-day walkout remained in charge at the maximum security prison.

About 60 guards, more than usual, showed up for the 7 a.m. shift after a Supreme Court order ended their strike, called Thursday to demand more control over the prison.

The men will be put back into contact with the inmates gradually in an attempt to avert trouble, according to Mike Widmer, a spokesman for the state Department of Human Services.

"For the men to walk back into the prison en masse," said Widmer, "would be throwing fuel on an already volatile situation."

"Guards and inmates already were angry with each other before the strike," he said. "Imagine the hooting and cat calling on the part of the prisoners when the guards walk back in. We've got to do this gradually to keep things calm."

Correction Commissioner John O. Boone was at the prison Tuesday to direct the "phased re-entry" program.

Boone also announced that a manpower study would be made at Walpole. He said each post at the institution would be investigated to determine how many men were needed to run it and how best to use the available manpower.

He said he hoped to leave cell block 9 closed and use cell block 10 as a segregation unit, "enabling the department to place the manpower that was used for the facility in other programs."

The Correction Department suspended 111 officers for five days without pay for taking part in the walkout. They still face disciplinary hearings Thursday and possible dismissal.

However, Howard Doyle, a guards union spokesman said, "if they fire on employe, there will be a new day in Massachusetts for public employes, because we represent them all."

While they were waiting to be put back into their regular prison jobs, Widmer said, the guards were being instructed on "what their responsibilities are in the prison."

Guards had complained before the walkout that prison rules and regulations were vague.

Boone said he would send 35 Walpole guards to the State Police Academy for eight weeks retraining and would not allow them to have contact with the prisoners until they had completed retraining.

Augustus Camelio, a lawyer for the labor council that represents the guards union, said he was going to the attorney general's office to charge that Boone had violated the court order by not letting the guards return to work.

The men should have resumed their regular assignments, he said, instead of waiting for new orders.

Supreme Court Justice Edward Hennessey issued the back-to-work injunction Monday night. He said it was "crystal clear" that the guards were participating in an illegal work stoppage.

Camelio had argued that the men left their jobs because they "lived in fear" after plans were announced to release some inmates from segregation into the general prison population.

Police Storm UAthens; 50 Injured, 30 Arrested

ATHENS (AP)-Police wielding clubs stormed Athens University's law school on Tuesday and ejected hundreds of students staging a sit-in to demand greater academic autonomy. More than 50 students were reported injured and 30 arrested.

Hundreds of students chanted antigovernment slogans and unfurled banners reading, "Americans Get Out." It was the first time in the two-month-long student unrest that anti-American feelings came into view.

Strong police units waited hours for their chance to enter the law building. As the student gathered on the roof, taunting police in the streets below, fire ladders were brought to the scene.

Police, with university officials' permission, scurried up the ladders to the top of the building and stormed the entrances below. Fights with students broke out as policemen brought their clubs down hard to force them out of the law faculty.

Students ran out in chaos and later regrouped on corners near the school to scream at police. They fled up side streets under the threat of police charges, and peace slowly returned to the area.

Later in an announcement, the university senate described the student gathering as "illegal" and said police were called in to clear out the school.

The government announced that only 12 students an 11 policemen were injured in the clashes. It said those arrested were being released after questioning.

However, many of the injured students were reliably reported to have gone to private doctors for treatment to avoid having their names taken by police.

RFK Jr. Charged With Speeding

PLYMOUTH, N.H. (AP)-Robert F. Kennedy Jr., son of the late senator, Tuesday told Plymouth District Court he would plead guilty to a speeding charge-four days after he failed to appear for a hearing, a court spokesman said.

Kennedy, a 19-year-old Harvard freshman, was scheduled to appear in court last Friday on a charge of driving 65 in a 35-mile-an-hour zone March 4 in Campton near the Waterville Valley ski area.

Deputy Clerk Sandra Poitrais said he defaulted on Friday, but telephoned the court Tuesday and said he would mail $30 to cover the fine when he sent a waiver form pleading guilty.

If Kennedy had not settled with the court within two weeks, a warrant "most likely" would have been issued for his arrest, Lt. Col. Paul O'Leary of the state police said.

Spokesman for the youth's uncle, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., said in Washington that the younger Kennedy couldn't appear in court Friday because he had an exam Saturday.

They said he tried repeatedly to call the court Friday and again Monday, but could not get through.

Moundville Prison Story

By ROBERT C. WELLING
Associated Press Writer

MOUNDSVILLE, W.Va. (AP) One inmate was stabbed to death and two others injured Tuesday when prisoners at the West Virginia Penitentiary took five guards hostage, Gov. Arch A. Moore Jr. said.

Moore, in Charleston, said the body of the unidentified inmate was found in an area of the prison swept by fire soon after the disturbance broke out. Officials would not speculate on the circumstances of the slaying and it was not known how the blaze began.

Two inmates were hospitalized for stab wounds in the chest, apparently received during a scuffle with other prisoners, officials said. One man was listed in fair condition and the other in serious condition.

About 200 prisoners, some reportedly armed with homemade knives, were locked inside the South Hall of the century-old institution, but it was not immediately known how many were taking part in the disorder, according to Norman Yost, an aide to Moore who met with the inmates.

Prison officials said earlier that a core of 30 to 35 "militant" prisoners were behind the disturbance. Yost said the insurgents were planning to keep the hostages overnight.

Yost identified the men being held hostage as Lloyd Miller, Larry O'Neil, Billy Richard Thomas, Basil Raley and Alfred Fernandez.

He said the prisoners' demands, which he described as "minimal," had been met and said he would maintain telephone contact with the inmates throughout the night.

Officials who met earlier with the rebellious inmates said the main demand appeared to be release from solitary confinement. At a news conference later, however, Yost did not specify which demands had been met.

Moore said he spoke by telephone with the five captive guards and they assured him they were being treated well and had no reason to fear for their safety.

Acting Warden William Wallace said the disturbance began when one inmate in solitary quarters overpowered three guards leading him to a shower. He said the inmate took keys from one of the guards and released the other prisoners.

A prison spokesman said the inmates were believed to be armed with knives hand-fashioned from scraps of metal from the metal shop and eating utensils. Guards working among inmates are armed with nightsticks.

Normal prison industries, including the manfacture of license plates and mattresses, continued, but inmates not involved in the work remained in their cells.

The prison, located in West Virginia's northern panhandle, houses more than 500 inmates.

Helping Youths

By LYNN TIMMINS

I am writing concerning the D.Y.S. (Dept. of Youth Service) Youths, Detention Centers, and halfway houses. I am really unhappy about all the above. I think once a youth first gets in trouble, you should try to have a long eye-to-eye talk. You could call it "Truth or Consequences." I mean, try to see what the real problem is, where it begins, maybe the parents, friends, job relations and many others.

Right now, what I see is going on with the youths, that I have known myself, is that, they have served time at Westfield Detention Center, then if they're cool there, they get paroled home or to a halfway house nearby. I want to try to make people see how wrong this is. I have served time myself there. Yes, I got let go, placed, replaced, again and again, and it didn't help me at the beginning, because there was not one person, grown up, or whatever, who I can actually name, that really took some extra time to sit or spend some real person to person time and say, Lynn what are you about, what do you feel, who would you like to become, and many other important questions that I think should have been discussed with myself and other youths at Westfield Detention Center during our time spent there.

Because of the lack of communication, or what I call non-communication, we never felt important. Now I am placed in a foster home myself. I got it together, I'm working, and I am enjoying my life. What I am pushing for now is to see or hear people that are really trying to help, I mean HELP these youths, not the help of just placing, but really knowing, WHERE THE YOUTHS ARE AT, not just at the bitter moment, but what are they really about deep inside. No one takes the time, I can see. That is why I am willing to go back to Westfield Detention Center to help my friends who I know that need help. I can't because once a person is set free, they are not allowed back in unless they are charged with a crime again.

Also, with volunteers coming and going, what do they do? What do they do while they are there for an hour or two? They play games. Do they really care? I would like to have your response on what you think. I am the same age and I think I can help them, I know I can help inside, behind locked doors. I can really reach them and know their feelings.

Why can't I be allowed to return as a volunteer, to go back and help, not for recreation, but because I honestly care? I was one of them once.

Pentagon Silverware

"Mr. President, Brigadeer General Rich Mann is calling on line 2. He says that it's urgent."

"Thank you, Miss Oddbody. I'll take the call. Ahem! Hello, General Mann. My secretary told me it was urgent. What seems to be the problem?"

"Well, Mr. President, it has come to our attention recently that the Pentagon has been subject to a great deal of larceny."

"Those damned Ruskies!! Have they taken any of our secret documents?"

"Well, no--not exactly, Mr. President. I was referring to the theft of..."

"Don't tell me they've stolen some of our computers!"

"No, Mr. President."

"Then what have they stolen, General Mann?"

"Silverware, sir."

"Silverware?"

"Yes, sir, silverware. At the last count, the following items had been reported stolen: 11,700 plates; 18,000 knives; 21,000 forks; and 21,00 spoons—not to mention other items such as food cranes and napkin holders."

"Well, what have you done about this problem so far, General Mann?"

"Well sir, we've called in the Pentagon Security Force, and we now have a number of plainclothesmen circulating throughout each cafeteria. Earlier, we were considering having metal detectors at all the exits, but with all the brass that goes through the Pentagon each day, that idea was quickly voted down."

"Well, then, General Mann, it seems like you've handled the problem quite sufficiently. What more could you possibly need that I could supply you with?"

"The National Guard, sir."

"The National Guard?!"

"Yes sir, the National Guard."

"General Mann, don't you think that's a little extreme?"

"No sir! You see, my theory is, if you'll allow me to say so, that those dirty 'Commies' are planning to steal the Pentagon silverware, melt it down, and sell it back to the United States at a high price. They hope that this will bring about a silver crisis that will destroy our national economy, and frankly, Mr. President, I'm not one for letting our economy go down the drain. That's why we have to take this problem and nip it in the bud. Let's crush those 'Commies' before they start spreading out to the other buildings in Washington. One thing that's always true about those 'Commies'— you give them an inch and they'll take a mile. If we let them have the Pentagon, the next thing they'll want is the White House, and slowly but surely, all the buildings in the city will fall like dominos. Mr. President, someone like you who's always had such a distinguished record at getting those 'Commies'—I mean, when you got Algier Hiss and all those other traitors, you reminded me so much of Joe McCarthy. Mr. President, you've got to put your foot down!! Send in the National Guard and crush those 'Commies' like you did at Kent State!"

"Well, I must say, General Mann, that I always have cherished those days. That was when people knew the difference between right and wrong, democracy and communism. You've handled the situation quite well so far, and I don't see any reason to doubt your ability now. Therefore, you may take whatever steps you deem necessary to alleviate the problem at hand and I will have National Guard troops sent in to assist you."

"Thank you, Mr. President, and may I say that I have complete faith in you. I know that you've just been pretending to play patsy with those 'Commies', so you can get 'em with their backs turned and wipe them out."

"Thank you for the vote of confidence, General Mann. I hope our decision will serve to capture the culprit or culprits responsible for these crimes. Goode--bye, General Mann."

"Good-bye Mr. President. Peace be with you."

"Miss Oddbody, could you place a call through to my wife, please?"

"Yes, Mr. President."

"Those were the good old days!"

"Mr. President, Mrs. Nixon is on line 3."

"Thank you, Miss Oddbody. Hello Pat, I have some bad news to tell you. I think Spiro's been stealing again."

Take A Break

School is like an orgasm. The beginning of the semester starts off slowly, but exciting. Then things begin to work their way up a bit until so much is happening at one time that everything starts to spin and then, boom, it's all over before you know it.

This week alone I have three midterms exams to take, two termpapers to write, and three birthday presents to send out.

Thank God all next week is spring vacation.

Vacation. Ten days of absolutely nothing to do. Ten days just given to you to do with whatever you feel like doing. A whole week plus two weekends of no classes and none of those afternoons-in-the-Bluewall when there's nothing else to do. Ten days to go home and sleep later every morning and eat home cooked food for a change. Ah, can't wait to go home and do all the things that I've been wanting to do since the last time I was there.

But it seems as though you never get to do all those things. You never get anything done that you want when you go home. Instead of finding the old gang of friends that you like to get high with and galavant around, you usually wind up taking your grandmother to the supermarket or bumping into your ninth grade algebra teacher that flunked you.

Home. Where you're the prodigal child returning from the difficulties of higher education. Where you walk down the street and you find that there's really not that much to do so you wind up going home and taking a nap. Where the strangest things always happen to you, like getting picked up hitchiking in a corvette by some kid you used to babysit for. Where you can sit down and have a heavy conversation with the milkman at 7:30 a.m. who'll give you all the town gossip that you've been missing. Blecch.

But it's your vacation and you can do with it whatever you please.

You can always drive down to Florida and spend a few days in the sun and think of how Jamaica is only a little bit further. Or, you can always leave school a week before the vacation starts and head out for the west coast and see how ugly L.A. is for yourself. Yeah, but those hectic kind of vacations always leave you a little bit spaced out when you try and return to academia. It's as though you need a vacation from your vacation.

But no matter what you do with your vacation, think of it as a change in pace. It's funny, but you always seem to nave a good time when you take a break. Things are always more fun to do when you don't have to do them. Take a break; you'll feel better for it.

So, if school is like an orgasm, then I guess that vacation is like a quickie: short, sweet, and often - just what you needed.

Those Damn Indians

By MICHAEL MULDOWNEY

The American Indian has long been one of our favorite minorities to oppress. Since Chris Columbus in 1492 sailed across the ocean blue and took back several Indians to amuse Queen Isabella, the red man has been progressively robbed of his lands and property as, of course, he deserved to be.

As all good and true Americans know, Indians are ignorant and easily outwitted (John Wayne and Jimmy Stewart have demonstrated this fact repeatedly in their factual and true-to-life films). The Indians simply had no use for all that land and all those buffalo. So, the great White Fathers of American history, in their inestimable wisdom, reduced the amount of land and the number of buffalo available to the red men, who, for the most part, only wanted trinkets, beads, and fire-water anyway. The white man has put this country to uses that those simple-minded twits, the Indians, would never have dreamed of; if not for us, this country would be devoid of smog, water pollution, strip mining, and other elements of our great civilization.

Indians are, of course, treacherous and undependable; in fact, if the French had not introduced the practice of scalping, they could never have been sure that the wily savages were really killing off English settlers. Some Indians even brought back French scalps when they were hard up for wampum. Quite obviously, these red men had a very hazy sense of morality. Why, if the U.S. Cavalry had not "eliminated" 356 Dioux Indians, including 250 women and children at Wounded Knee, South Dakota, in the year 1890, there is no telling what these inhuman barbarians and their offspring might have done to "the milk of human kindness," "motherhood", and all the other values that we civilized white people cherish and uphold.

The Indians occupy a tiny fraction of the land that they once occupied; this is only fair, since there is now only a tiny fraction of the number of Indians of yesteryear now extinct in this country. To our great credit, we white people have increased greatly the productivity of the land, and, in unbounded generosity, have given the Indians the benefits of our advanced technology, such as abandoned school buses to live in. White people should always remember that, if it wasn't for us, Indians would not be living in abandoned school buses. For this and the other comforts that we have given the Indians, I am sure that they are deeply grateful.

Letters To The Editor

Women's Movement; Liberation For All

To The Editor:

Anne Saunders' column in the Monday, March 19 Daily Collegian was one of the most depressing examples of misinformed criticism that I have read in a long time. Although I am a man, and despite some Native American blood, a product of white, middle class society, I am nonetheless appalled to see someone who is a member of one group that is struggling for justice show so little understanding of the struggles of others.

Ms. Saunders' perceptions of the women's movement appear to be little more than a media-generated caricature of one portion of a mutifaceted entity. It would be analogous to deal with the struggle of the Blacks in terms of the Daily News' image of the Urban League.

The ultimate goal of the women's movement is far more than putting women in "middlemanagement" positions. If one must attempt to reduce a complex movement to a handfull of words, it would be closer to the truth to say that the women's movement seeks to end the simplest and most basic form of oppression--the oppression of one individual human being by another. The fact that this oppression is sometimes subtle does not make it unimportant. Of course, the fact that someone is starving or being napalmed will be of more immediate interest to that person than the fact that they are the property (yes, property) of another human being. But to dismiss the basic inequity of the relationship between men and women as trivial is to dismiss the prototype for all other forms of oppression.

In many ways, the implications of the women's movement are more far-reaching than those of any other movement for political, economic, and social change. It implies a level of freedom for all peoples--both men and women--which has never before existed. It implies the right of every human being to determine his or her own life. It implies the need for everyone to be free of oppression, whether that oppression is political, economic, or interpersonal. It not only means that women have the right to free abortion--and to any other needed medical care. It means that women also have the right not to undergo forced abortion or sterilization just because they are the "wrong" race or social class. Does Ms. Saunders really believe that a society that denies a person the right to control his or her own body will permit a group of people to determine their own lives?

Perhaps the focus of the women's movement is not exactly the same as that of the Third World Alliance, but if people like Ms. Saunders would try to look past their own prejudices and stereotypes they might find that there is more common ground than they thought. For one phase of a worldwide struggle for liberation to perceive another phase of what is ultimately the same struggle in such trivial terms only plays into the hands of those who would suppress them both.

Sewn And Ironed

To The Editor:

My purpose in writing is to publicly thank the anonymous cash register lady who works in the clothing section of the Campus Center Store.

Last Friday afternoon I returned an official U. of Mass. T-shirt that had come unsewn during its first washing. Since it was a small tear along the seam, the anonymous lady cheerfully offered to repair it. When I returned an hour later, she had not only sewn it, but had ironed it too! I want to thank her for making my week.

Concert Series

To The Editor:

This letter is being written in response to S. Machey's letter in Tuesday's Collegian, in which she attempts to "rectify several misleading statements" regarding a proposed concert series on this campus. First, by not funding the concert Committee to produce a series of concerts in the Cage, you will not be lowering the SATF, as you implied in your letter. The Budgets Committee voted to appropriate $18,000 for a free concert in the stadium next year, which figures out to over $1.00 per student. Where is the savings?

Which brings us to the second point; namely, should the Student Senate subsidize some of the costs of a series? The argument has been put forward that you will have the same 4,000 students attending the series, which would mean that not everyone could attend a concert for which they are helping to pay. One of the reasons that the Concert Committee has been working all year to use the Cage once again is the realization that one free show each year cannot possibly satisfy the wide diversity of musical tastes that are present on this campus. By presenting a series in the Cage featuring rock, jazz, blues, and folk music, the Committee feels that it could better meet the musical needs of the students. Not every concert would appeal to the same group of students.

With regard to the statement that students will be paying twice (SATF and admission) to see a show, let's consider some of the economics of the situation. With the Student Senate subsidy, ticket prices would be in the range of $3.50 per show. Without that subsidy, ticket prices would have to cost $5.50 to $6.00 (for a general admission seat) to break even. Even with the so-called "double-charge" it will be cheaper for students to attend a subsidized concert ($4.87, the "double charge" is still more that $2.00 less than $6.00). Historically, no ticket for a major concert on this campus has cost over $3.75 (these concerts were also subsidized). To force the Concert Committee to charge $5.50 to $6.00 to see a show is to defeat the purpose of the Concert Committee: to present the best quality entertainment at the lowest possible price.

S. Mackey also states that "it is unfair and rather assinine to expect students to pay for things that they don't need, use, or want", implying that students have no interest in musical entertainment. We would advise you to actually go out and determine what the student desires are, instead of determining that your personal judgement is indeed representative of what students want. We believe that you will find that the students DO want a quality music series on this campus.

Don't Fuck!

To The Editor:

I am sick and tired and totally fed up with listening to arguments concerning abortion. I would like to know just how inhumane and thoughtless and selfish, people nowadays can be. I've been reading all of the letters to the editor concerning this matter and it really gets my ass to see how ignorant and fucked up people are.

Just a small message to all the females who are for abortion and are so up in arms against people who do not sympathize with you-If you don't want to get pregnant, DON'T FUCK! As far as I know, the only way to get pregnant is by balling. If you want to fuck, girls, get on the pill and do everybody a favor. Because sooner or later, whether pro-abortionists want to believe it or not, abortion will eventually end up as a form of birth control.

True, I am not a woman and I do not know the agonizing and gruelling hardships of pregnancy, but I would make damn sure that I would not get pregnant if I were a woman.

I am not being corny or un-hip, because I definitely want to impress all you really groovy people, but I want to know just where respect for something so close to humanity has gone. I am not into the argument concerning when life begins and the rest of that shit. All I know is that the birth of a child into this rotten world of ours is still sacred to me and no chick who was too stupid to take precautions, or guy who was too inconsiderate to find out if the chick was safe, has the right to stop the life that was conceived through them. Sure, accidents happen. If you play with fire, you're gonna get burned!

No More Mess

To The Editor:

After the St. Patrick's Day Friday night at Zeta Nu, all the brothers, including myself, took all the beer cans which we drank ourselves and distributed them on our front lawn to protest the new 18 year old drinking age. After all since March 1st there has been a tremendous increase in beer can refuse in the town of Amherst. Town selectman, Michael Sullivan, feels that now that there are new drinkers on this campus, beer cans will become a major issue in the next town election.

We agree wholeheartedly with the Collegian, Michael Sullivan, Town Manager Alan Torrey, and the rest of the individuals who made such a commotion over a few empty cans of beer on our front lawn. However, we did not wish to get soaked over such a minor problem, which we did not cause ourselves. Rather, it was our distinguished guests who thought it was their right to shithold Zeta Nu.

So, if you think we are trying to build up business by attracting younger drinkers, why don't you obtain a little substantial evidence before you write on something you know nothing about. After all, 18 year olds have been drinking on this campus for a long time. If you were to check out the rest of the campus on a Saturday morning, you could write many editorials of this nature.

Collegian: do everyone a favor and take the time to know the facts before you say anything. You will clean up your image and the image of the town selectmen. By the way, everything was cleaned by Sunday after people returned from the N.I.T. A full two days before your earth shaking editorial!

Volunteer Bulletin Board

To The Editor:

I would like to call to the attention of all students and student organizations the Volunteer Opportunity Bulletin Board located behind the glass doors in front of the Concrete Coffee Pot. Posted on the board are openings for volunteer work within the community and the University. The board is a resource for those students who wish to supplement their academic education with practical work.

Any student organization interested in having volunteer requests placed on the Volunteer Opportunity Bulletin Board can contact Roberta Garr at 318 Arnold House (545-2021).

One Man's Answer To Women's Lib

To The Editor:

I feel it is high time for a little male rebuttal in regards to women's liberation. Now I do agree with the girls in some respects. Women fight hard for the jobs they hold in today's society, that is the jobs which they regard as having some degree of merit. If women are working next to men, doing the same amount and calibre of work, I believe they should receive the same salary and benefits as men.

Now this is a good argument; however, there are some radical elements in this party that are giving the girls a bad reputation. It seems as though these unappreciative few are trying to push us a little too far. Who has led mankind through the forward strides made in sports, the sciences, humanities, and the arts? If something drastic happens who do people turn to? A MAN, a MALE, a two fisted person who faces the facts of life avoiding trivialities so as to form a tough mold enabling him to act with undaunted verility in the presence of circumstances where the weaker sex would fall prey to their emotions and fall to pieces.

The American male ego should be regarded as the very backbone around which our society is run. As far as any heavy physical work is concerned, I think the answer is quite obvious. It is true that there are some rather well-endowed girls musclewise, termed as amazons, but I don't think they would be adequate in our armed forces, or on our construction crews, or in our police and fire departments. There is nothing wrong with women who help out with the traffic and pedestrians. As far as politics is concerned, I have nothing against women but I have as yet to see a good one. It is a fact that throughout history women have been dubbed the weaker, more gentle sex, mind you not inferior. Muscle and brawn were necessities in early life and, ever since, man has generally held the role of breadwinner and protector of his family. Women play an equally integral part in life, as the two sexes compliment each other physically for the miracle of reproduction, so they should also compliment each other in their roles in society.

Women have more patience than men when it comes to certain things and can be used for jobs that men cannot handle such as librarian, elementary school teacher, nurse, housewife, etc. Some women are actually frowning at these as if they were second-rate menial tasks, which they are not. If these were not fulfilled by women who would fulfill them? Therefore there is no reason why women should feel as if they have no place in society. They have the vote, the role, and the pill, as far as retaining their last name after marriage, or penning our sons up in a day-care center to be exposed to an over abundance of playmates and regimentation by a bunch of female psychologists, that, my dear friends, is out of the question. The irreparable harm done by this in early childhood would lead to a much more depersonalized society than it is already, manipulating our children around to suit our convenience not our love. We didn't have all these problems before this uproar of the feminist liberation movement.

It is clear, our integrity and male prowess is being usurped by our female counterparts. We will make a stand to defend OUR rights and image, so as not to fall prey to the fangs and nails of frustrated women radicals.

Is it any wonder that the sale of dildoes has risen simultaneously with the rise in participation in the feminist liberation movement?

Cleaned Up

To The Editor:

In reference to the front page article in the March 20, 1973 edition of the MDC "Town Gives Frat Flak" and the article on the editorial page "Clean Up". These two clearly depicted, IN ERROR that the Fraternities at UMass have the uncanny ability to keep our properties a mess. This reference was clearly stated in "Clean Up" by saying "...to attract new members, then they surely won't do so by keeping their premises so messy".

For the information of those involved, there are 25 fraternity and sorority houses on this campus. On March 16, 1973 only two had open parties. The other, besides the one in question, was Theta Chi. I went by Theta Chi on Saturday and sure enough, all those beer cans were cleaned up. And who cleaned it up?? The members of that house. Not some grounds-keepers for the University who clean up after Spring Day, nor a paid organization like those who clean up after Senior Day.

What time of the weekend did the "Amherst Resident" and Mr. Torrey view the Situation? Neither article says. Who do you think made the mess in front of Zeta Nu? Usually over 1/2 of the people who attend these parties are from the general student body who live in the dorms. This condition may be related to the drinking age change, but these conditions have happened before and they were cleaned up before, unlike what the Selectmen said "in discussion".

Also, the fraternities do not have "...to build up business by attracting young drinkers." This is an absurd statement!! Those people who leave their cans on our lawns during parties are the inconsiderate type, and never do come to our rushes because they are pampered to death in the dorms. If Mr. Torrey, Mr. Sullivan and that "resident from Amherst Center" would like to come to dinner some night in our "deplorable conditions" then they are surely welcome. They can reach me at 253-9239.

I hope that in the future that before someone tries to make a public spectacle of our Greek System, that they think twice, and don't always pick out the few bad things about us, as everyone who knows nothing about us, has done in the past.

Faculty Discrimination

To The Editor:

The Daily Collegian hardly seems the appropriate arena for faculty squabbling, no matter how much amusement it may provide to readers. As a matter of fact, I realize now that my own attitude of taking Collegian letters lightly may be partially in error. Ann Brentlinger's "Fighting Sexism on Campus" (Collegian, March 9) alluded to various internal difficulties in the Philosophy Department. Much to my surprise, a number of faculty members have made remarks to me indicating that they took this article seriously and took it as indicating primarily that the Philosophy Department has at least one difficult member. This situation now seems to me worth general comment, particularly from someone like myself who could not be accused of a predilection to take Ann's side in what she refers to as her battles. Her article may be judged strident, but I agree with her that she has been subject to considerable provocation that is not easily explained unless prejudice is involved, and I think readers of the Collegian should take this into account.

I originally voted against Ann's tenure along with a majority of my colleagues. The Department vote was set aside in the course of an appeal procedure and Ann obtained tenure in spite of the Department vote and the Head's recommendation. What must seem prejudicial in this is that Ann's case is the only case known to me in which the Department has collectively voted against tenure in modern times. Not only that, but the Department has voted for tenure in cases where the (male) candidate has manifestly had a less impressive professional record unless one uses some sort of intuitive assessment of quality as the major criterion. My own conscience is fairly clear on this matter since I have pretty much uniformly voted against tenure in recent cases. What is the explanation for the swing votes that resulted in a negative judgment only in Ann's case within the Department? I really don't know. Ann assumes that sexist prejudice is involved and I agree that appearances point overwhelmingly in that direction.

At present, Ann is a tenured member of the Philosophy faculty. Does that give her the right to teach at least some graduate seminars (700 level courses)? I think so. So do the majority of my colleagues, who recently passed a motion to the effect that every member of the Graduate Faculty should teach such a course with a frequency sufficient to permit every regular Ph.D. candidate to take at least one graduate seminar with any member of the graduate faculty he or she might wish to study with. The Department Head (as is his technical right) chose to interpret this as a recommendation that he would not concur with. The Head does not concur with. The Head does not view seminar teaching as the right of every faculty member. I think the Head has made a mistake, but I'm not sure what can be done about it except voting as I see fit in future Department meetings.

There is a general problem about the structure of faculty authority that enables it to function well only when the faculty has mutual good will and good intentions. When good will erodes, there is often no suitable means of redressing legitimate grievances. I'm not in a position to evaluate all of Ann's protests, but she quite clearly is being discriminated against on currently obscure grounds in the matter of graduate teaching.

Minorities Assert Identities

By JACK ALEY
Associated Press Writer

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) - Almost 10 years ago the president and general manager of what at that time was Maine's only French newspaper said: "The state of Maine would be the loser if the French Canadians decided to give up their ethnic ties."

Romeo T. Boisvert of Lewiston's "Le Messager" delivered his caveat at a time when many French Canadians and other Maine ethnic minorities seemed quite ready to anglicize themselves.

And the assimilation of the French, Russians, Slavs and Indians into the dominant culture was being encouraged-even applauded.

Because when Mr. Boisvert spoke in 1964 there was little questioning among minorities in Maine that adapting to the American way in life style and business practice was the bandwagon to climb on in order to "make it" in this country.

And climb they did-often successfully. The inevitable loss of their parent heritage seemed at the time a small price to pay for the American dream.

That the dream has in some respects turned into a fragmented nightmare in the past decade is by now a sociological cliche. And while some disillusioned Americans have fashioned subcultures to find alternatives to many American norms, Maine's ethnics, in theory at least, had their parent cultures to nourish and support them.

At varying paces, the cells of French, Slavs and Indians in the state have been searching out again their own language, faith, food and rituals in order to fix an identity.

A bilingual bill now in the Maine Legislature is the latest of a number of growing signs that many Mainers want strong minority cultures and agree with the substance of Mr. Boisvert's remark.

The bill itself is simple, proposing to give Maine communities with significant ethnic populations the chance to extend bilingual education through the eighth grade. State law now permits instruction in a second language to second grade.

According to the bill's proponents, the measure has big potential for altering the direction of Maine's cultural future.

The bill's sponsor, Sen. edward Cyr, D—Madawaska, says carrying bilingual education through to the later grades will enable the state finally to take advantage of one of its great natural resources-a large pool of potentially fluent bilinguists.

These young people, trained in the language and heritage of two cultures-Anglo and either French, Passamaquoddy, Greek, Russian or Slavic-could become able language teachers at home and emissaries abroad of a more fertile America, Cyr says.

Value Workshop Offered

A weekend-long workshop on Values Clarification and Life Planning will be held on campus April 7-8. The goal of the workshop is to help people articulate, clarify, and prioritize their values, and to begin to plan a life style which will implement those values.

At a time when many people seem to be unsure about what they want to do with their futures, or are working at jobs which they dislike, this type of workshop offers a unique opportunity to explore alternatives. The workshop will not attempt to give specific answers to questions about values and life styles. Instead, it will work to create an environment in which participants can explore their own values in some depth.

The workshop will be held in Room 917 of the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center on the Amherst campus of the University of Massachusetts. Persons wishing further information or desiring to register for the course should contact the Division of Continuing Education, 920 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Massachusetts 01002 before March 26, or telephone (413) 545-2591. Additional press information can be obtained from Gil Salk at (413) 545-0813.

Sources Determine Document Classification

By LINDA DEUTSCH
Associated Press Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) - Jurors in the Pentagon Papers trial, getting a lesson in document classification, were told Tuesday that government researchers frequently stamp "top secret" on their work merely because they have used classified sources.

In a technical point central to the defense case of Daniel Ellsberg and Anthony Russo, a security expert explained the difference between "derivative" and "original" classification. He said that the Pentagon Papers were "derivatively" classified, with the markings from "old" source documents automatically transferred to the more current study of the Vietnam war.

William Florence, a retired government security expert who helped draft numerous security regulations, told jurors that the researcher who stamped "top secret" on the Pentagon Papers had not been given the authority for "original" classification, the ultimate decision of what is or is not sensitive in relation to U.S. national defense. Thus, he said, the classification was merely a "reproduction" of what was on the source documents.

Florence did not name the person who did the stamping. Defense attorneys have indicated during arguments outside the jury's presence that at least some of the 20 volumes in evidence were classified by Leslie Gelb, the civilian who directed the study for the Pentagon.

The 63-year-old Forence, who spent 43 years on security duties with the Air Force and in the Pentagon, gave his detailed explanation during cross-examination by the prosecutor.

Asst. U.S. Atty. David Nissen sought to show that Florence could not tell how the Pentagon Papers had been classified. But Florence insisted he could tell from footnotes on various pages that the sources used were classified and the classification was transferred.

He suggested the contention of Ellsberg, 41, and Russo, 36, that they are not guilty of espionage, conspiracy and theft charges because the Pentagon Papers no longer deserved to be considered "top secret" by the time they copied them in 1969.

Cubans Surrender After Escape Attempt

MIAMI (AP)—Two young Cubans who allegedly hijacked a fishing boat surrendered to U.S. Immigration Service authorities today. Their attorney said the case would be the first test of the new U.S.-Cuba antihijacking agreement.

"These boys must not be returned to Cuba because they face a fate worse than death," said Ellis Rubin, lawyer for the two fishermen, Oslirio Hernandez and Caridad Perez, both 21.

Rubin said the two were brought to his home by exile group leaders Monday night after an agreement that they would turn themselves in to authorities. He said Hernandez and Perez had no assurances they would be granted political asylum. "We don't know what the government's stand is," said Rubin.

He said the alleged seizure of the 61-foot Cuban government-owned Cayo Largo was not a hijacking, but "an abortive attempt" and one not aimed at the U.S. He said the destination was Mexico, and thus the incident may not be affected by the hijacking agreement.

However, he said it would be a test of the treaty. The two men gave up their attempt to take the boat to Mexico and released the other crewmen. But the vessel ran out of fuel off the Florida coast and sought Coast Guard assistance.

Man Pleads Innocent In Hamilton Death

BOSTON (AP)—Anthony J. Jackson, 33, was ordered held without bail Tueaday after pleading innocent to an indictment charging him with murder in the death of Ruth A. Hamilton, one of eight young women found slain in the Boston area since last summer.

Miss Hamilton's body was found under her bed in her Cambridge apartment last December. The cause of death was listed as strangulation.

Jackson also pleaded innocent to charges of kidnapping, rape and unarmed robbery. A hearing is scheduled Wednesday to hear a doctor's report on whether Jackson should be sent to Bridgewater State Hospital for mental evaluation.

Jackson was also indicted on Feb. 15 in the murder of Damaris Synge Gillispie, 22, a Boston University coed.

Jackson's attorney, Jack Zalkind, has been given 30 days to file special pleas in the case. Judge Joseph Ford denied a motion that would have directed the district attorney's office not to discuss the case in any manner other than was already on public record.

Zalkind had asked the court earlier to relieve him of the responsibility of defending Jackson. Zalkind said Jackson was arrogant and had no respect for his counsel.

However, Tuesday, he formally accepted the court appointment to defend Jackson.

Outreach Has Openings

Throat Cultures And Congress

By MARY KEANE

OUTREACH wants you.

OUTREACH places students from many majors in related part of full time internships. According to William Burke, director of OUTREACH, the program keeps an inventory of UMass public service programs, helps to bring off-campus agencies and UMass students together, and designs new programs in which students can earn credit for services.

OUTREACH assists many students in finding internships related to their major fields. The Center for OUTREACH researches all possible on and off campus internships , and serves as a link between student and community. This semester, 44 students are involved in full time field experience through OUTREACH. Next fall, director Burke hopes to place 200 students in full-time internships.

Unlike many volunteer programs, OUTREACH is not limited to traditional means of community service. Students from UMass are presently working for Congressmen in Washington as field experience in the departments of history, political science, and economics. Microbiology students are paid for part-time work analyzing throat cultures as a Public Health service. Other interns have helped communities such, as Newton and Holyoke research their histories for centennial programs.

OUTREACH was also responsible for the beginning of the VITA (Volunteer Income Tax Assistance) program, in which students give free tax assistance to low income families.

part time participation in OUTREACH programs. Students may negotiate with interested faculty members for the number of credits they want. OUTREACH will help students contact faculty interested in sponsoring them.

Part-time volunteer experiences through OUTREACH are still available this semester. A bulletin board in the Campus Center concourse lists opportunities. Students may use their creative skills in making tapes of readings for the elderly, or work on a one-to-one basis with special students in the Amherst school system, among other volunteer programs.

Student evaluation of OUTREACH programs has been impressively favorable, Burke says. Many students feel that their semester spent with OUTREACH has been their most meaningful college learning experience.

A listing of all available programs of community service is available in the OUTREACH office. Students interested in existing internships or in finding an internship related to their interests should contact Bill Burke in 318 Arnold House or call 545-2021 for an appointment. Some opportunities for placement next fall are still available.

Indian Troupe Thursday

The American Indian Theater Ensemble, the only troupe of its kind in the United States, will appear at Bowker Auditorium Thursday, March 22, at 8 p.m.

This program is sponsored jointly by the Massachusetts Council on the Arts and Humanities and the UMass Fine Arts Council's Third World Cultural Series. To be presented will be "Na Haar Zan," a dramatization of the origins of the Navajo people by Navajo Robert Shortly, and Kiowa-Delaware Hanay Geiogamah's one-act comedy "Body Indian," the story of an overnight Indian drinking party.

There will be no charge to the public. Doors will open at 7:15 p.m., and seating will be on a first-come first-served basis.

Toy Library Opens Thursday

The University Day School Library of Educational Play Equipment will open on Thursday, March 22, at Farley Lodge, located next to the University Day School near the football stadium on University Drive. The hours are: Thursdays from 7:00 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. and Mondays from 1:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m.

The membership fee is $1.00 per year for individual student families, and $5.00 per year for children's cooperatives, babysitters, and play groups. Members must be UMass undergraduates, graduate or special students.

For any additional information call 549-6809.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

☆ by SYDNEY OMARR ☆

LEO has a talent for delegating duties. That, perhaps, is why many personnel directors were born under this zodiacal sign.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): What begins in a mild way could end in a torrid manner. This includes special situations and relationships. Don't start anything unless you expect to finish it. Friends and money are not likely to mix. Keep the two areas separate.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You could nail down beneficial agreement. Key is to make contact with one in authority. If you wait for others, including legal representative, you could wait a long time. Make known your desires and abilities.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may feel drawn in two directions. You will know which way to go once you attend to details. Build from bottom to top—don't bypass essentials. Older individual may be stuck with outmoded concepts. Be true to your own principles.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Break free from entanglement which really should not be your concern. Sagittarian is involved. Your person expresses attitude that may be distasteful. Sense of humor helps. Avoid giving up something for nothing. Includes money.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 21): What appears opposition may merely be intelligent restraint. Know it and respond accordingly. Aquarian figures prominently. Contract agreement could be altered which represents chance for expansion.

VIRGO (Aug. 22-Sept. 20): Barrier to communication is removed. Gemini person proves an ally. Give ideas a chance to develop and flourish. Don't hop from one project to another—concentrate efforts. Return of vitality is indicated.

LIBRA (Sept. 21-Oct. 20): Money and home are featured. Expenditures which help brighten domestic area should not be slighted. Make peace with family members. Diplomacy now is your solid ally. Know it and win rather than force your way.

SCORPIO (Oct. 21-Nov. 21): You can get back on solid ground. Cycle is such that you are able to uncover deceptions. Intuitive conduct is honed to razor sharpness. Pisces plays significant role. You make profitable new start.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 20): What seemed like a lost cause turns out to be a winning proposition. Look behind the scenes. Don't judge by what appears obvious. Someone seems determined to pull wool over your eyes. Thwart this by double-checking.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 21-Jan. 20): Friend helps you complete assignment. Profit is the result. You feel better because you are relieved of burden. Favor is returned. Added recognition is featured. More persons become aware of your abilities.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 21-Feb. 19): Opportunities multiply. Creative abilities are highlighted. Accent is on ambition, standing in community, reward for professional efforts. Leo is in picture. Get started on project which enhances prestige.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Look beyond the immediate—consider the potential. One who is a natural teacher expresses willingness to share knowledge. Be receptive. Leo and Aquarius are featured. Follow through on hunch. Your ex-Yesterday perception is at work.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have fine sense of humor, have a tendency to gain weight easily, love to travel, are expressive and draw to you many persons born under Sagittarius. September should be your most significant month of 1973.

Clemente Enshrined

By RALPH BERNSTEIN
Associated Press Sports Writer

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP)- The late Roberto Clemente was overwhelmingly voted into baseball's Hall of Fame Tuesday, receiving in death the recognition he felt he had missed in his lifetime.

Clemente, who died at age 38 in a plane crash last New Year's Eve on a mission of mercy, received 393 of 423 ballots in a special election by the Baseball Writers Association of America. He needed 75 per cent or 318 votes for election.

There were 29 votes against and two abstentions in the unprecedented mail ballot. Joe Heiling, president of BBWAA and a writer for the Houston Post, made the announcement as Mrs. Vera Clemente, widow of the Pittsburgh Pirate outfielder, listened in the ballroom of the Hilton Hotel.

Mrs. Clemente appeared composed as she made a two-sentence acceptance.

"Thank you, very much," she said in halting English. "I know you will understand my silence."

Earlier, Mrs. Clemente experienced some difficulty expressing her feeling about the Hall of Fame honor. "I don't know if I can say I'm happy," she said, her voice trailing off. Then, she added, "Make it proud."

The widow of 79 days said her three children were too young to appreciate the Hall of Fame vote.

The only other player elected by the writers to Hall of Fame without a formal ballot was the late Lou Gehrig, the old Iron Horse of the New York Yankees. Gehrig, stricken with a terminal disease, made the Hall of Fame by acclamation at a BBWAA meeting in 1939.

The five-year rule was waived by the board of directors of the Hall of Fame last January, a few days after Clemente's death. Clemente, the first Latin-American player voted into the Hall, played 18 years with the Pirates. He compiled a .317 lifetime batting average and won four National League batting championships. He won the Golden Glove award for his fielding a dozen times. He hit better than .300 in 13 of his 18 seasons and was 15 times a member of the All-Star team.

Bo Sox Tip Astros In 10th

WINTER HAVEN, Fla. (AP) - Rick Miller singled and scored on a couple of bunts and Lee May's throwing error in the 10th inning Tuesday, lifting the Boston Red Sox to a 4-3 exhibition victory over the Houston Astros.

Jim Richards held the Red Sox hitless for three innings before Miller lined a single to left. Andy Kosco sacrificed and was safe as Miller beat the throw to second. Doug Griffin bunted down the first base line and May fired wildly in an attempted force at third, permitting Miller to score.

The Astros collected 12 hits, but grounded into three double plays leaving 11 runners on base. Roger Metzler had a run-scoring double and two singles, while May singled and doubled before hitting a 450-foot two-run homer off Lew Krausse in the eighth.

Ken Forsch pitched the first six innings for Houston, allowing six hits and three runs. Carl Yastrzemski singled and scored the first Boston run. Then he tripled home a run and scored himself in the sixth.

Rogelio Moret and Mike Garmen each hurled three scoreless innings before Krausse came in and dealt his job chances another sharp blow.

Veteran Bob Veale blanked the Astros on one hit in the final two innings.

The victory evened Boston's record 7-7. Houston has a 6-5 mark.

Oliver Hot In Bowling Tourney

By DAVE DEMMICK

The UMass NIT victory was not the only UMass sports activity over the weekend. On Saturday the Intercollegiate Bowling team competed in the Ninth Annual Pioneer Valley Tournament sponsor by Western New England College.

The story of this tournament belongs to a rookie by the name of Dick Oliver. Competing in his first tournament for the team he won first in doubles and all-events, second in singles and shot some games the likes of which this reporter has not seen for quite some time.

In the team event Dick shot a fine six game for a six series. He was outdone by a teammate who, Wayne Kowalski, who shot a strong 640 series.

Other members of the team for this tournament were Mark Pickard, Dave Demmick, Brian Kinlen, and Bill Fisher.

The team split 2 and 2 with Lasell both in league match. In the tournament overall the team finished sixth. Personally the team's record stands at 15 wins and 15 losses.

In the doubles event, Dick again provided the excitement. Starting off with an outstanding game of 268 he went on to a 600-even series. His partner, Dave Demmick, provided the strong support needed for a first place finish, shooting a powerful 532 series.

It seemed hard to believe that Mr. Oliver could surpass his previous feats but in the singles event he did just that. He began with a very respectable 204 game and then the excitement really began. In the second game he [illegible] a [illegible] series by two unlucky frames, but still rolled a phenomenal 279. He wound up with 640 for the set but had to settle for second place, topped only by a very fine 661 series.

Oliver was a runaway victor in the all-events, he shot over for the competition averaging a little over 200. His closest competitor was his teammate Kowalski of UMass of Lowell.

The team will compete in the final regular season tournament on April 6 at Lange's Bowlerama in Springfield. After consideration of the team, will compete in the National Match Games during the last week of April.

UMass Nine Sets Sights On Tulsa

By MIKE BROPHY

By the time most of the students on the Amherst campus have left to go home for their vacation a group of young and talented baseball players will be on their way to sunny California to challenge some of the best collegiate baseball teams in the country. The team will be flying out of Bradley International on Thursday, March 22, and play its first game with California Baptist on the 23rd before even getting a chance to adjust to the time difference.

The competition in the 7th Annual Riverside National Intercollegiate Baseball Tournament will be "the best we could possibly face in preparing to play ball with the New England teams," according to Coach Dick Bergquist. "This is the most prestigious pre-season tournament we could possibly be invited to. Most of the teams we will be facing will have between fifteen and thirty games under their belts already. This will really show us what our team is made of. If we come out of this tournament looking good then that might enhance our chances for the Intercollegiate World Series to be held in May in Tulsa."

The Western swing is to include nine games during which starters Tom White, Mike Flannigan, and John Olson will see extensive action. The two openers are non-tournament games with California Baptist on Friday and Saturday.

The tournament itself will open on Sunday when the Minutemen will face Vanderbuilt at 11 a.m. On Monday UMass will play Stanford who has won the tournament for the past two years running. On the 28th they will play a doubleheader, facing UCal-Riverside in the morning and then taking on Arizona State in the afternoon. ASU was ranked second in the country last year behind the University of Southern California.

The Minutemen will then face USC and Hawaii in a day-night affair on the 29th. On the 31 of March the Minutemen will tangle with their final opponent of the Western swing as Washington State will be on the same diamond.

Bergquist will be taking a veteran squad out to California as only six of those going did not play varsity ball last season, and they include Freshman first baseman Pete Collins who was a powerful hitter in high school.

Of the pitchers that are going out aces White, Olson, and Flannigan combined last year for ten of the team's 16 wins. They were instrumental in leading the UMass pitching staff to a 1.53 ERA which ranked them fifth nationally.

Over the 1972 season UMass hit .262 as a team and were led by Tom White with a .529 average while Eddie McMahon was hitting at a .407 clip.

April 7th will mark the opening of the home schedule as the Minutemen will play host to the Yale Bulldogs before traveling across town to play the Lord Jeffs on April 11.

Notices

VARSITY M - The Varsity M Luncheon this week will feature baseball coach Dick Bergquist who will give a preview of the upcoming baseball season and spring trip. Also, other available coaches will report on all winter sports and expectations about next season. Tickets are available at the door of the Newman Center for $1.50.

VARSITY FOOTBALL - Mandatory meeting today in Thompson 104 at 4 p.m. for all spring football candidates.

Celts Win

PROVIDENCE (AP) - John Havlicek scored 28 points and Dave Cowens pulled down a career high 32 rebounds Tuesday as Boston outlasted Houston 94-89 for its 62nd victory of the National Basketball Association season.

The Celtics broke an 89-89 deadlock on a layup by Cowens with 1:39 remaining, Havlicek followed with a 3-point play 28 seconds later and Boston blanked Houston the rest of the way.

The game was a see-saw battle from the start, and the score was deadlocked 27 times. Neither team was able to forge more than 9 points in the lead at any time.

Rudy Tomjanovich paced Houston with 21 points and Mike Newlin added 18. Both teams were off in their shooting. The Celtics had a 40.3 field goal percentage and Houston had a 39 per cent total.

Whalers Top Los Angeles

BOSTON (AP) - The streaking New England Whalers extended their unbeaten streak to eight games Tuesday night with a 4-1 World Hockey Association victory over the Los Angeles Sharks.

The victory enabled the Whalers to maintain their East division lead over Cleveland which played at Quebec.

The Sharks jumped to a 1-0 advantage on Bart Crashley's blue line drive through a screen at 7:44 of the first period.

But the Whalers came back on the tying goal by Terry Caffery at 14:01 and Rick Ley's game-winning goal on a deflected shot from the left point at 19:01 of the first period.

Mike Byers, who was acquired by the Whalers from the Sharks in a trade last month, netted a backhander in front at 6:06 of the second period to give New England a 3-1 advantage. Jim Dorey concluded the scoring with a 25-foot slap shot at 7:03 of the final period.

Cincinnati Kid In TKO

LOWELL, Mass. (AP)—Greg Lewis, a Cincinnati youth who was the 1972 flyweight Golden Gloves champion, launched his bid for a title in another class Tuesday night with a second round TKO over Dennis Daniels in the first round of the National Golden Gloves Tournament of Champions.

Lewis, competing in the 119-pound bantam weight division, used a left-right combination to batter Daniels, of Springfield, Ill., into a daze as young fighters from across the country began a series of 69 preliminary matches Tuesday night.

Winners of first round matches Monday and Tuesday nights advance to Wednesday's second round.

Lewis, the first 1972 champion to box in this year's championship, sent Daniels down in the second round with a right to the body which followed several of his left-right combinations.

One of the quickest knockouts in the tournament came Tuesday night Leonard Bordeaux, of Omaha, Neb., floored Carl Jones of Louisville, Ky., after 30 seconds of their bout, which also was in the bantam division.

In another quick knockout, Jerry Sojot, of Honolulu, swinging left uppercuts and hooks with accuracy, floored Tom Gates of Denver three times in the first 90 seconds of their 132-pound division bout.

In a split decision loudly booed by the crowd in Lowell's Memorial Auditorium, Steve Dement of Lafayette, La., brother of Olympic boxer Timmy Dement, outpointed Victor Abraham of Los Angeles in the 132-pound division.

Eighty bouts are scheduled Wednesday, with semifinal bouts in all weight divisions set for Thursday and final bouts scheduled Friday.

Tiger Sticks Quiet In '72

LAKELAND, Fla. (AP) - Virtually every Detroit Tiger batter had a poor or mediocre season in 1972-yet the Tigers won the American League East title and nearly upset the Oakland Athletics for the pennant.

Norm Cash led Detroit in home runs 22 and runs-batted-in 61. That compares with the league-leading statistics by Dick Allen of Chicago of 37 homers and 113 RBIs.

Willie Horton, who knocked in 85, 91, 69 and 72 in the four seasons before 1972, ended up with 36.

Al Kaline had 32, about 30 or 40 below his norm.

Jim Northrup, usually in the 70-90 RBI bracket, had 42, while Dick McAullife, who averaged 54 the past two seasons, knocked in 30 runs in 1972.

Bill Freehan dropped from 71 to 56 in 1972-a tie with Aurellio Rodriquez as second-best on the team.

Such stark contrast seems strange in light of Detroit's title. But they serve to indicate how even the division was, how good Detroit's pitching was, and a somewhat intengible important ingredient for the Tigers called "managing."

Billy Martin, in his third season as Tiger manager, was deft at platooning. He utilized some 130 different batting orders during the 156 games the Tigers played in the strike-shortened season.

Five outfielders played in at least 100 games, and nobody escaped the bench while in a slump, because of the depth Martin developed.

Mickey Lolich won 22 games, Joe Coleman 19, and Woodie Fryman-whom Detroit didn't acquire until August-won 10 of 15.

Fred Scherman and Chuck Seelbach became about as good a lefthanded-righthanded relief combination as could be found. Sherman winning seven and saving 12 games while rookie Seelbach was winning nine and saving 14.

John Hiller made a courageous return to baseball after a 1971 heart attack, posting a 2.05 earned-run-average in 24 games, while Chris Zachary had a sparkling 1.42 ERA in 25 games.

All are back, along with sophomore Bill Slayback and Tom Timmerman who filled in admirably as spot starter and relievers last year.

There are always a pile of "ifs" at the start of a season. But if the Tigers' pitching remains about the same, if their major league-leading fielding remains similar, and if the hitting approaches potential, Detroit could go all the way.

Sale Of Hills Dorms 'Probable'

By LARRY CARPMAN

Two dorms in the Central Area, Hills North and Hills South, will be sold to the Commonwealth for office space, pending legal ratification by the Building Association.

At a joint meeting of both Hills North and Hills South last night, Vice-Chancellor for Student Affairs Dr. Robert W. Gage said, "The University has problems as far as academic space is concerned. There are no more academic buildings being planned."

Edward Simpson, staff assistant in the Planning Office said, "The School of Education will be the major tenant of the office area."

When asked if there were any possibility of reversing the decision, Dr. Gage said, "it is a probable decision."

Chuck Hampton, staff assistant to Vice-Chancellor for Administrative Affairs Thomas B. Campion, said, "Somebody has to be displaced. In the long run, the move will prevent rents from rising."

Hampton said that Hills House has had a 40% turnover in the past and also has a large debt of $87,000.

"It is advantageous to the students," said Gage, "to have the state take over buildings that are in debt."

In 1972 the Rents and Fees Committee of the Student Senate had requested the Vice-Chancellors to consolidate all dormitory vacancies into one building.

Michael Gregory, Chairperson of the Rents and Fees Committee said yesterday that there were three possibilities to relieving the need for more office space on campus.

"One choice was to shut down a dorm, another was to sell a dorm, and third was to blow one up," said Gregory. "The best choice was obviously to sell."

Approximately 250 angry residents were at the meeting.

One resident asked Dr. Gage why they were not informed of the plans to use the dorm as office space.

"Modular buildings to be used as office space were thought to be ready for this year," said Gage. "The buildings, however, are not ready."

Many students asked what alternatives they had for their living choices next year.

Dr. Gage told the residents that they would be allowed to move into Hamlin House for next semester, but that Hamlin House would be renovated during Spring semester, 1974.

"There is a possibility that the age requirement for moving off campus can be lowered to twenty for Hills residents," said Gage. He emphasized that it was only a possibility.

Gage also said that there is a "possibility" that rents for previous Hills residents will not increase according to the dorm they choose.

Andy Pyenson, President of Hills North and of the Central Area Government, said, "Students are really 'pissed-off' and they really want to know what is going to happen."

Mark Doherty, Head of Residence of Hills North, when asked what will happen to his job, said, "There seems to be an option for me to go to Hamlin House. But I am more interested to see what happens to these guys."

One student, citing the fact that Hamlin House is partially vacant now, asked why Hamlin could not be filled with faculty offices.

"There still would not be enough space," said Gage. "There are approximately 40 or 50 new faculty positions for next year."

Chuck Hampton said that the plan at first was to use only half of Hills for the new office space.

"The Chancellors and the trustees agreed, however, that all of Hills should be used" Hampton said. "This decision, benefits the whole dormitory system. If it was just to the benefit of the administration, we would not do it".

One student asked when a final decision had to be made on the matter.

"A final decision," said Gage, "has to be made before room choosing begins." Room choosing begins for all dorms April 22nd.

Dr. Gage suggested to the residents that a committee of representatives from both houses be formed to meet with the Vice-Chancellors to recommend some alternatives.

The committee, to be made up of both house presidents and two appointed members from each house, will meet with Dr. Gage in the near future.

ITT's Offer To Defeat Allende Revealed

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Former CIA director John J. McCone testified Wednesday that International Telephone & Telegraph Corp. offered $1 million to back any U.S. plan to prevent the election of Marxist Salvador Allende as president of Chile.

McCone, an ITT director and still a CIA consultant, said he relayed the offer in September 1970 to Henry A. Kissinger, national security adviser to President Nixon, and to Richard Helms, then director of the Central Intelligence Agency.

But McCone said in testimony before a special Senate foreign relations subcommittee that while ITT offered financial support, the corporation devised no plan to stop Allende. "...It was not a plan generated by ITT," he said.

He did not say where the idea of such a plan was originated. But he testified that nothing came of the offer.

McCone said he relayed the offer on instructions from Harold Geneen, ITT board chairman, at a time when Allende faced a run-off presidential election in Chile.

Then, as now, McCone was a director of ITT and also a consultant to the CIA, although he told the subcommittee that officials of the company were unaware of his continued connection with the spy agency.

"Mr. Kissinger thanked me very much and said I would hear from him," McCone said. "I did not. So I assumed there was no such plan."

McCone did not go into details about the plan but testified that it involved a coalition of political opponents of Allende and that the idea was to supply housing, technical assistance and agricultural assistance to Chile.

"This is not an unfamiliar role for the United States," he said.

McCone referred to aid to Greece and Turkey under the Truman Doctrine, economic assistance for Europe under the Marshall Plan and intervention in Guatemala and Lebanon under President Dwight D. Eisenhower.

At no time was the suggestion made to use the money surreptitiously, and there was nothing covert about it, McCone said. The objective, he said, was to forestall expropriation by Allende of ITT's 70 per cent interest, worth about $150 million, in the Chile Telephone Co.

Allende won the run-off and about a year later took over the property. ITT, however, still owns two hotels and other interests in Chile.

Sen. Frank Church, D—Idaho, subcommittee chairman, and Sen. Stuart Symington, D—Mo., told the 71-year-old witness that ITT documents did not indicate the company intended to improve housing or to do "anything constructive."

Sen. Clifford P. Case, R—N.J., said he did not understand how $1 million in aid could accomplish much in the light of the $1.4 billion in aid the United States was supplying to Chile.

McCone said ITT had no intention of financing a CIA operation in Chile and that ITT officers were interested only in trying to influence Allende "to be more moderate in his intentions to take over our properties."

Finally, McCone said, the U.S. government "did not develop a plan and ITT had nothing to support."

Mental Health Head Quits

By CAROL KENNEDY

Dr. Dean A. Allen has resigned as director of the University Mental Health Services after working for the services for eleven years and Acting Director for one and one-half years.

In an interview, Allen said that he felt he had used up his leadership and that someone else with new ideas should come in and take his place. Allen handed in his resignation in November of last year and it will go into effect in May of 1973.

A Search Committee has been set up to find a new director. This committee consists of three students (two undergraduates and one graduate), Dr. Thomas McBride, Jane Zapaka (Director of Health Education), Dr. Ted Slovin (from the Counseling Center), and Mrs. Susan Hill (a staff assistant from the Mental Health Services) who is the Chairperson. Mr. Barry Averill who is director of the Health Services will have the final approval but Dr. Allen said that students as well as all minority groups have been presented on the committee. The decision will be a joint one among these groups.

Allen said that ads have been put in journals and that applications have already been coming in. The person finally chosen will have to have administrative experience, be clinically qualified, and be interested in the university community. According to Allen in order to understand the problems that students have it is necessary "to be plugged in to the environment."

Dr. Allen said that a great deal of responsibility goes along with the job of Mental Health Director. He is the liaison between his own office and the University Health Services which entails taking care of personnel, salaries, budget, and administrative work. Dr. Allen will remain on at the Mental Health Services as a staff psychologist.

Allen started at Mental Health Services eleven years ago when Dr. Javonitz (who resigned last year) was the only other staff member. He has seen both the university and the Mental Health Services grow in size and complexity. There are now 12 (and 1/2 including part-time) people on the staff. The growth has been approximately one person per year and has kept pace with the University's growth so that there has been one staff member for every 1,000 students. He feels that the increase in staff members is necessary because as the University has grown it has become a more complex situation and is a harder place for both staff and students to deal with.

Shortest Meeting This Semester

Dorm Governance Plan Passed

By STEVE FINE

The Student Senate met for approximately an hour and a half last night and approved a Residence Hall act that would set guidelines for governance, administration, finances, and internal residence matters of residence halls.

The meeting which was the shortest of the semester also acted on the following bills:

—Formed a Student Activities Council that would provide input to the Student Activities staff.

—Defeated a bill that would recommend to the Faculty Senate and the Board of Trustees that academic credit in the ROTC program be retroactive for last semester students.

—Passed a bill that futher articulates the duties of Student Attorney Richard Howland.

—Voted $350 to send Martha Crawford and Lisa Noble to a conference on student unionization.

The important aspects of the Residence Hall act lies in the section on Internal Residence Matters.

In the previous week the bill had been decided to be sent back to committee to amend the section on the searching of rooms.

The bill had previously read "casual inspections of student rooms will NOT be made". The bill now reads "Inspections of student rooms will not be made, except in the case of the issuance of a warrant, on the basis of probable cause, by the appropriate University Judiciary".

Speaker of the Senate David Booker clarified the section that reads "No live animals or insects may be kept in Residence Halls" by saying this also included any University cockroaches now infesting rooms.

Other highlights of the act include—

1) A resident may host a guest overnight according to regulations of his or her dorm.

2) No student may store or possess fire arms, ammunitions, fireworks or other illegal weapons on campus.

3) Each dormitory will make provisions for those residents who wish to remain in their respective rooms during vacations.

According to Paul Hamel, the Chairman of the Senate Financial Affairs Committee, the purpose of the newly created Student Activities Council would be to make sure that the Student Activities staff is responsive to the needs of the University community.

Hamel said the basic responsibilities of Activities staff is to advise and coordinate the programs of Registered Student Organizations (RSO), such as movies, plays, and fund raising activities.

The make-up of the Council would comprise one delegate from On Campus Publications, Campus Service Organizations, Campus Cultural Organizations, and social Action and Political Organizations.

The appropriation of $350 to send the two women senators to Temple University in Philadelphia was for the purpose of learning more about the possible incorporation and/or unionization of the student body of UMass.

Project Pulse

Evaluations Evaluated

By JOAN FASSNACHT

The results of Project Pulse's student opinion survey on Course and Faculty Evaluation have recently been compiled. The survey, which was requested by Dr. Russell Kraus of the Provost's Office, was conducted on February 27.

A random sample of 170 University undergraduates was selected by a computer, and were contacted by telephone by 19 Pulse interviewers. Because of the small number of students involved in the project, it is not possible to form conclusive generalizations based on the data. Pulse suggests instead that this data be interpreted as "indicating trends".

Of the 164 responding students, 79% replied that they had filled out course and faculty evaluation forms for the Fall 1972 semester. 21% said they had not.

Concerning the usefulness of written evaluations, 30% of the respondents felt the process was highly valuable; 56% felt it to be valuable only to a degree; and 12% felt it to be worthless; with 2% voicing no opinion.

Fully 67% felt the information in these evaluations to be useful in the selection of courses and professors, once they are publicized. 53% think that the outcomes do affect a professor's teaching style, although 55% felt that the results did not affect his employment situation.

When asked if they answered bluntly in the evaluations or if they "eased up" on certain questions, 79% said they answered bluntly, while 18% admitted to easing up. More females than males admitted that they had answered bluntly.

33% felt that their responses in these evaluations might have been influenced by informal discussions, personal friendships, or personal biases with certain professors.

Only 25% of the students polled felt the written evaluations to be highly valuable, while 47% felt them to be valuable to a degree. 6% felt them to be worthless.

It was suggested by some students that the evaluations should be made to include space for written opinions. Some felt that questions should be worded clearly to make them distinct from one another.

Many students felt strongly that all departments and classes should make use of the evaluation forms. A minority of students advised that the use of evaluations should have an influence on those professors on tenure.

UMass Debate Team Going To Nationals

By ED PEPYNE

UMass has proven itself as a national debate power by qualifying to attend the exclusive National Debate Tournament. The Debate team qualified by taking third place at the District 8 Qualifying Tournament held in the Campus Center this weekend.

With two judges casting ballots each round, the UMass team of Roger Legendre and Terry Hofmann had an impressive 11-5 record for eight rounds of power paired competition.

Roger and Terry had unanimous decisions over Columbia, N.Y.U., West Point, and Canisius. They split decisions against Boston College, Boston University, and St. Anselms, while dropping both ballots against number one qualifier U.R.I.

It's every collegiate debater's goal to attend the National Debate Tournament. In a manner of speaking this tournement is the N.C.A.A. of debate. Only 50-60 select teams in the country are eligible to compete. This April the National Debate Tournament will be held at the United States Naval Academy in Annapolis Maryland.

To qualify for Nationals a debate team is either extended an at-large bid or they must place in the top four teams at their District Tournament. UMass is in District 8 which includes the New England States and New York in one of the most competitive districts in the country.

Although UMass has a long history of excellent debate because of some perenial debate powers and tough competition from a few Ivy League Schools, it has never before been able to qualify for Nationals.

Room Rents Increase Further

By MDC Staff

Yearly dormitory room rents will be going up next semester, but not by $4-11 as mentioned in Wednesday's Collegian.

Except for Sylvan, where there will be no increase, all areas are going to face at least a $35 increase in rent.

What this amounts to is:

—In Northeast and Central it means an increase of $35 from $640 to $675 in the renovated dorms, which include Lewis, Thatcher, Chadbourne, and Greenough. In the unrenovated dorms there's an increase of $35 from $580 to $615.

—In Orchard Hill there's a $35 increase from $640 to $675.

—In Sylvan rent remains at $700.

—In Southwest rent increases $40 to $680 from $640.

These figures have been recommended by the Student Senate Rents and Fees Committee, and are expected to be accepted by the administration with little difficulty.

Chuck Hampton, Financial Manager of Residence Halls, and Thomas Campion, Vice-Chancellor for Administrative Affairs, have both already accepted the Rents and Fees figures.

Also, Orchard Hill Residential College, Brett House, and Gorman House have not already paid off their construction costs.

Great Decisions

Panel Debates 'Man On Earth'

By STEVE TRIPOLI

"The root cause (of the ecology problem) must be sought in a political-economic system geared to production for profit," was the assessment of Assistant Professor of Economics Mike Best, part of a five-man panel discussing the topic of Man on Earth as part of Orchard Hill's Great Decisions debate series. The debate originated in Noah Webster House and was carried live over radio station WFCR.

Also featured on the panel were Luther Allen, a professor in the Political Science department and moderator of the panel, Joseph Marcus, Assistant Dean of the School of Engineering, Allen Hoffman, Assistant Professor of Physics, and David Schimmel, an Associate Professor at the School of Education.

Best blamed "misallocation of resources on a national scale" and "misplaced priorities" for a large part of the ecological problem in the United States today. He suggested socialization of the investment function as a possible solution for the problem.

Assistant Dean Marcus' comments centered around the question of whether or not man is willing to control his own environment, mentioning such factors as population growth. Saying that "The problems are extremely, extremely complex", Marcus stated that the use of technology is a must if the ecological problem is to be solved.

The energy situation and its implications were the basis of Professor Hoffman's comments. He said that America made a mistake 15 years ago when it committed itself to the use of nuclear energy to solve the energy problem but that the country is now "sort of locked in" to using nuclear energy, regardless of the ecological implications.

Associate Professor Schimmel's statement concerned whether or not man will be able to control himself in the use of the environment. He stated that man must "educate himself to live in better harmony with his world...the educational systems of most countries do not produce environmental literacy" in the people they educate. He also blamed the educational system for failing to deal with controversial and political ideas in the classroom.

"We have to develop an interdisciplinary as well as a disciplinary approach to the problem." A short question and answer period followed the opening statements.

Union Opposed By 5

Supporters of faculty unionization on campus here have encountered some strong opposition from five officers of the faculty senate Tuesday. Last night, one of the two unions attempting to be recognized as a bargaining agent voted to merge with the powerful campus affiliate of the Massachusetts Teachers' Assoc. (MTA).

The Collegian received a letter from five UMass professors this week announcing "a committee to oppose the establishment of collective bargaining on the Amherst campus at this time." The group includes Robert R. Wellman, secretary of the UMass faculty senate, and David A. Booth, presiding officer of the same body.

All five men are prominent in both campus politics and in the departments of political science, zoology, and geography.

Also on Wednesday night, the American Assoc. of University Professors Amherst chapter (AAUP) voted to seek collective bargaining authority allied with the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), the Amherst MTA affiliate.

The MSP membership is expected to approve a coalition of the two unions at a meeting tomorrow night. Both unions are scheduled to appear with a UMass administrative representative at preliminary hearings before the state Bureau of Personnel and Standardization next Tuesday to discuss the specifics of a bargaining unit which, as proposed, would include academic department heads.

UMass-Amherst Chancellor Randolph W. Bromery has said that he does not want department heads included in a bargaining unit because he considers them essentially administrators.

Union foe Wellman said Wednesday that he is afraid an "adversary relationship will develop between faculty and administration if unionization goes through. "I am not convinced of the efficacy of collective bargaining," Wellman said Wednesday, adding that "we already have effective mechanisms" for airing faculty grievances "which are based on good will."

Wellman said that under present procedures professors could request consideration of an issue through the faculty senate, calling that body "a relatively effective organization." He revealed that a new plan for involving students and faculty in administrative decisions about the University has been approved by an executive committee of the school's Board of Trustees, and is expected to be approved at the next meeting of the full Board.

He claims that the new system will have a "profound effect" on student-faculty involvement in decision making, adding that if collective bargaining becomes a reality at UMass the plan could not be used.

"The whole issue of student voice is completely up in the air," under collective bargaining proposals.

David E. Booker, 26, a junior and chairman of the UMass student senate has said that under unionization, "the faculty would negotiate with the administration and the students would be left out of it completely."

The five-man faculty group adds its voice to guarded administrative opposition to collective bargaining attempts. Opponents of an organized faculty feel that faculty interests will be no better represented to administrators and legislators under union leadership than they are now.

Additional 'Special' Spaces Requested In School of Ed

By CHERYL WALSH

A request, by deans Mortimer H. Appley of the Graduate School, and Robert M. Swasey, Graduate Registrar, that additional degree-program places be made available to the School of Education was discussed with "special students" of the School of Ed., Tuesday.

In the School of Education a "special student" is usually a graduate student and cannot remain in the School of Education after he has received 12 credits or has been in the School for one year.

In a statement on March 8 to Dean Norma Jean Anderson of the School of Ed. the "special students" suggested that a transfer of 100 of the 200 slots for next year's special student program be earmarked instead to facilitate degree-program places eliminated due to budget cuts.

Deans Appley and Swasey, unable to meet the full terms of the "special students" because of a planned decrease in the size of the Graduate School, did indicate that an additional 20 slots for the degree program for the fall have been alloted to the School of Ed.

"The University has responded in good faith," claims Ellen Murray, co-ordinator of the group.

The Graduate School "did all it could", but the final decision will be made by the Education Admissions Committee.

In a meeting Wednesday between the steering committee and Bill Wilson, assistant to Norma Jean Anderson, it became apparent that the final solution is pending the return of Dean Anderson, who is away on personal business this week.

The final decision, possibly coming the week of April 1, will decide the fate of the "special students" in Education.

Dairy Cattle Specialist In Malawi To Speak

Professor Emeritus Clarence H. Parsons, specialist in dairy cattle management extension, will speak to the Peace Corps interns, future volunteers and interested students tonight in Room 113, Stockbridge Hall at 7:30 p.m.

Professor Parsons spent four years in Malawi, Africa teaching Animal Science at Bunda University. The informal presentation will be illustrated by slides and followed by a discussion. Refreshments will be served.

Honors: More Revisions

A revision of the new Honors Program was omitted from the "Honors Program Revision Affirmed" article in Tuesday, March 20th's Collegian.

Under the new program affirmed by the University Faculty Senate at the end of last semester, any student who has completed one semester's work at the university may join the Commonwealth Scholar's Program. Commonwealth Scholars are exempted from regular university core requirements.

To remain in the program, however, the Commonwealth Scholar must maintain a cumulative average of at least 2.5, as opposed to the 3.0 previously required. If his/her average drops below this for two semesters (not necessarily two consecutive semesters), he may be dropped from the program. A student may also be dropped if he receives an "F" in each of two consecutive semesters.

Commonwealth Scholars must take one Honors Course each semester they are in the program or a minimum of six Honors Courses. Besides the academic requirements, there are procedural requirements. Information about these and other facets of the program may be obtained at the Honors Office in Machmer E-23, across from the CASIAC Office.

Hexachlorophene

Cleanliness Can Kill

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Federal records associate the deaths of 15 persons in this country with the external use of germ-killing solutions containing hexachlorophene.

The antibacterial cleansing agent in most cases was pHisoHex, manufactured by Winthrop Laboratories and containing 3 per cent hexachlorophene HCP, according to Food and Drug Administration records.

The manufacturer denied any link between the deaths and the use of pHisoHex.

HCP, once widely used in popular deodorant products sold over the counter, was banned from all but prescription products in September.

In announcing the ban, the FDA cited the deaths of 39 French infants and a university study correlating frequent bathings with HCP solutions and brain lesions in premature infants. But the agency did not tell newsmen of HCP's association with the 15 U.S. deaths even though it was aware of them.

Asked why, an agency spokesman said the French and university reports formed "the important data."

"Our action was fully responsive on the basis of the data as it was being developed," he said.

The FDA records do not list HCP as cause of the 15 deaths, which occurred between 1954 and 1971. Instead, they are reported in a September, 1972 FDA summary under a category entitled: "Fatal Reactions Associated with Topical Use" of HCP.

The FDA summary also lists several nonfatal reactions and other deaths associated with accidental swallowing of products containing HCP.

Many of the 15 deaths under the topical use category occurred during a period when Winthrop Laboratories was not reporting any adverse reactions to the product to the FDA.

An official of Sterlin Drug, Inc., which owns Winthrop Laboratories, said in a telephone interview that the deaths noted in the FDA report "are not pHisoHex deaths."

"Just because someone happens to be bathing with hexachlorophene at the time he dies doesn't mean he dies from hexachlorophene," said Dr. Monroe Trout, Sterling's medical director.

The FDA records on fatal reactions associated with HCP cite instances in hospitals of the use of pHisoHex on burns and in enemas and vaginal packs. The dead included both adults and children.

Guards Learn Crowd Control

WALPOLE, Mass. (AP) - Forty-six Walpole state prison guards, back to work under a court order after a five-day strike, were assigned to the State Police Academy Wednesday for up to eight weeks training in crowd control and security procedure.

About 20 others, to the Correction Department's academy at Bridgewater for retraining.

Guards returned to work under a court order Tuesday after their walkout to demand more control over the maximum security institution.

Except for three guards who were assigned to a check point inside the prison, none of the strikers were allowed in direct contact with prisoners because of fear of violence.

Commissioner John O. Boone said Wednesday that one of Walpole's two segregation blocks was being closed. Instead of disciplining all prisoners by putting them in segregation, Boone said, some would now be locked in their cells, while others would be placed in the remaining segregation unit.

Two classification boards began hearing cases Wednesday of prisoners who had been placed in the segregation units, and two guards sat on each board.

A Correction Department spokesman said that guards would be told standard operating procedure for prison jobs. Before they went on strike, the men complained that rules were vague, and they weren't sure of their duties.

Inside the prison walls, the spokesman said, supervisory personnel and civilians who worked during the strike continued to do most jobs. Most of the state police who had been called in were removed, and returning strikers took their places on the prison walls and gates.

POWs OK

CHICOPEE, Mass. (AP) - A psychiatrist at Westover Air Force Base says the 14 former war prisoners being processed at the base show no signs of severe problems, according to Maj. Richard Cox, information officer for Project Homecoming.

Cox said one of the base psychiatrists told him that the 14 former POW's "were just like they were when they left, just like anybody else."

Four of the former prisoners were visiting with their families this week and were expected back at the hospital at a later date. For the other 10, Cox said, Wednesday was a slightly emotional day.

Cox said he brought the men posters and letters sent by elementary school children in Springfield and in Jersey City, N.J.

"The men didn't say too much," Cox said, "I think they choked up a little bit. They would just lay the letters and posters down, and turn away for a moment."

The posters, saying "I love you" and "Welcome Back," were sent by kindergarten students in Room 3, Tapley School, Springfield.

The letters, addressed to the returnees as a group, were written by fourth-graders from P.S. No. 25, Room 112, Jersey City, N.J.

Cox said he didn't see all the letters but said most of them seemed to start out with the greeting "Hi, I don't know what to say, but . . ."

Four of the men are from New Jersey.

Cox said one of the former POWs, Maj. Robert Biss, 33, of Brewer, Me., will hold a news conference Thursday and will probably depart for a home visit Saturday. Biss was taken prisoner in 1966.

The other men still on the base are:

Capt. Joseph Milligan, 31, of Annandale, N.J.; Lt. Col. Kenneth North, 42, Wellfleet; Maj. Charles Greene Jr., 37, Schenectady, N.Y.; Lt. Col. Robert Ingvalson, 44, Sanford, Me.; Maj. Russell Temperley, 37, North Falmouth; Capt. Lauren Lengyel, 37, West Peabody, Mass.; Capt. Wallace Newcomb, 32, Painted Post, N.Y.; Capt. Gerald Venanzi, 28, Trenton, N.J.; and Capt. Robert Jones, 29, Chatham, N.J.

Judge Keeps Watergate Sources A Secret

WASHINGTON (AP) - A U.S. District Court judge Wednesday threw out an attempt by Republican party officials to force 11 newsmen to reveal their sources and other unpublished information relating to the Watergate bugging case.

Judge Charles R. Richey squashed all subpoenas issued by attorneys for the Committee for the Re-election of the President against representatives of the Washington Post, the Washington Star-News, Time Magazine and the New York Times.

The newsmen had been ordered to appear for depositions being prepared on the GOP's side of three civil suits arising from the break-in and wire-tapping of Democratic national headquarters last June. The subpoenas required that they bring notes, tapes and other confidential materials gathered from Democratic leaders, the FBI, the police and the U.S. attorney's office.

The four news organizations had received a court-approved delay in responding before successfully arguing their motion to squash.

Joseph Califano, attorney for the Washington Post, told the court that to approve the subpoenas would have infringed on press freedoms under the First and Fourth Amendments.

Richey, in his brief oral ruling, said he did not find the First Amendment an absolute guarantee of press confidentiality, but agreed that the exceptions did not apply in this case.

Califano said many of the revelations in the Watergate scandal "would never have been told had it not been for confidential sources."

Noting that Watergate "is still a breaking story," Califano said that any disclosures forced by the courts would have the effect of prior restraint on future stories.

Kenneth W. Parkinson, representing the Republicans, said that "I have not heard one legitimate reason why these newsmen should not appear and testify like every other person.

"Communications made to journalists do not enjoy any privilege against use as evidence," Parkinson said.

Legislative Support Given To Elderly

By MARY THORNTON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - The national chairman of the Legislative Council for Older Americans Wednesday said that austerity is a privilege reserved for the elderly the United States.

In testimony to the legislature's Social Welfare Committee shortly before the committee voted unanimously to report favorably on a bill to increase income by Old Age Assistance, Frank Manning said, "When Nixon gives up his third home, when John P. Getty gives up his third home, and the extra Cadillacs, then we'll have austerity. Meanwhile, it's a privilege reserved for the elderly."

The testimony heard by the committee unanimously favored the bill, with dozens of state legislators testifying before the audience of more than 700 senior citizens.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D—Mass., sent a telegram in support of the bill, saying that often "the elderly find their retirement years a time of anxiety, insecurity and despair rather than one of dignity and meaning."

Also sending a telegram in support of the bill was former House Speaker John W. McCormack who said, "The problems of the elderly are profound and this legislation will not cure all of them, but it will mute one aspect of their daily struggle for survival-the economic uncertainty inherent in the present program."

The problems of the elderly in America were blamed on "nothing less than a moral breakdown at the national level," by Professor Steve Worth of Northeastern University.

"We herd our elderly into the city, and when darkness comes, they must barricade themselves against the night" because of the rampant crime in the cities, Worth said.

Worth also blamed the plight of the nation's elderly on the erosion of the family unit and said, "They have been betrayed by the system which they so passionately defend, even now."

The committee was presented a petition in support of the bill, signed by more than 10,000 elderly residents of the Commonwealth.

Manning, who presented the petition, said, "We will not be quieted until the senior citizens of America can live in decency and not with the spectre of want and deprivation."

If the bill is enacted, Old Age Assistance in Massachusetts would increase Jan. 1, 1974. For an individual, there would be an increase of about 7 per cent from $199 per month to $213 per month; and for a couple the jump would be just under 3 per cent from $296 per month to $304 per month.

All elderly residents with income below the federally defined levels of adequacy would be eligible for state financial assistance, which would increase over a five-year period to $327 per month for an individual and $467 per month for a couple in 1976.

Provisions of recently enacted federal legislation are included in the bill, allowing the elderly to disregard unearned income of up to $20 per month and earned income of up to $65 per month. Half of earned income over $65 per month could be disregarded, until the person exceeded federal adequacy standards.

Rent Control Cities Listed

WASHINGTON (AP) - A list of cities and urban areas that could be affected under a Senate-passed bill to control rents was provided Wednesday by Sen. Clifford P. Case, R—N.J.

Case said the list was compiled on the basis of rental vacancy rates supplied by the 1970 census figures. But, because the figures are more than two years old, each area would necessarily have to be reexamined, he said.

The trigger for controls would be a vacancy rate of 5.5 per cent or lower.

The bill must be acted upon the House.

The list: Fall River, Mass.-R.I., Hartford, Conn., Lowell, Mass., Manchester, N.H., Albany, Schectady, Troy, N.Y., Boston, Mass., Bridgeport, Conn., Bristol, Conn., Brockton, Mass., Danbury, Conn., Meriden, Conn., New Bedford, Mass., New Britain, Conn., New Haven, Conn., Norwalk, Conn., Pittsfield, Mass., Worcester, Mass.

Representation

On April 23, the President of the Student Government Association will be elected by electoral college for the first time, as a result of a referendum passed by the student body two weeks ago. Representatives of area governments and the Senate itself will comprise the members of the electoral college. On April 17, candidates for the office of SGA President will be made public.

The SGA President is the leader of all undergraduate students, and therefore all undergraduate students should have a voice in the selection process. The students voted to have the SGA President elected by an electoral college rather than a direct, popular election. However, it is still the duty of each and every student to have some say as to who their leader shall be.

Therefore, all students should carefully examine the candidates for the office, as well as the issues and platforms, once they are made public on April 17. They then must let their preferences be known to their respective area government representatives and Student Senate representatives. In addition, area government members and Student Senators should actively seek the preferences of their constituency. Only in this way will the electoral college be truly representative of the students.

Blow Up!

By MARIAN PROKOP

I must live in the most popular dorm on campus. Besides being the most charming and captivating, we seem to have more bomb scares than any other dorm in Southwest. I think we've had at least five in the past three weeks. This is fine if you like bomb scares, but along with the majority, I really don't like being forced out of my warm cozy bed by the ungodly sound of that alarm and then running out into cold, miserable, March weather with my pajamas on. It is especially frustrating when you live in a high-rise and have to run down scores of steps knowing that NOTHING is going to happen. Sometimes I wish the building WOULD blow up just so that getting up in the middle of the night and running down eighteen flights of stairs would have some meaning. But with bomb scares, it all just seems SO-OOO futile.

Then there's the waiting period while the police check out the building. This is the worst part of the ordeal. What do you do while waiting for a building NOT to blow up? Thanks to a friend whose hobby is making lists, I have compiled a choice offering of "Things To Do While Waiting for a Building Not to Blow Up:"

1) Circle the vowels on the front page of the Collegian.
2) Bake baking powder.
3) Invent a recipe for cream of prune soup.
4) Think up names for baked baking powder.
5) Prepare a eulogy over a deaf flashlight battery.
6) Design a float for the Cootie Parade.
7) Melt bananas.
8) Drink the float you designed for the Cootie Parade.
9) See how many words you can make from the various letters in Bomb Scare (like bear, bare, bam, scram, cab).
10) Completely take apart your bike and mix up the pieces.
11) Figure out how the hell you're going to get the damn bike back together.
12) Imitate a mole.
13) Send for a copy of the bus schedule in Thermopolis, Wyoming.
14) Keep a diary on the progress of mole imitations.
15) Sort out the tiny time pills in a Contac capsule, according to size.
17) Watch a grape drink.
18) Think up weird names for people out of corny cliches (like Kaye Sera-Sera, Warren Peace, and Ivan Tobehappy.)

Follow this list and you will never have to worry about what to do when "that time" comes around again. Now bomb scares can be fun! Perhaps even educational and rewarding experiences which will enhance interpersonal relationships.

Nonetheless, bomb scares can still be a drag, especially when you've got an 8:00 class the next day. So please, bomb scare callers, pick on some other dorm for a change, or better still don't call at all. If you get the urge to make one of those calls, call a stray cat instead or try one of those nifty "things to do" because quite frankly, I'd rather sleep.

Aid To N. Vietnam: Yes

The argument in favor of aid to North Vietnam can be made on legal and moral grounds and need contain no reference to precedent since one cannot deduce legal realities and normative propositions from what has been the case in the past.

First, the United States has a legal responsibility to give aid to North Vietnam insofar as Chapter 8, Article 21 of the Paris Peace Accord states that the U.S. "will contribute to healing the wounds of war and to postwar reconstruction of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam and throughout Indochina." Thus if the United States fails to give aid to North Vietnam it would be breaking a contract made between two free agents. This would have two effects. It would not only encourage North Vietnam to also break the agreement and thereby lead to a resumption of the war but would also serve notice to the rest of the world that the United States is a country whose word is not to be trusted. This second effect would have the further effect of undermining the already precarious foundation upon which the U.S. and other countries are attempting to alleviate the tensions which have plagued international relations for the last several decades.

> "We have a legal responsibility to give aid to North Vietnam..."

The moral argument rests upon the premise that the United States' participation in the Vietnam war was both politically foolhardy and ethically condemnable. Part of the moral guilt which the United States bears for the war derives from the fact that it improperly interceded in the internal affairs of another nation. More importantly, the United States committed numerous war crimes in respect to North Vietnam including, but not limited to, defoliation of the forests, the bombing of much of its arable land into a dusty rubble, the forcing of the wrenching and painful relocation of millions of its peasant population, and the slaughter of countless numbers of its civilians. Since the United States is responsible for these effects of the war, it follows that it has an obligation to alleviate the suffering it has caused by giving North Vietnam a significant amount of humanitarian aid so that it can begin to rebuild its countryside and the lives of its citizens.

The argument that the United States should not give aid to a former enemy is entirely vacuous. The reason why North Vietnam had the unfortunate experience of becoming an enemy of the United States was because the latter country saw fit to stick its nose into the private civil war of another country. The above argument might at least have a claim to logical, if not moral, validity had North Vietnam launched an armada of its dangerous and fierce looking fishing vessels to attack Miami beach but this, as most people know, was not the case. It was the United States which attacked North Vietnam and not North Vietnam which attacked the United States. The North Vietnamese did not invite the United States to rape its countryside and murder its citizens. It was the United States which took this role upon itself first, or so the public relations people told us, to preserve the freedom and integrity of the South Vietnamese, then to stop the march of international Communism, and finally to preserve the honor of America. Thus the argument that the United States should not give aid to North Vietnam because it was a former enemy would not even achieve rational respectability unless it had been the U.S. which had been attacked by North Vietnam.

In summary, from Chapter 8, Article 21 of the Paris Peace Accord it follows that the United States has a legal commitment to give aid to North Vietnam and from the reality of the intense suffering which the United States caused during the course of the war it follows that this aid should be of a substantial and not merely token nature.

Aid To N. Vietnam: No

Of all the lunacies proliferating on the political scene today, none are more blatantly obscene than the notion that the taxpaying citizens of the United States have a moral "obligation" to aid in the economic reconstruction of communist North Vietnam. The obscenity is compounded by the fact that its adherents include the likes of Richard Nixon, Henry Kissinger, and William Rogers.

"In pursuance of its traditional policy, the United States will contribute to the healing of the wounds of war and to the postwar reconstruction of the Democratic Republic of (North) Vietnam and throughout Indochina."

So reads the ceasefire agreement, which is daily being relegated to the status of Paper Tiger. The above clause fails to point out that the United States does not have a traditional policy of stalemate evacuations, nor has it ever had a policy of providing direct aid to a government with which it had been at war. We have had a policy, some believe to be morally appropriate, of contributing to the postwar reconstruction of former enemy nations. But apparently, Dr. Kissinger and Le Duc Tho forgot that our traditional policy included:

> "National sentiment is strongly opposed to giving the Reds one red cent..."

1) the pursuit and achievement of a military defeat of the enemy government; 2) the dismantling of the enemy political apparatus; 3) the jailing and/or execution of all significant surviving enemy leaders; 4) the installation of democratic regimes in place of the former dictatorships. So far, the ceasefire has not led to the implementation of any of the preceding.

Those who believe that the United States has a moral "obligation" to rebuild the economic capabilities of the Communist regime are usually the same people who have been rooting, either openly or in closed company, for the Communists all along. In their view, the attempts made to counter Communist military aspirations have been nothing short of "naked aggression." The shoe, however, is on the other foot. The goal of the Indochinese Communists is, and has always been, the establishment of total, uncontested rule over the entire area. Military aggression has been their primary tool in the pursuit of that goal. To them, the current "ceasefire" is nothing more than a temporary charade, designed to secure an American evacuation and restore the balance of military power to the Communist advantage.

Fortunately for our country, the American people do not hold in high esteem those who have been denouncing our role in Indochina with adjectives such as "imperialist" and "aggressor." If they were the primary advocates of aid to the Communists, the rulers of North Vietnam would not waste any time hoping for the dollars to fall out of the sky. But, unfortunately, when the power and prestige of the highest office in the land are placed behind the proposal, there is a strong likelihood that the Communist will have something to be optimistic about. Perhaps two and a half billion dollars worth of optimism.

In an effort to restore its image from the depths of ineffectuality, Congress has been sending forth some negative rumbles from both sides of the aisle. Staunch war-hawks such as Barry Goldwater have been severely critical of the plan to extend revenue sharing to include Hanoi. Such is to be expected. But even those who were critical of Nixon's war policies have also expressed doubts about the advisability of granting aid to the North. Among this group, Senators George McGovern and William Proxmire have been the most prominent. To them, the money proposed for North Vietnam could be better spent in the United States for the American people.

The overwhelming majority of the American people oppose any aid to the Communists, so long as they are still in a position to commit acts of aggression against South Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia. It should be made perfectly clear to the President that national sentiment is strongly opposed to giving the Reds as much as one red cent. Write your Congressman!

Reject Polaroid-Apartheid Project

To The Editor:

The Polaroid Corporation, that manufactures the Photo-IDs for the Union of South Africa's legal system of racial discrimination, Apartheid, is being considered by the University to replace the current manufacturers of our student IDs. The present contract expires this year, and bids on the new contract will open in April.

One of the basic tools of Apartheid is the personal Photo-ID system, with its legal designation of the bearer as White, Coloured, Asiatic or African, that must be carried at all times by non-whites, under threat of imprisonment and forced-labor. This Photo-ID is a commercial product of the Polaroid Corporation.

The Dean of Students office, through Mr. Randal Dahl, is revamping the student Photo-ID system, with the goal of having the full operation take place here on the UMass campus. In a telephone conversation, Mr. Dahl told me that, this concentration of the Photo-ID manufacturing onto the campus would very likely involve the necessity of a Polaroid process. On the question of doing our Photo-ID business with the same corporation that manufactures the explicitly racist Photo-IDs for Apartheid in the Union of South Africa, Mr. Dahl said that he had no interest in either ethical or moral issues. His only considerations were financial responsibility (cost) and convenience, (lack of hassles).

The POLAROID-APARTHEID PROJECT is a collaboration of concerned members of the University community, working to educate ourselves and others about the connections between the racist policies of the Union of South Africa and commercial involvement of American corporations in those policies. We see the Polaroid Corporation's involvement in Apartheid, not only as an essential part of that oppressive institution, but more significantly as a means by which American technology is applied by American corporations both to oppress and to profit by the oppression of non-whites in the Union of South Africa.

From the egalitarian and democratic standpoint of our American ideals, we find it monstrous that the technological capabilities of a Boston-based, American firm are used in this manner. From the same standpoint, for the University community to consider engaging in a contract that would further enhance the profit and the power of such a firm, to underwrite even further technological developments in the creation of ID systems for the non-whites of the Union of South Africa, is monstrous in the extreme. This is not merely a matter of financial responsibility.

We urge that any suggestion of the University's involvement with a Polaroid process for its Photo-ID system be rejected. If you are interested in this issue there will be a workshop on the POLAROID-APARTHEID PROJECT as part of the N.A.M. Symposium on Racism and Capitalism of April 4-5-6. Or contact one of the following persons involved in the project:

New Honors Program

To The Editor:

Due to an unavoidable error, a very important revision of the new Honors Program was omitted from the "Honors Program Revisions Affirmed" article printed in Tuesday, March 20th's edition of the Collegian. Under the new program affirmed by the University Faculty Senate at the end of last semester, any student who has completed one semester's work at the university may join the Commonwealth Scholar's Program. Commonwealth Scholars are exempted from regular university core requirements.

To remain in the program, however, the Commonwealth Scholar must maintain a cumulative average of at least 2.5, as opposed to the 3.0 previously required. If his/her average drops below this for two semesters (not necessarily two consecutive semesters), he may be dropped from the program. A student may also be dropped if he receives an "F" in each of two consecutive semesters.

Commonwealth Scholars must take one Honors Course each semester they are in the program or a minimum of six Honors Courses. Besides the academic requirements, there are procedural requirements such as conferring with one's preceptor in regard to courses and other matters, informing the Honors Office of any change in address, major, or preceptor, and etc.

For further information regarding the new University Honors Program, students can refer to Tuesday's article and stop by the Honors Office in Machmer E-23, across from the CASIAC Office.

Brotherhood

To All Men:

Do you think that there is more to being a man than a constant round of chug-a-lug? Do you believe that men are capable of deeper discussions with each other than batting averages and bowling scores? Is the breadth of your heart more important than the length of your penis? Have you forgotten–or never known–how to be honest, open and emotional with another man? Without being competitive? Do you think that men can touch each other without thinking of themselves as weird? Have you felt the need to discuss yourself as a man with other men? That's why we're here. And we want to meet you, talk with you and get to know you. We want to be at one with you and want you to be at one with us. We want you to find out that there are lots of men hassling with the same preoccupations that you have. If you will offer us the opportunity of meeting you we will offer you brotherhood in return. And that's a pretty good deal. Don't you think?

Best Is Bad

To The Editor:

We the members of the eighteenth floor George Washington, would like to comment on a situation which we consider an unfortunate occurrence at best. That which we are referring to is the commentary of the UMass-North Carolina game. Kent Best, in our opinion, did a remarkably atrocious job, manifesting not only his insensitivity to the game of basketball, but more importantly his utter disregard for the feelings and reputations of the Minutemen. Anyone who listened to the game could not help but disgust at the remarks made by Mr. Best concerning the team personnel. His commentary of the game itself left much to be desired in our opinion, but his comments about the players leave room for no excuse. To say to the UMass population listening in such things as Tom McLaughlin "doesn't look as if he is part of them", "John Murphy has no business shooting, and he has just realized he is at Madison Square Garden", and "Skinner must have picked up that shot at Boyden", clearly illustrates Best's gross incompetence at commenting Minutemen athletics. We have listed just a few of the multinous, derogatory, inaccurate, and simply ignorant statements made by Kent Best in order to make our point. People who listened to the game can certainly refer to many more.

In closing, we would like to say nothing more than Kent Best sucks as an announcer, and has no right inflicting himself upon the UMass population for any future athletic events.

Wanted: Girl To Rap

To The Editor:

If you would put this in your paper I'd be very thankful! My name is Ray and I'm an ex-veteran staying at V.A. Hospital in Northampton. I'm 20 years old and thanks to the service I've become very shy and generally a loner. I'd like a mature minded girl to write to me. Someone who just likes to rap.

Bravo Afro-Am!

To The Editor:

I would like to congratulate Mrs. Esther Terry and the Black Repertory Theatre on their recent production of Fela Davies' Father, Son and Woman. It was a masterpiece of theatrical work and the Africans, especially Nigerians, who watched the production couldn't have been happier to seethat, at last, the real Afro-American and African culture is finally shown in its true form. I also wish to congratulate the W. E. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies for its efforts in familiarizing the Amherst community with the culture and people of Africa. On this campus, as on many others, most black students are getting bored focusing just on blackness and themselves. There is too much going on for us to lead such a narrow life. Other students see liberation of the oppressed minorities as the end, with selective concessions to the current power structure as a means to that end. I am indeed happy to note that the Afro-American Studies Department and its Cultural Center is seeking to find a synthesis of these two views. I hope that the Department will continue to offer an academic approach of the historical, cultural, aesthetic and behavioral aspects operating within and behind these views.

Let America understand that the Afro-American Studies is aimed at giving both black and white people an understanding of the black heritage that has given rise to black nationalisms. I feel that you and I (both black and white) can only contribute to the black liberation by teaching the truth to the students about the contribution of the African people (Afro-American) to this country and to teach especially how institutionalized racism has given rise to black nationalism as an ideological tool in the black liberation struggle. American history will be the final judge of all this activity.

Bravo Esther Terry. Bravo Afro-American Studies Department. Bravo Black Repertory Theatre. Keep on Keeping on.

National Meat Boycott

To The Editor:

In view of the runaway food prices which President Nixon expects us to endure until the end of this year, when the increases should (they predict) fall to zero, I ask you as my fellow residents of Amherst to join the national meat boycott planned for the week of April 1-7. This boycott is to show that Americans, as consumers, are not going to be fooled any longer with the President's endless promises for help in the near future.

The Cost of Living Council asserts that the reason for the price increases is that Americans are more affluent this year through expanded incomes, and are, therefore, demanding more foods, especially meats. Whether or not you believe this, you must admit certain occupational levels undoubtedly saw no such increases. These people must suffer for the year, if they don't starve to death first. However, the President does have certain of his advisers offering certain helpful suggestions such as, "Let them eat cheese," which is unfortunately as expensive as meats in terms of protein content, and another suggestion was "Eat a little bit less," which for a family already living in bare subsistence, offers little consolation.

Since most of my fellow students will be traveling during vacation, I ask you to urge those you encounter to participate in the meat boycott planned for April 1-7. It is an effective way for those of you who have been cursing in Supermarkets lately to release those tensions towards a more productive end. We may not overturn the system, but we could make it uncomfortable for our President.

In Defense Of Richard Howland

To The Editor:

Over the past month or so the Student Senate has debated at great length its new Legal Services Office. The proposal was presented to the Senate by my committee and after a series of give and take discussion, the bill has created a strong and worthwhile office. Excepting one further amendment to come before the Senate this Wednesday, the bill has finally reached its completed form.

The new bill changes the old office of General Counsel in many ways, but the most important change is the creation of a strong Board of Governors that, among its other responsibilities, decides on general policies for the office.

What many people don't understand is that Richard Howland proposed a similar amendment to the Senate a while back and it was passed. The Senate did not act on it, however. Now, in the midst of the debate over the new bill and its amendments, a small group of people have begun an anti-Howland movement. The focus of their attack is not on the ability or inability of Richard Howland nor the effectiveness of his office, but on his integrity and personal life. I have heard stories about missing files from the L.S.O. and lengthy interrogations about Attorney Howland's personal life. Such conduct is appalling and at the very least destructive to the operation of the new office and should be stopped immediately.

The bill has brought out long discussion about outside practice among other issues. It seems that the anti-Howland investigators think that because the subject was brought up it necessarily means that Dick Howland is or was carrying on outside practice inconsistent with his work for the students of this University. This, to my knowledge, is simply untrue. Attorney Howland addresses his work with the highest personal and professional integrity. This small group has also mentioned that they believe that Attorney Howland has received referral fees from other lawyers and agencies such as the Amherst Towing Service (Collegian, March 15). These people are letting their imagination run away with them.

These attacks on Dick Howland's integrity are not, in my mind, fostered by a concern for the student body, but by personal vendettas against him, such action in inconceivable.

I ask that these people sit back for a few minutes and think about their motivations. Their actions are certainly not helping the smooth operation of the new Legal Services Office. Their actions only serve to make Attorney Howland's life a miserable one and his work below his potential. Maybe that's all they wanted to do anyway.

Richard Howland and I have argued with each other over the new office many times and at great length. I disagree with him on many points and will work in opposition to him on those points. But those arguments are over a bill. One that will last after Atty. Howland and most of the rest of us are gone. It is of the utmost importance that all of us realize that the changes concern the Office of General Counsel. They in no way, have anything to do with Atty. Howland's work was admirable and I am sure his work will remain as meritorious under the new office.

In Appreciation

To The Editor:

The Brothers of Nu Zeta Chapter of Phi Mu Delta would like to use this paper to express our sincere appreciation to the university community for their support of the National Phi Mu Delta Muscular Dystrophy Marathon held this last weekend.

We would like to especially extend out thanks to: Jill Cochrane of the Student Activities Office for her invaluable assistance, The Campus Center Board of Governors for their support, The Sisters of Sigma Kappa, Chi Omega, Iota Gamma Upsilon and Alpha Chi Omega for the food they supplied, Coca-Cola for their donation of Coke, The Campus Center Food Service for their assistance with the food and Trico of Easthampton, Mr. John McCloud and The Amherst Savings Bank for help tabulating the money.

We would like to express our gratitude to the bands who donated their talents to the marathon: Mack Shafu, Maelstrom Blues Group, Big Screamin' Magrew, Peazda, Steve Hudjrek, Stillwaters, Rush, and Pendrift.

We would like to thank those couples who entered, both those that finished and those who could not. And our congratulations go to the winners: Brian Boysoe and Jeanne Reagan of Phi Mu Delta, Barry Lyle and Diane Goff of Sigma Kappa and the first runner-up, Al Roby and Laura DeNardo of Mu Kappa Chapter of Phi Mu Delta, Slippery Rock, Pa., who traveled 650 miles to compete.

Above all we would like to thank all those who contributed to support the couples and allow $4,270.19 to be raised for Muscular Dystrophy.

Paper Recycling

To The Editor:

This letter is addressed to anyone who has in any way been involved with the paper recycling on this campus.

First, for all those students to whom we have been promising bins for so long, we're very sorry to say that you won't be getting them after all--at least not this semester. After a super hassle over ordering procedures and legal technicalities, we were confronted with an even greater problem. According to original conditions, each bin that was supplied for the project by the physical plant was on "loan", subject to "recall" as needed for other uses. So unfortunately, four of the bins previously used for paper are now needed for other buildings. It was an unforeseeable setback, but we are going to try again for next year with the promise of the physical plant that any future CEQ bins will be used only for paper.

Second, for all you very well-meaning, eager, but not so well-informed environmentalists who have decided to undertake a paper recycling project in your dorms, please don't--not until you know all the procedures and the facts. There is a lot more to paper recycling than merely placing boxes in your dorms. You need a place to put those papers when the boxes are full. We have received so many calls this year from dorm and area directors asking us to please cart away these boxloads of papers. Unfortunately, we have neither the time nor the manpower to perform this function. The paper project is a very organized one designed to prevent occurrences such as these. Individual efforts are gratifying, but generally end up in a corridor overflowing with paper--and disintegration of interest.

All we can say to those who have become skeptical, is please don't get discouraged. It's a long, slow process, but we are working very hard to get an organized program in each of the dorm areas. Each semester we get a little closer to the goal. But when all the technical matters are worked out, that is when we most need your suppert to make this thing work. Many students tend to get frustrated and lose interest, thinking that nothing is being done, so wtiy should they continue to bether. Well, something most definitely is being done--we have not forgetten or excluded any group from becoming involved. But before we can enlist further support we must initially cover all the details.

Third, we would like to thank all the people who are directly involved with keeping the existing program alive. We couldn't even consider expanding the project if the present one wasn't as successful as it is.

Walpole Observation

To The Editor:

On Monday, I spent eight hours as an observer in one of the cell blocks at Walpole State Prison. For over a week, teams of volunteers have been admitted to the prison on every shift to observe and, by their presence, to help maintain a calm atmosphere inside. The presence of such outsiders was requested and negotiated by representatives of the inmates. The observers became more vital when the guards at Walpole went on strike last week, apparently gambling that their unlawful pullout would result in chaos and violence, necessitating a return on conditions of their own choosing. (or an Attica shot-in). Either way, the prisoners' role in responsible administration of the institution would be discredited. The gamble failed. The prison functioned with more self-control and calm, less tension and trouble than it has for months with the regular guards present.

On the basis of my limited observation and long conversations with 8-10 inmates, I think the major factor in keeping Walpole running smoothly was the spirit, sense of unity, and common commitment of the prisoners themselves. They repeatedly insisted that being treated with human dignity was the primary issue. A broad range of specific greivances and demands followed from this starting point but, as at Attica, being accepted as men was the heart of the matter. They wanted inmate participation in decision-making affecting their lives--not to run the prison, but a valid, recognized dependable, permanent voice in the administration of Walpole and in prompt settlement of specific complaints. They wanted prompt settlement of specific complaints. They wanted job training and educational programs that genuinely prepared them for functioning in society (not just stamping out license plates) and they resented all the doors that are closed in the faces of "ex-cons". They demanded an end to brutality, beating by guards, and other degrading practices. I heard a great deal of anecdotal history concerning such misconduct, with enough supporting evidence to believe that most, if not all, of the episodes happened as described. Other specific points and horror stories could be recited but the central issues are clear in what I have said. (Although I talked briefly with some of the stand-in staff, I can present first hand only the inmates' side of the struggle. The regular Walpole guards have a difficult job under trying circumstances. I suspect they could tell their "horror stories" too. I doubt, however, that they would cancel or outweigh the essential validity or urgency of the prisoners' position.)

The stakes in the Walpole matter are high, not only for the men who must live and work in prison. Public, press, and political cross-currents are strong, with one side apparently seeking to banish Commissioner Boone and apply a Rockefeller-Nixon version of "get tough, no pity" law and order. Such a development would be a disaster and a tragedy. The inmates know the history of Attica and profess to be strong, united, and prepared to refuse cooperation with any such hard-line approach, whatever the cost.

Rapping with them was a fascinating, humbling, encouraging experience. There are such positive and constructive elements such remarkable cohesion and maturity in their outlook and behavior. I urge everyone in the UMass community to write or telegraph Governor Sargent to retain Commissioner Boone and to work for a resolution at Walpole that fully respects the inmates and their rights.

Driving Questions

Recently there has a been a rash of motor vehicles registration and insurance violations which can be avoided. Before you operate a car that is not your own, at least ask the owner about registration and insurance. The operator of a car is responsible and may have to pay the high fines involved. If you have permission, then the owner is more likely to have the problem.

Motorcycles have the same registration and insurance requirements as cars. Since their operation is more seasonal, be sure that your documents and coverage is up to date before picking up where you left off last fall.

All motor vehicles (including motorcycles) must be inspected between April 1 and May 15 and between September 1 and October 15 for safety. As soon as vacation ends cars should be routinely inspectes so that hassles can be avoided.

The following information may answer some questions:

MOTOR VEHICLE REGISTRATION & TITLE SYSTEM

Every non-resident student who operates a motor vehicle not registered in Massachusetts must file certain information in triplicate with the police department of the city in which his school is located or at the campus Security Office. The penalty for failure to file is a fine of not more than $50. An annual stcker is required to be affixed to the car. There is no charge for this "student registration" and it applies only to students. (Ch. 90 Sec. 3)

A person who receives any wages or any financial assistance in Massachusetts is required by law to register his automobile in Massachusetts and to obtain Massachusetts license plates. This

The American Indian Theatre Ensemble, the first native American theatre in existence in this country, will perform in Bowker Auditorium this evening at 8.

This program, offered to the public without charge, is under the auspices of the University's Fine Arts Council and the Massachusetts Council on Arts and Humanities. Tonight's program will include "Na Haaz Zan" and "Body Indian". "Na Haaz Zan" is adapted from the Navajo creation myth. "Body Indian" is a social comment on the present day Indian situation. The entire program is an attempt to inspire the native Americans to work for social justice.

Tonight's performance by the American Indian Theatre Ensemble marks the company's, founded by La Mama's Ellen Stewart, first New England tour.

Registration, Insurance Hassles

legal obligation is, however, not always strictly enforced. If you want to register your car in Massachusetts, you begin the process through an auto insurance company. If you register to vote in Massachusetts, you probably should register your motor vehicle in Massachusetts.

If you are the owner or operator of a vehicle registered in a state other than Massachusetts or are licensed to drive by another state, special rules apply regarding your retention of the other state's registration or license and the facts of your presence and use of a vehicle in Massachusetts. Generally, if you earn income (usually including grants for teaching and the like) you are required to be registered and licensed by Massachusetts after thirty (30) days in such status.

In any event, if you are driving a vehicle registered in another state, Chapter 90 Section 3 requires you carry insurance at least comparable to Massachusetts compulsory insurance minimums.

It should be obvious that anyone operating a vehicle registered in another state would be well advised to verify their insurance and right to operate in Massachusetts with the Registry or with an attorney. The minimum fine for improper isurance is $100. It is not a situation that can be corrected retroactively, ordinarily, and a car thought to be uninsured or unregistered by the police must be towed and the owner pays for the tow and storage.

It is strongly advisable to have liability insurance many times in excess of the legal requirements. Your present assets and also your future earnings may be taken by a liability damage settlement or judgment.

The main provisions of no-fault insurance in Massachusetts concern bodily injury and property damage. In regard to bodily injury, no matter who is at fault in an accident, the insurance company of an injured driver pays up to $2,000 per person for the total of (1) medical expenses, (2) other accident-related expenses, and (3) 75% of lost wages. For all damages in excess of $2,000, and in a number of special cases, the usual tort system of lawsuits applies. This system applies only to drivers whose cars are registered in Massachusetts.

When a car which has been loaned to another person besides the owner is involved in an accident the owner's insurance applies to the accident. If and only if damages exceed the owner's insurance does the insurance of the driver apply.

In Massachusetts, unlike most other states, a person may register a car while between the ages of 18 and 20.

Automobile insurance rates are based partly on the location of the car for most of the year. Insurance rates for the Town of Amherst are lower than in many other areas and especially lower than in cities. Therefore, if your car is located in Amherst for most of the year, you should request a reduction in premium from your insurance company.

Massachusetts has joined some 45 other states in instituting a Certificate of Title System which is a more secure care registration system. The procedure for obtaining a Certificate of Title is begun at a Registry of Motor Vehicles or an automobile dealer or an insurance agency. Most motor vehicles require a Certificate and all require insurance so an insurance agent is perhaps the best starting point. The fee is $5.00.

When a car without a "title" is sold, the bill of sale must clearly identify the car, vehicle identification number, price and new owner and be NOTARIZED by the Seller. New cars will be handled by the dealer and in both cases the next step is your insurance agent.

The Certificate of Title will also reflect any liens on the ownership of the car such as banks and finance companies hold. The old Certificate of Title must accompany any sale or trade of the car.

Questions should be directed to insurers or the Registry.

All motor vehicles including motorcycles must be inspected twice each year between April 1 and May 15 and between September 1 and October 15. If rejected the operator has a short period of time not later than the end of the inspection period to correct the defect. No car should be operated without a valid inspection sticker. Such a sticker should be carried with the registration by every motorcycle operator. A "Rejection" sticker is not a substitute for a valid inspection sticker. Vehicles receiving a "Rejection" should be promptly corrected and inspected.

Falsification of an inspection sticker may be treated as a felony.

Always operate inspected, insured and registered motor vehicle. If in doubt, check or walk.

Mental Health Services

Help Is Here

Some students may not be aware that their health fee includes, in addition to any of their medical needs that can be filled by the Infirmary, the service of mental health counseling. The Mental Health Service is located in Machmer (Rm. 303) and students may walk in to make an appointment anytime during the day, Monday through Friday (8 a.m.-5 p.m.) or in cases of emergency, may call during evenings or weekends. Dr. Dean A. Allen, Director, said that the Mental Health staff are available through the Infirmary anytime during the year, even when the University is closed for vacation. The Mental Health Service operates on the basis of scheduled appointments so that students may have uninterrupted hour-long session with counselors.

Dr. Allen said that most of the students who come to the Service are self-referred; the rest are usually directed to the Service by a friend, professor, dorm counselor, or one of the doctors or nurses at the Infirmary. The Mental Health telephone number (5-2337) and a description of the services offered can be found in various University bulletins. A column called "Your Head" appears weekly in The Collegian in which two members of the staff, Drs. Klein and McCashin, are answering questions that may be of general interest to students.

Last year the Mental Health Service saw 1,500 different students. The staff includes twelve professionals (social workers, psychiatrists and clinical psychologists) and six trainees as well as a part-time psychiatric social worker located at the Infirmary. Much of the counseling is done on a one-to-one basis, but there are also six therapy groups, led by one or two staff members, consultations with roommates or parents when students wish this, and the possibility of short overnight stays at the Infirmary.

The staff handles a variety of problems. There is the fairly common of the new student adjusting to a new setting. Dr. Allen said that many students find the "permissive society" of UMass. initially hard to handle, and want to talk to someone with experience and training. The staff also sees many married couples, veterans, and other older students who wish help with emotional and personal difficulties. Dr. Allen jokingly remarked that "today everyone wants to be either a client or a counselor, or maybe both," and that in addition to the students seen as patients, many are "counseled" by roommates or friends. He sees this interaction as helpful to students although many patients value the neutrality of the Mental Health Service.

Priests May Question G.E. On War Production

By STEF DONEV
Associated Press Writer

DETROIT (AP) - The National Federation of Priests' Councils is set to question General Electric Corp. on how the multinational concern makes its money.

The NFPC voted Wednesday to join other religious and lay groups at the G.E. Stockholders meeting April 25 in Denver to urge the company to reveal all its military contracts and to switch from a war to a peace production.

The move is similar to Project GM, a group trying to force General Motors Corp. into adopting a greater sense of corporate moral and social responsibility, a spokesman for the councils said.

The councils, representing 131 priests' groups across the country, said the confrontation with G.E. is only a small part of an effort to be a watchdog over church investments.

The move will be the first time any major group within the Roman Catholic Church has attempted to confront the business community over the morality of its actions.

Rev. Reid Mayo, president of the five-year-old group, said the move is actually a continuation of the ministry of the priesthood, since the church is concerned with all morality, including morality in the business world.

"We are asking business to look at the morality of their acts, not just the profits," he said.

"There are a number of religious groups and organizations which don't even know what stock is in their portfolios," one of the delegates said. "We want them to look at where their money is coming from, and make some moral decision about the companies helping support them."

Schistosomiasis-A Paper Tiger?

"Schistosomiasis is a paper tiger!"

This was the slogan of the Chinese people during their fight against this dread disease carried by snails.

This revolutionary approach to public health has been documented in "Away With All Pests", a new movie about medicine in China. The film is being shown on campus today.

The film was made by Dr. Joshua Horn, who wrote a book by the same name. Dr. Horn is an English orthopedic surgeon who practiced medicine in Communist China for many years.

Dr. Horn's movie illustrates recent medical achievements in China and how these achievements have depended on modern Chinese ideology. It shows the training of peasant doctors, and it demonstrates how the struggle to build Socialism in China has been reflected in its medical advances and in its conquest of many diseases.

The film also discusses prerevolutionary medicine in China and the effects of Western imperialism that had created the "Sick Man of Asia", a phrase expressing the state of public health in China until 1949 when Western powers were expelled.

People interested in public health, political science, anthropology, sociology, or Chinese political thought and practice, will find this film educational and enjoyable.

"Away With All Pests" will be shown Thursday, March 22, at 1:00 P.M., and again at 7:30 P.M. in room 21-A of the School of Education. The film is being sponsored by Dr. Bob Suzuki of the School of Education.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

by SYDNEY OMARR

For Cancer, the serving of food is a sign of love. The sharing of an anecdote is a signifier of friendship where Gemini is concerned. Scorpio and Capricorn are apt to be more basic about their signs of friendship and love. For Leo, it is dinner, the theater, flowers and the grand gesture. I would be interested in learing about your "signs of love."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on the hidden or occult. You break through to new dimensions. Discussion is featured concerning legacy, taxes, insurance. Mate or partner is likely to be involved. Find ways to throw right on "hurry" money areas.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Live low. Let those close to you express their views. Grab opportunity to observe, listen and learn. Spotlight is on legal affairs. Special agreement may be in offing. Be aware of home and basic security requirements.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your natural abilities surge to forefront. You gain through versatility. Sagittarian could play key role. Accent is on work, health, getting along with associates. One who opposed you could now become ally.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Good lunar aspect now coincides with creative efforts, expression of emotions, relationships with opposite sex. Give topic equal time with impulse. Base actions on facts, not wishful thinking. You will understand.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 20): Study Cancer message. Be aware of fine points—and print. Read between the lines. Defer individual others benefit of experience. Be receptive, not subservient. Key now is to analyze. Piece together bits of pertinent information.

VIRGO (Aug. 21-Sept. 21): Accent is on visits, re-establishing communication with relatives. Tendency is for you to be restless. Key is to find outlet for creative energies. Taurus, Libra individuals play prominent roles. Restore harmony at home.

LIBRA (Sept. 22-Oct. 22): Perfect assets by collecting factual information. Emphasis is on money, valuables, how you decide and analyze. Be selective. Avoid self-deception. Deal with Pisces. Look behind scenes for some answers.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Cycle is high—you can take initiative and trust judgment, hunch. Accept added responsibility. Reward potential is great. Relationships are intensified. Nothing happens halfway—now it is likely to be all or nothing.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): You are able to obtain answers which had been evasive. Aries could help open doors. Strive to be independent. Increase avenues of distribution. Rid yourself of burden which really is not your responsibility.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Accent is on hopes, friends, special desires. One who appears selfish actuality is very much attached to you. There is bright side to an apparent discouraging situation. You are due to emerge with most of the chips.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You can build for security. Get to heart of matters. Deal with one in position of authority. Cancer individual could play key role. Cooperate in community project. One in politics could take special interest in current dilemma.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Expansion is keynoted. Look beyond the immediate. Be aware of potential. Open lines of communication. Deal with Sagittarian. Some philosophical concepts are subject to revision. Accept creative changes.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you could have been a stranger within your own family as a youngster. You were on your own at a relatively early age, actually or in a psychological sense. You complete major cycle this year and August should be your most significant month of 1973.

Walton Won't Go

By STEVE DE COSTA
Compiled from AP

The Philadelphia 76ers, the team sporting the worst record in the NBA, won the coin flip which gives them the right to select first in the upcoming NBA draft. The 76ers are apparently ready to draft UCLA star Bill Walton, who still has a year of college eligibility left. The Philadelphia team is hoping to coax Walton away from the defending NCAA champion Bruins with a record bonus offer of $2 million. In order to be eligible for the NBA next season Walton must file for and be accepted as a hardship case. Walton, who is also the property of the Dallas Chapparals of the NBA, has since stated that he is "Not even thinking about not playing for UCLA next season". Walton's coach John Wooden has said, "I wouldn't say he isn't ready but I will say another year will make him readier." All this would seem to throw a damper on the 76ers otherwise rosy plans for instant success.

—CBS has entered into a contract with the NBA which gives the network exclusive rights to broadcast the league's games for the next three years. This means that ABC will lose the NBA rights, which they had held since 1970. ABC has filed a suit in the York Supreme Court in an effort to have the CBS-NBA contract declared null and void. It seems that ABC had the right of renewal in its present contract and they claim that the NBA acted "in bad faith" in presenting the network with terms for renewal.

—Philip O. Krumm, new president of the U.S. Olympic Committee has said that he welcomes "federal assistance but not federal intervention" in the conduct of America's Olympic affairs. Krumm also said that if the government really wanted to help it could do so by providing new facilities and perhaps even subsidizing athletes.

—Women football players are no different than their male counterparts, at least that's what Dr. William Beausay, a psychologist, says. "The defensive players on the girls' pro teams are just like those in the NFL. Both are neurotic, subjective, hostile, impulsive. There is no significant difference either, between men and women quarterbacks. They're composed, objective, tolerant, and self-disciplined. According to Dr. Beausay there is only one significant trait that separates the men from the women. The women are "more catty."

—Tom Nissalke, former coach of the Seattle Supersonics, has filed a $1.2 million suit against the team. Nissalke was fired as coach in the middle of his first year on a three year contract. The suit charges the Sonics with breach of payments and "impairment of reputation."

—Providence College announced that all of its 1000 tickets for the NCAA semi-finals and finals were sold out within three and a half hours after they were placed on sale. At least 200 people were turned away as they were attempting to buy $20 tickets for the event which takes place in St. Louis this weekend.

—Maury Wills, former Los Angeles Dodger shortstop will be taking in the game of the week this year, but in a different capacity than in the past. Maury will be on NBC as the color man for Jim Simpson on the back-up game for the regular weekly telecast. Wills reportedly took the job in television because he didn't want to just "wait there, just hoping for the chance of managing in the majors." Major league baseball is yet to have a black manager.

—Art Williams will join the National League umpiring staff for 1973, marking the first full season for a black umpire in the league, NL President Charles Feeney announced Wednesday. Williams, 29, whose contract was purchased from the International League, worked 19 games in the National League at the end of last season.

Williams is the major league's second black umpire. Emmett Ashford previously served for two years in the American League.

NEW YORK (AP) - "Just to see them is overwhelming," Alabama basketball coach C. M. Newton said Wednesday as he thought of what his Crimison Tide will have to do to beat favored Minnesota in the National Invitation Tournament Thursday night. The Tide and the Gophers will play the first game of the quarter-final doubleheader, with Virginia Tech and Fairfield meeting in the second game. The winners will meet in the semifinals Saturday afternoon.

"They are as powerful and as physical as any basketball team I've ever seen," was Newton's reaction to Minnesota's 68-59 opening round victory over Rutgers.

"You can't beat Minnesota at rebounding," said Newton, "so we're just going to have to hold our own on the boards. And we're going to have to shoot really well from the perimeter. Every bit as good as we did in the first game."

Alabama beat Manhattan 87-86 on a 20-foot jump shot at the buzzer by Glenn Garrett, a 6 foot-8-1/2 forward.

Garrett and 6-6 Wendell Hudson and 6-10 Leon Douglas will engage in the battle of the boards with Minnesota's tough front line of 6-10 Ron Behagen, 6-6 Dave Winfield and 6-9 Jim Brewer. Hudson and Douglas were bothered by fouls against Manhattan.

Minnesota goes into the game with a 21-4 record. Alabama is 21-6.

The Virginia Tech-Fairfield game matches two teams that scored opening-round upsets. Virginia Tech, 19-5, beat New Mexico 65-63 and Fairfield edged Marshall 80-76.

Virginia Tech builds its game around 6-7 forward Allan Bristow, who scored 28 points and grabbed 10 rebounds against New Mexico.

George Groom (22 points) and Phil Rogers (19) were the keys in Fairfield's opening-round victory.

BOSTON (AP) - Boston's Jo Jo White hit on a jumper with 4:14 left to play to put the Celtics ahead for good and Boston went on to post a 106-105 National Basketball Association victory over the Chicago Bulls for a record 63 victories in a single season.

The previous high for Celtics' victories was 62, recorded during the 1964-65 season. Boston's record to date is 63-14.

Following White's shot, the last ten points for both teams were scored by just two men: John Havlicek for Boston and Chet Walker for Chicago.

Chicago had taken the lead for the first time since early in the third period when Bob Weiss coverted two free throws to give Chicago a 96-94 lead with 4:28 remaining. White scored 14 seconds later.

A give-and-take battle all the way, the Bulls led 47-45 at the half. Boston pulled ahead 76-71 at the end of three periods. The game was tied three times in the fourth quarter.

The Atlantic Division champions were led by Havlicek with 27 points, followed by Paul Silas with 15 and White 14. Walker led the Bulls with 30, followed by Norm Van Lier with 19 and Bob Love contributed 18.

"One Title Means As Much as Another"

By PAUL LE BAR
Associated Press Sports Writer

ST. LOUIS (AP)—The nation's winningest college basketball coach said Wednesday one title means as much as another and his UCLA Bruins will rely on pride in their quest of a seventh straight national title Saturday and Monday.

Veteran John Wooden, whose Bruins, 28-0, have won 73 straight games, will direct his team against Indiana, 21-5, at 4:10 p.m., EST, Saturday.

The opening game at 2:10 p.m., EST, in the semifinals of the National Collegiate Athletic Association tourney at the Arena will pit Providence, 27-2, against Memphis State, 23-5.

UCLA, which has won the title eight of the past nine years, was top-rated in the final Associated Press poll. Providence's Friars ranked fourth, Indiana sixth and Memphis State 12th.

Coaches of the four teams—Wooden, Dave Gavitt of Providence, Gene Bartow of Memphis State and Bob Knight of Indiana—were interviewed briefly during a conference telephone call at a news media luncheon.

Bartow attended the luncheon. The others spoke from offices on their campuses prior to bringing their teams here Thursday and Friday.

"I think it means as much as any other title meant to us," responded Wooden, when asked the significance attached to the bid by his powerful West Coast club.

"If you have pride about you, which every coach and every player has, you try to win. I tell every team every year that it must establish its own identity.

"I try to get that idea across," Wooden said. "My basic philosophy is not on winning, and yet that's exactly what you try to do."

Speaking from Bloomington, Ind., the 32-year-old Knight said Indiana's biggest problem in facing UCLA will be to stop 6-foot-11 Bruin junior Bill Walton, the AP's college player of the year.

Knight described his Hoosiers as "not too physical" and said the task of harnessing the agile Walton will be assigned to 6-8, 235-pound senior center Steve Downing.

Indiana is expected to challenge UCLA with man-to-man defense, but Knight hedged when asked if the Hoosiers would deal heavily with ball control or use a slowed-down tempo.

"Anytime you go into a basketball game you don't know what your team is going to do over the course of the entire game," he said. "I think you just have to wait and see what you can do."

Both Gavitt and Bartow said they were looking forward to a meeting of their teams, which pack high-powered offenses and feature flashy guards.

Gavitt, in referring to Providence All-America guard Ernie DiGregorio, labled the 6-foot senior "our offense."

"I think what Ernie D. has meant to our team is that everything we've done offensively has centered around him," the 34-year-old coach said.

"We've pretty much given him a free hand, and I think he's just a great basketball player, a good guard, a good team leader, a very exceptional player."

Gavitt was equally high on Memphis State's Larry Finch, who directed the Tigers to the Missouri Valley Conference title, noting, "In Finch, they have one of the premier guards in the country.

"We feel that we're going to have to do more than just an adequate job of defense if we're going to stop Finch," Gavitt added.

ABA Stars

ST. LOUIS (AP) - Five players whose combined averages total more than 110 points a game were named to the American Basketball Association All-Star team Wednesday in a poll of ABA players by The Sporting News.

Named to the first team were Billy Cunningham, Carolina; Julius Erving, Virginia; Artis Gilmore, Kentucky; Jimmy Jones, Utah, and Warren Jabali, Denver.

The second team selected by the players was composed of George McGinnis and Mel Daniels, Indiana; Willie Wise, Utah; Mack Calvin, Carolina, and Ralph Simpson, Denver.

Tennis Team Will Be Hot

By SINCLAIR FOSTER

Win or lose, the UMass tennis team is going to be hot next week. Reports from Jacksonville, Florida listed the temperature in the 70's and 80's and don't think for a moment that it won't be quite an adjustment from the 40 degree play on the Boyden tennis courts.

What's in store for the netmen is a 9-day southern trip, a la baseball and lacrosse, the first of its kind in UMass tennis history.

What prompted the southern trip? "This is the first time," commented Coach Steven Kosakowski, "that we've had a balanced enough team to play respectable tennis against that type of competition. We wanted to play against some of the best in the nation, and now we'll get that chance."

Not only will the Minutemen have balance, they'll have plenty of experience, as all six flying south are returning starters from the 1972 squad.

Led by senior Captain Steve Ferber, playing second singles this year, the netmen remain youthful. Three sophomores, Ted Donahue, Robert Schpeiser and Mike Philip, will be playing first, third, and fourth singles respectively. Juniors Fred Braley and Mark Brass occupy the fifth and sixth slots of the sextet that will journey to Jacksonville.

Warming up for the likes of Rollins, University of Florida at Gainsville, Jacksonville and Boston College (whose team is driving south, playing matches on the way) the Minutemen were hosted by Williams last Tuesday in a practice match. Despite dropping a 5-4 decision to Williams, Kosakowski was generally pleased. After all, Williams is one of New England's perennial powers. In addition UMass has just not had a tremendous amount of playing time available to them. In many ways, next week's Florida fling will be spring training for the New Englandites.

How good is next week's competition? Damn good. Jacksonville, whom the Minutemen will meet three times, knocked off Dartmouth 5-4, the latter the second best team in this region. As if Jacksonville will not be enough to handle word around is that Florida's number eight, yes, eight man can beat Jacksonville's number one player!

Physical preparations for the trip began in late January. Financial preparations began last fall, when the netmen ushered football games to accumulate moneys for the Florida excursion.

The culmination of the netmen's efforts begin this evening when they travel to Jacksonville where they're sure to get a warm welcome.

Celts Look to 2nd Season

It's official: The Boston Celtics finish the present NBA season with the best record in the league. Now, only one more hurdle remains to be crossed. And a mighty tough hurdle it is.

The NBA second season, the playoffs, begin in two weeks. All previous accomplishments are down the drain and forgotten once the playoffs start. The only consolation for the league-leading Celts in the playoffs is the fact that they will have the home-court advantage against any and all playoff foes.

Home court is important but its relative merits can be overemphasized. Last year's Celtics lost their Eastern Division playoff final to New York 4 games to 1, despite holding the coveted home-court advantage.

The Celtic's first playoff adversary this year will be the Atlanta Hawks. The Hawks boast two of the NBA's top ten scorers in Lou Hudson and Pete Maravich, both averaging around 26 points per game. The key in this particular series, however, will be in the middle. Atlanta center Walt Bellamy, past his prime, is slowing down and Dave Cowens, Boston's all-star game MVP, should run rings around him, and lead the Celtics to an impressive first-round victory.

Last year's downfall for the Celts came at the hands of arch-nemesis New York. This year should be different. The Knicks, in order to reach the Eastern Division finals, will have to defeat a much improved Baltimore Bullets squad. Last year the Knicks won their first round series with Baltimore, but that was before the Bullets added Elvin Hayes to their roster. The off-season addition, which paired Hayes with one-time NBA MVP Wes Unseld, gives the Bullets the best rebounding in the NBA.

This should get the Knicks right where they hurt. The New York front court is their weakest point. Willis Reed, coming back from numerous injuries and operations, is still not the same Reed that led the Knicks to an NBA championship in 1970. Dave Debusschere, all star forward, is still not totally recovered from a hip injury. Jerry Lucas and Bill Bradley are solid performers but could be worn down by the superior size and jumping ability of Hayes and Unseld.

Another plus in Baltimore's favor is guard Archie Clark. Clark sat out the first half of the season in a salary dispute with club officials. His return to the lineup could not have come at a better time. By playing only the final half of the season, he has been able to adjust his playing style to complement his new teammates without being worn out by the rigors of playing an entire season.

New York's ace in the hole is super-guard Walt Frazier. He is the man that the Knicks turn to in the clutch, and he rarely lets them down.

The prediction from this corner is that Clark will effectively counter Frazier and that the rest of the Bullet guards will neutralize the other Knick backcourtmen. The series will be decided under the basket where the Bullet's big men will prevail and edge out the Knicks in a hard fought series that goes the limit.

Cheers!

Instrumentally, Massachusetts outplayed North Carolina easily, one spaced out looking band to an AM radio tuned to WHN's Western Sound, which was toted by a Tar Heel-speaking backer.

The cheerleading part of the contest was close, only because Carolina's lone representative just happened to be the 1972-73 national champion, Becky Fuller. But the Minutemen's six lovely supporters outmaneuvered Ms. Fuller in the final minutes of the first half when Janis Andrews let down her long, jet black hair, which had been tied in a bun.

Those were the secondary attractions-according to the NIT Selection Committee, but they're referred to as the "Over-The-Hill Gang," so what do they know?...

As far as Sports is concerned, the campus media takes a brand new inventive step forward tonight. Starting at 7:30 on the wide screen at the Bluewall the WTOY sports staff and film crew will present in its entirety an exclusive showing of the North Carolina UMass quarterfinal game at Madison Square Garden in New York City.

This is the first such sporting venture in the station's history and is the first public video tape production of a UMass sports event complete with audio sound ever offered the university community.

Calling all the action for WTOY is sports coordinator Marty Kelley. Earle Barroll will handle the commentary in this delayed telecast from Madison Square Garden. Armed with three porta pack cameras, the WTOY film crew included producer Dave Bunker, along with Cameramen Art Tessimond, Bill McKinnon, and director Jim Seaquist.

Fac-Sen Blasts Revamp Plan

By SUSAN R. HUBBARD

The Faculty Senate yesterday voted unanimously to condemn the higher education reorganization plan as proposed by Massachusetts Secretary of Education Cronin.

President Robert C. Wood gave a short address in which he endorsed the timeliness of the motion on the Cronin proposals.

Other motions passed by the Faculty Senate concerned the establishment of a Foreign and International Studies Council and the restructuring of the Service Departments Committee.

An ad hoc committee which studied the Cronin report stated six major objections to Cronin's University reorganization proposals. The plan would, in their words:

—destroy the statewide integrity of the University of Massachusetts by dispersing its constituent units.

—seriously damage the quality of the University's undergraduate, graduate, and professional programs and destroy their continuity.

—deprive the University of its present internal governance arrangements and much of its fiscal autonomy.

—lay the University open to direct political control.

—create educational confusion.

—operate to the detriment of the University.

Seven recommendations of the ad hoc committee accompanied their study, and these recommendations expressed the undesirability of regionalizing the statewide University system.

It was suggested from the floor of the Senate that no major amendments to this anti-Cronin Report motion be proposed at this time, so that the passage of the motion would reflect the faculty's solid opposition to the reorganization plan.

The vote was unanimously in favor of the report which opposed the Cronin proposals.

In his statement to the Fac-Sen, President Wood announced that Education Secretary Cronin would soon submit bills to the state legislature to implement his reorganization proposals.

"Hearings," said Wood, "on this legislation should be held in April."

Concerning last Tuesday's Board of Trustees meeting, Wood reiterated the Trustees' selection of a new Chancellor for the UMass-Boston campus, and the Board's approval of the Wellman Report, which he said, "would insure that all elements of the campus have a say in the University."

The establishment of a Foreign and International Studies Council was endorsed by the Senate as an item of new business.

Such a council would have the "umbrella" effect of centralizing the ideas of four committees, namely the Committee for Overseas Programs and Exchanges, the Committee for On-Campus International Studies, the Committee for Foreign Student Affairs, and the Committee for Ethnic Heritage Studies.

Restructuring of the Service Departments Committee was also passed by the Fac-Sen, with little discussion.

As a final order of business, the Library Committee of the Fac-Sen submitted their annual report. This raised several questions among the Senators concerning the amount of money allocated yearly to the acquisition of bound books and periodicals.

With new appropriations pending in the Governor's proposed budget, a spokesman for Goodell Library said that the present buying budget of $800,000 per year would be hopefully maintained. Fifty percent of this budget goes toward the purchase of periodicals.

Board Increase Coming In Fall

By BARBARA VOORHEES

Although fast-rising food prices will not affect the dining commons for the remainder of this semester, an increase in board fees will be necessary for the fall semester, according to Joel M. Stoneham, Director of Food Services.

Stoneham said that Food Services purchased a year's supply of beef and pork products in November and that milk, bread and ice cream are ordered annually. Thus, increases in food prices in the past few months are not effecting Food Services purchases.

An estimated $32,436 was saved on beef and pork products alone by buying in November according to Stoneham.

Stoneham estimated that next year's food costs for his department will increase 10% over last year's costs.

A proposal to raise the cost of board will be presented to the Rents and Fees Committee by Food Services after the spring vacation.

Stoneham said that the proposal will contain no changes in any Food Services policies and that there will be no reduction in the amount of meat served at the dining commons.

February marked the largest monthly increase in grocery store prices in 22 years. Prices rose 2.4%.

Meat boycotts in New England and throughout the nation are scheduled for the week of April 1-7. General Electric workers in Pittsfield and a group of Springfield women are planning separate boycott's in Western Massachusetts.

Delay Sought On Faculty Hearing

By MDC STAFF

The president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, one of two faculty unions seeking to represent the UMass faculty, last night said the UMass administration has sought a delay in hearings scheduled to start Tuesday on which union would represent the UMass faculty.

No reason was given by Brogan on the reason for the requested delay, and university spokesman declined to comment last night, saying any reasons for the request would have to be supplied by the university legal counsel.

Brogan also said that legal counsel for the MSP, acting for both the MSP and the AAUP, were trying to prevent "undue delay."

The hearings were scheduled to begin in Boston Tuesday, and last night it was not known whether the delay would be granted.

Library Search Comm. Members Appointed

By MARY MULLOY

The committee organizing a search for the new Director of Libraries was chosen in part by the Faculty Senate, the Library Professional Staff, the Vice Chancellor for Academic Affairs and the graduate and undergraduate Student Senates.

Five faculty professors were appointed: Chairman Oswald Tippo, Professor in Botany Dept.; Carl Dennler, Chairman of Accounting Dept.; Mary Helming, Professor in Nursing Dept.; Dan Collins, Assistant Professor in English Dept.; Three library personnel were appointed: Irene Kavanaugh, Head of Cataloguing Dept.; Siegfried Feller, Chief Bibliographer; Donald Koslow, librarian.

The undergraduate senate was allowed two members, however only one, Paul Hamel responded. The Graduate Senate has not sent an appointee to the Committee.

The Committee is searching both inside and outside campus. Advertisements have been placed in the New York Times and the Chronicle of Higher Education. Any interested person having knowledge of a desirable candidate should contact one of the committeemembers or the Provost Office.

A professional degree in library science and considerable professional and administrative experience is required of the new Director. The position requires recognized achievement and distinction in library organization, policies, and procedures; demonstrated successful administrative ability. A graduate degree in academic subjects or advanced work in library science is desirable.

Associate Provost Robert Hoopes who is working in liason with the Committee says "hopefully the new Director of Libraries will be chosen by early May.

At present, Richart Talbot is Acting Director of the library, since the previous director Merle Boylan resigned to become the Director of Libraries at the University of Texas.

Vermont Families Join Meat Boycott

By PATTI LEE
Associated Press Writer

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP)—An increasing number of families in Vermont say they are fed up with the high cost of food and have pledged to join a national boycott of meat during April.

Organizations have sprung up in Brattleboro, Montpelier and St. Johnsbury, led by women who declare they and their families are "disgusted" with grocery prices, especially with the escalating cost of meat.

"I've really been disgusted with the price of meat," said Mrs. Elaine Grant of Brattleboro. "We've been spending more and more for meat, and we weren't eating better."

Mrs. Grant said she had collected more than 200 written pledges and several hundred telephone pledges to completely boycott meat during the first week of April, to coincide with a national movement to forego meat meals.

She said people from southern and central Vermont were joining the movement and she had been asked for information on organizing a boycott by people in Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts.

The Brattleboro organization intends to give up meat each Tuesday and Thursday during April.

Mrs. Grant said her personal grocery bill for a family of five, including three teenagers, had risen about $20 per week in the last six months. She said her weekly bill now regularly totals $50 to $60, and "meat has been taking the biggest jumps.

"We've got to get to the right person," Mrs. Grant said of the attempt to force meat prices down.

"We're not sure who it is. Is it the government, some middleman, unions, retailers? We don't blame the farmers at all," she said.

In St. Johnsbury, a meat boycott for the entire month was being organized by Mrs. Lee Waterman. The organization, called Movement to Lower Meat Prices plans to distribute leaflets Friday.

The newest pocket of activity was in the Barre-Montpelier area where Mrs. Susan Butler said a group hoped to interest more families in the national boycott during the first week of April, and in continuing with a month of meals without beef.

Vaginal Cancer Associated With 'Morning After Pill'

By DENNY MATTEAU

"There is a statistically significant association between the use of the 'morning-after pill' and vaginal cancer in the daughters of users," said Dr. Thomas C. McBride of the UMass Infirmary in an interview Wednesday. "This is an association, not a proven cause," he said.

The "morning after pill" is a form of post-coital birth control which uses the synthetic hormone diethylstilbestrol. This hormone was introduced in the mid-1940's in the treatment of women who tended to have miscarriages.

In 1967 Dr. Arthur Herbst and Dr. Robert Scully of the Boston Vincent Memorial Hospital reported 20 cases of a rare form of vaginal cancer in teen-aged women, all of whom were the daughters of women who had taken large doses of diethylstilbestrol while pregnant.

When taken within 72 hours after intercourse the hormone prevents the implantation of the fertilized egg in the uterine lining. When taken later in the pregnancy, it does not have this abortive effect.

When asked if the doctors at the infirmary would prescribe the morning-after pill, Dr. McBride said, "I feel I can speak for everybody in saying that we're reluctant to prescribe it...We're pretty cautious."

Dr. McBride said, "People should decide beforehand whether or not they want to risk a pregnancy, and take preventive measures. The emotional turmoil of the rush-rush visit to the clinic on the next day is really unnecessary in most cases."

N.E. Telephone Rate Increases Used For Advertising Purposes

By NILS J. BRUZELIUS
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - New England Telephone spent nearly $38,000 last year for advertisements in support of its requested $122 million rate increase, a company official told the Department of Public Utilities Thursday.

Donald R. Marr, the firm's state controller for Massachusetts, said the telephone company spent $31,000 on full page newspaper advertisements that appeared in 44 newspapers across the state shortly after it filed the rate hike last July.

In addition, he testified, the company spent nearly $7,000 on leaflets inserted in all phone bills sent out following the rate filing to the firm's 2.1 million Massachusetts customers. Marr said the leaflets were also available at telephone business offices.

The testimony came in the second day of hearings into the rate hike, which has been suspended by the DPU for 10 months.

Marr described the advertising expenses under questioning by Asst. Atty. Gen. Paul K. Connolly Jr., who displayed copies of the ads bearing the heading, "straight answers to your questions about increases in phone rates."

"And these expenses are being charged to the consumers of Massachusetts, is that correct" asked Connolly, who represented the office of Atty. Gen. Robert H. Quinn and the state Consumers' Council in fighting the rate hike.

"Yes," said Marr. He said the telephone company spent a total of about $815,000 on advertising in 1972.

The telephone official said discounts on telephone service for company employes, which include free service for all management personnel, totalled $4.8 million in 1972.

He said management personnel who have been with the company for more than six months and non-management employes with 30-years service get free telephone service, including up to $75 over three months in toll calls and up to three household telephones.

UMass Dancers May Attend Phys. Ed. Congress In Iran

By LINDA WOODWARD

The University dancers have been invited to attend a world physical education congress in Tehran, Iran this summer, and plan to attend if they raise the money.

The week-long conference starts August 23. Many different countries and activities will be represented. The University Dancers who will be the only dancers from the United States, will perform for the congress and the public.

There are 20 dancers in the group. The trip will cost about one thousand dollars per person.

The group has earned between three and four thousand dollars. To raise money they have been performing off campus, selling booklets about their dancing, and accepting donations toward the trip. If they do not reach their twenty thousand dollar goal, as many dancers will go as possible. There also has been discussion about the possibity of the dancers performing in Rome, Greece, and Israel.

The administration has proposed that the Hills dorms be sold to the state to be used for office space. Many residents of these dorms are opposed...

Hills Residents — Priority To Hamlin

By MDC STAFF

A proposed transfer of Hills North and South from dormitories to academic use came because of a "serious shortage of academic space," according to a statement released by the office of vice-chancellor for Student Affairs yesterday.

The office also current Hills students would have top priority for relocation in Hamlin next year.

In the statement, Gage's office said that around one month ago it became apparent that office space requirements could not be handled by the use of Arnold House, newly constructed modular space, and about 80,000 square feet of residence hall space scheduled for transfer to offices in September, 1974.

About 180,000 gross square feet were needed, the office said in a statement released yesterday, for additional office space for the School of Education before Goodell (the current library) is remodeled, additional space for Continuing Education, additional classrooms and offices, and space for personnel occupying buildings scheduled for renovation and remodeling.

In the statement, Gage's office said the residence hall occupancy report for spring of this year showed a low occupancy rate, making the space transfer practical this spring, "in spite of a regrettably short time for planning."

The two dorms are a "break even" unit, the office said, claiming their removal would not be costly to either students or the state. The office said the two dorms, located just off North Pleasant St. in the Central area, were "relatively convenient" for the School of Education and the Division of Continuing Education.

The slightly increased occupancy in Building Authority residence halls, the office said, would benefit students by holding down rents.

The move responds to a request from the Rents and Fees Committee of the Student Senate that residency hall vacancies be consolidated in one unit to reduce the cost of operations.

Gage's office also said that students currently living in Hills will have "top priority" for relocation in Hamlin next year, and said small groups will have high priority for locating in other units of their choice.

The office also said it is prepared to negotiate "other special considerations" so that any Hills students could secure off campus housing.

Committee Proposed For Beer Licenses

By CHRIS ROSSOMANDO

Attorney for Students Richard Howland outlined the state laws regulating the sale and consumption of alcoholoc beverages last night, and called for a revision of the University's present policy on alcoholic beverages "to help students to comply with the law."

Howland's comments came at a meeting of the Student Senate Matters Committee, at which Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert W. Gage cited a need to "interpret Trustee policy" on the subject. The present Trustee policy had been established in 1969.

Since the lowering of the drinking age (which makes it possible for virtually all students at the University to drink), the revision of the University policy on alcoholic beverages and clarification of the existing laws are necessary.

Among Howland's suggestions was the establishment of a committee to coordinate requests for one-day wine and malt beverage licenses required by law for the sale of wine and beer by groups on campus.

According to law, any group (including dorms, frats, and RSO groups) wishing to sell beer must obtain a one-day license from the office of the Amherst selectmen.

The proposed committee would coordinate license requests from campus groups by establishing some type of master calendar. Under this plan, groups would apply in advance so that all applications for a given period of time would be presented to the selectmen at the same time. Applications may be made only on the first and third Mondays of each month.

Committee consensus appeared to favor the committee's inclusion of representatives from each living area on campus, as well as from the Greek area and representatives of the RSO groups.

Under the law, sale of any type of alcoholic beverage without a license is prohibited. Although the one-day licenses would allow the sale of beer, there is no way that a group may legally sell liquor. The use of "free beer" as a promotion for a profit-making event is also illegal, as is any "open cash" bar.

Closed parties are not affected by the one-day license law. Any group wishing to buy liquor collectively for their own use, as a homogeneous group, may do so. These may include dorm parties and frat parties, at which no sale of alcoholic beverages is made for profit.

Groups may decide to levy social taxes on a voluntary basis to help fund these functions. The tax would presumably be paid at the beginning of the semester to cover social functions in the dorm or other living area for the entire semester.

Howland emphasized that people "can't be required to pay" if they are not drinking. He explained that despite student's suggestions on how to get around it."

Auto Pollution Standard Proposed For Big Cities

By DILLON GRAHAM
Associate Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Administrator William D. Ruckelshaus said Thursday the Environmental Protection Agency is continuing to examine suggestions that there be two anti-pollution standards for automobiles, with more stringent regulations for those used in big cities.

But he told a House public works subcommittee that "at this time, it doesn't appear it would work." He said such a system would provide many problems for automobile manufacturers.

His comment came in reply to a question from Rep. James C. Cleveland, (R-N.H.), who said his rural constituents wondered why they will have to pay greatly increased costs of automobiles for the new antipollution features in nonmetropolitan areas where air pollution is not a severe problem.

Cleveland said he is being asked why it is necessary to have these stringent new standards for all the country instead of just in cars used in big cities which have a pollution problem. The administrator said that Congress set the regulations.

Ruckelshaus told the subcommittee, considering new highway financing legislation, that large cities should have the option of using the federal Highway Trust Fund for mass transit projects.

"We believe this approach, in concert with the program administered by the Urban Mass Transit Administration, will offer major assistance in solving our intracity transportation problems—problems which today are becoming increasingly aggravated by continued reliance on private automobiles as the major mode of urban transportation," he said.

"We recognize that not every urban area is suited for a rail system, but local elected officials should have the option of choosing between buses, rail and highways," he said.

Budgets Endorses Student Tax Rise

By SHARON HUGHES

The Senate Budgets Committee passed a motion to raise the student activity tax from $4.50 to $6.75 last night. SATF is used to subsidize student activities and clubs.

The committee passed a $6730 budget for the Union of Third World Women and a $1650 budget for the Poverty Committee.

When the Collegian went to press, the Budgets Committee was reviewing the Juvenile Opportunity Extension (JOE) and Imani budgets.

Initially, the area government representatives requested a tax increase of seven dollars. Southwest area justified the 76% increase as necessary to continue funding of the Women's Center, the Center for Racial Understanding, and the Human Resource Center. Southwest Assembly President Larry St. Cyr said, "We need the money desperately."

Central and Orchard Hill Area Governments' representatives agreed to the seven dollar increase. Northeast's representatives intitially said they could endorse an increase no higher than $5.50 because that was all their constituents would endorse. By the end of the discussion, however, they agreed to seven dollars. The Sylvan Area representatives were not present.

The student activity tax is a per capita tax on all undergraduates attending the University. The Commuter representative noted that of 18,266 students, about on-third are commuters who do not receive the same kind of services for their tax that dorm residents do.

Larry St. Cyr replied that the convination of all dorm residents comprises two-thirds of students affected by the tax. He recommended that the committee concentrate "on the idea of developing the Residential college by increasing the student activities tax."

The Union of Third World Women requested $5000 for publication costs. The Union intends to publish a book concerning the problems of the Third World.

"The book will be an anthology of cross interest fields," said Rosa Blanco, a member of the Union. She said that students have asked the Union how to deal with problems of racism, and that this book will be an answer to their questions.

The proposed book will be written by members of the Union. Other articles will be based on information coming out of a Third World conference next year. Rosa Blanco said, "It will be the type of book that could be utilized in a college course."

Senator Jack Groh objected to the request on the grounds that "it seems to me to be more of a national publication." Other members agreed that the students couldn't be asked to fund an entire book.

Ms. Blanco replied that the book would be "an immense service to students on how to deal with racism." Furthermore, she said that the book would be distributed free to students, the library, and heads of departments. Anyone outside of the University would pay for the book and the revenue would be returned to the Union.

After lengthy debate, Paul Doran, chairperson of the Budgets Committee, summed the committee's feeling. "I was against the idea at first, but now I think the Union needs some money to get the project started. Then they can take it to a publisher."

The Union was allocated $2000 for the publication.

Hanoi Ready To Release Last POWs

By GEORGE ESPER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP) - North Vietnam said Friday the Communists are ready to go ahead with the release on Saturday of the last group of 138 American prisoners captured in Vietnam if all American troops are withdrawn on the same timetable.

The Communists had declared Thursday night they were suspending prisoner releases because the United States went back on a deal to withdraw U.S. troops by the weekend.

The 138 prisoners had been scheduled for release in two groups Saturday and Sunday in Hanoi in exchange for an accelerated U.S. troop pullout that would have put America forces out of Vietnam by Sunday, three days ahead of the deadline in the Paris cease-fire accord.

The United States first agreed to the plan, proposed by North Vietnam and the Viet Cong. But later, on orders from Washington, the Americans reversed themselves.

A U.S. spokesman said the United States "needed additional time to move U.S. troops out in an orderly fashion." The speedup-pullout initially agreed to represented the opinion of the U.S. Command in Saigon that the troops could move out fast enough, he added, but word from Washington changed that assessment.

The U.S. representatives imposed new conditions for final U.S. troop withdrawals, including demands for a list of nine Americans captured in Laos and the date and place they will be released.

The U.S. delegation also proposed that the first group of remaining POWs be released Sunday instead of Saturday, and that the turnover be completed Wednesday instead of Sunday.

It said it would not begin the withdrawal of the remaining American troops from Vietnam until the first group of POWs is transferred to U.S. custody.

U.S. officials indicated that Washington changed signals at least partly because of second thoughts about the American prisoners captured in Laos. The U.S. Command lists seven American servicemen and two American civilians captured there.

The Defense Department spokesman in Washington said the United States will resume pulling out troops "when we have assurances that everybody on the list we've been given is in fact scheduled for release."

The Vietnam peace agreement asigned in Paris Jan. 27 does not make any provision for Americans captured in Laos. But the U.S. delegation here said there is an "understanding" between Henry A. Kissinger and the North Vietnamese negotiator, Le Duc Tho that Hanoi will be responsible for their release.

Lt. Gen. Tran Van Tra, chief of the Viet Cong delegation to the Joint Military Commission, said the concern was a "pretext" to slow down U.S. troop withdrawals.

In a letter to the U.S. delegation, Tra declared:

"Now, by the U.S. violation, we suspended the handing over of the POW list and the release of POWs awaiting an appropriate answer from the U.S. side.

"We demand the United States stop creating obstacles to the release of military and civilian POWs. We also demand the United States stop finding pretext to delay the U.S. and allied troop withdrawals. The U.S. side should bear full responsibility for the delay."

A second letter was sent to the U.S. delegation from Maj. Gen. Le Quang Hoa, chief of the North Vietnamese delegation.

Hoa also strongly rejected the American demands and said they have no legal foundation.

The issue was certain to come up Friday at a scheduled meeting of delegation chiefs of the United States, North Vietnam, South Vietnam and the Viet Cong, the four parties that make up the Joint Military Commission.

In The Nation And The World

TELLS OF ITT IN CHILE—Former CIA Director John J. McCone, left, talks with Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, before the start of the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee hearings in Washington. McCone testified that he carried an ITT offer to Henry Kissinger and then-CIA director Richard Helms to contribute $1 million to head off the election of Salvadore Allende as president of Chile. Committee On ITT May Call Rogers

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-A special Senate subcommittee investigating the International Telephone & Telegraph CCorp. suddenly suspended its open hearings Thursday to decide whether to call Secretary of State William P. Rogers, a top CIA official and two others.

The Foreign Relations panel has been examining allegations that ITT tried to block the election of Salvador Allende as president of Chile by attempting to bring economic pressure on the country in 1970.

The chairman, Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, said he thought Rogers, William Broe, who was in charge of CIA clandestine operations in Latin America, Peter Peterson and Viron P. Vaky should appear in public "to clear up this picture."

Peterson a former secretary of commerce, is a personal representative of President Nixon for trade matters. Vaky, ambassador to Costa Rica, formerly was Latin American adviser to Presidential aide Henry A. Kissinger.

Church called the other members of the subcommittee to a closed meeting to see whether they agreed with him.

Earlier in the day, Edward Gerrity, an ITT vice president, testified that the company rejected a proposal by Broe that the CIA and the company jointly bring "economic chaos" to Chile in order to prevent Allende's election.

Vaky's name has been brought up several times as a White House official to whom ITT carried a $1-million offer. The subcommittee has heard conflicting testimony from ITT officials as to the possible use to which the money was to be put.

It was questionable whether the subcommittee could force Rogers, Broe, Vaky and Peterson to testify. President Nixon has indicated he would resist similar efforts in another investigation.

Gerrity, in his testimony Thursday, conceded that ITT was afraid Chile under Allende would take over ITT property without compensation.

Nixon Wants Tariffs Control

By BILL NEIKIRK
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-President Nixon told Congress Wednesday he will seek broad new powers to raise and lower U.S. tariffs as a bargainig tool in a new round of world trade talks set to begin this fall.

In his first annual international economic report, Nixon pulled back the curtain a bit on his proposed trade legislation scheduled to go to Congress in the next month. But he indicated he is flexible on some of his proposals.

The 94-page report, prepared by presidential assistant Peter Flanifan, confirmed that Nixon wants virtually unlimited authority on import charges to use at the bargaining table with other nations.

"In choosing an international trade policy which will benefit all Americans, I have concluded that we must face up to more intense long-term competition in the world's markets rather than shrink from it," Nixon said.

With the admonition that some of the proposals may be subject to change, the Flanigan report said the legislation could follow these lines:

—Power to eliminate, reduce, increase, or impose tariffs for five years. Congress in the past has only given presidents the power to negotiate tariff reductions, and then at specified amounts.

—Authoirty to negotiate an end to nontariff barriers to American goods in foreign markets. Such barriers have grown dramatically in recent years, the report said.

—Power to allow the government to put restraints on foreign imports in specific industries when they are pouring into the United States at such a pace as to threaten businesses with bankruptcy and workers with a loss of jobs. The U.S. Tarrif Commission would have wide new powers to determine injury to businesses and workers.

"We shall need maximum negotiating flexibility, equivalent to that which our trade partners do in fact have if they choose to exercise it," the Flanigan report said.

Rep. Wilbur Mills, D-Ark., chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, said Tuesday he is ready to give the President new trade powers, but not perhaps as sweeping as Nixon wanted.

Boycotts May Affect Prices

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)-Chairman Herbert Stein of the President's Council of Economic Advisers said Thursday consumer boycotts against high prices may be contributed to a decline in wholesale meat prices in the past week.

"Something seems to be working back from the demand side," Stein said. "Consumer resistance may be having an effect."

At a news briefing on the nation's economy, Stein appealed to labor unions for "self-restraint and statesmanship" in new wage demands.

Stein said farm product prices rose 14.5 per cent in the three months since November, and said this was "one of the most dramatic price increases on record."

But he added he hopes labor will understand this is a temporary situation and predicted that retail food prices will fall off to a 2 per cent annual rate of increase or less by December.

"I hope the labor leaders will see this in a broader context and not upset a national goal because of an unfortunate concentration of increases," he said.

Asked what additional steps the government could take to restrain food prices, he said, "the biggest things have been done."

He said he could conceive of a situation where controls on food prices would be necessary, but added he thought it unlikely.

The latest consumer price index showed a 2.2 per cent increase in all food prices in February, following a 1.9 per cent increase in January. Stein said the March and April indexes will show additional increases.

He said the two developments that have characterized the economy so far this year are a rapid expansion of activity and an increase in inflation, especially in farm prices.

William Whitelaw, Secretary for Northern Ireland, displays the British Government plan, entitled "Northern Ireland Constitution Proposals" at press conference. The plan offers the bomb-ravaged province its own 80-seat assembly with a wide area of domestic authority. The new assembly would replace the 52-seat Protestant-dominated Northern Ireland Parliament which Britain suspended a year ago. (AP)

N. Ireland-A Plan And A Challenge

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) - Roman Catholic legislators in Northern Ireland gave guarded approval Thursday to Britain's peace plans for the province and challenged Irish Republican Army guerrillas to lay down their arms.

The conciliatory Catholic response was in contrast to the opposition of militant Protestant leaders who have set up a United Loyalist Action Group to fight the British initiative unveiled two days ago.

There were signs, however, that the Protestant front was not as solid as early hardline statements indicated. A Northern Ireland legislator in the British Parliament, who is also a cochairman of the action group, clashed with right-wingers over plans for a mass rally of Protestants in Belfast this weekend.

The Catholic call for an IRA cease-fire in Northern Ireland came from Ivan Cooper, a spokesman for the large Social Democratic and Labor party.

He urged the guerrillas, who are waging a campaign to unite the north and the overwhelmingly Catholic Irish republic, to campaign for election to the province's proposed new legislative assembly.

"Let them put up candidates in the elections and we will see who represents whom and where they have support," Cooper said.

The IRA has still to comment publicly on the British peace plans, designed to end nearly four years of sectarian and nationalist strife that has cost a known 755 lives.

But the guerrillas have been inactive since the proposals were announced Tuesday and are believed to favor at least a temporary halt to their running war with the British army.

Cooper, who was speaking in Dublin after talks with Irish republic Prime Minister Liam Cosgrove, said a cease-fire approach had already been made to IRA commanders.

The Social Democratic party's reaction to the British proposals - contained in a White Paper, or policy document - was welcome news for Northern Ireland affairs and a say in the treatment of the province's Catholic minority.

But they promised to take part in elections for the assembly which Britain proposes should replace the old Protestant-dominated Stormont parliament suspended a year ago.

Nixon Against Insanity Plea

By HARRY F. ROSENTHAL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Nixon asked Congress Thursday to abolish insanity as a defense to federal crimes and to revamp the criminal code completely. The death penalty would be brought back and obscenity laws redefined.

The 680-page Criminal Code Reform Act of 1973, as submitted by the President, would toughen drug laws, provide mandatory imprisonment in some cases and grade offenses into nine categories with maximum sentences and fines.

The existing code dates back to 1790 and the President-in a message last week promising the new legislation-called modification "not merely desirable, but absolutely imperative."

It is the second such bill before this session of Congress. Sen. John McClellan, D—Ark., also submitted a complete revision. A Justice Department spokesman said "there are differences in every line."

Prolonged debate is certain, particularly over the insanity provisions and the death penalty.

The issue of the defendant's mental state would arise during a trial only if the prosecution were unable to establish he had criminal intent.

The President called codification of the insanity defense "the most significant feature" of the part establishing general provisions and principles of the code because "the standard has become so vague in some instances that it has led to unconscionable abuse by defendants."

Should the issue of insanity be raised at a trial, after prior notice to the court, a jury could find a defendant not guilty by reason of insanity. But ir. such cases-even though the defendant has been acquitted-the judge could order commitment to a mental institution.

The death penalty would be mandatory if there were aggravating factors in such "class A" felonies as treason, sabotage, espionage, and murder.

Such aggravating factors would be a prior conviction of the same crime, endangering national security, or putting another person to a grave risk of death.

The death penalty also would apply to assassination of a President or his successor, a foreign head of state, a law enforcement or prison official.

Any mitigating circumstances would bar a federal judge from imposing the death penalty. These would include a defendant under 18 or one whose capacity was significantly impaired.

Drug traffickers would be hit hard. Possession of more than four ounces of heroin would carry a maximum sentence of 30 years and a $100,000 fine. A repeater could get life in prison.

The administration's legislation would ban obscene material unless it consisuted "a minor portion of the whole product...reasonably necessary and appropriate...to fulfill an artistic, scientific or literary purpose." Maximum sentence and fine would be three years and $25,000.

Gray Concedes Dean Lied

By TOM SEPPY
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - Acting FBI Director L. Patrick Gray III probably lied to one of his agents during the Watergate investigation.

The disclosure came when Sen. Robert Hyrd, D—W.Va., asked Gray if Dean had lied to an FBI agent last June in saying he would have to check to see if Watergate defendant E. Howard Hunt had an office in the White House, when in fact, he knew he had one.

"After looking back and making a minute examination of the record, I would have to conclude that that's probably correct," said Gray, who is seeking confirmation as permanent FBI director.

Dean told the FBI agent during an interview with White House aide Charles W. Colson he would try to determine if Hunt had an office at the White House.

That occurred only three days after he issued instructions to have a safe in Hunt's office opened and the contents, including a gun and some electronic equipment, be placed in his custody.

On June 27, Dean turned the contents of Hunt's safe over to the FBI.

Hunt and six others face sentencing Friday for the bugging and burglary of Democratic national headquarters.

Byrd told newsmen that Gray's admission is "a startling one, especially in view of the fact that he continued to provide Dean with raw facts from the FBI's files."

Byrd said it is "an amazing, incredible thing" that Gray would continue to provide FBI information to Dean, whom the West Virginia Democrat described as having an "element of ubiquity" in the Watergate investigation.

Gray has maintained that he supplied the FBI data to Dean in his role as counsel to the President while Dean was conducting a separate Watergate investigation to determine if any White House aides were involved.

After questioning Gray for two hours, Byrd repeated earlier statements that he would not vote for him to be FBI director.

"I think that the image of the FBI has suffered, in view of all the developments which occurred during his acting directorship, and I think that the professionalism, morale and efficiency of the FBI have likewise suffered, as has public confidence in the FBI," Byrd said.

"There is too much evidence of political activity on the part of the acting director; there is too much evidence of subservience to the White House; there are too many unanswered questions with respect to the possible misuse of FBI files in connection with the Watergate investigation," he added.

Byrd's statement came during Gray's ninth day as a witness before the Senate Judiciary Committee which began hearings on his confirmation Feb. 28.

Byrd told Gray he found it "especially intriguing" that Gray would submit FBI files to Dean as late as Oct. 12 when President Nixon told a news conference Aug. 29 that he could say, on the basis of a complete investigation by Dean, that no one then on the White House staff was involved in the Watergate bugging.

Almost two months after Nixon's statement, Byrd continued, Gray had supplied additional raw files to a man he had said probably lied to FBI agents.

Mayor Treated For Alcoholism

By CHARLES CHAMBERLAIN
Associated Press Writer

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) - Two months ago E. Michael O'Brien, 42, suddenly and mysteriously disappeared from his job as mayor of Peoria, Illinois' third largest city.

He returned this week, called a news conference and frankly admitted that he had been undergoing treatment for alcoholism at the Hazelden Center, a private institution in Minnesota.

Overnight, the mayor became the toast of the town, praised for his courageous public confession.

In his absence, the mayor's job was carried on by City Manager Robert O. Wright. If he wanted to relay a message to the mayor he did it through O'Brien's wife, Juanita.

"The people have been very marvelous and wonderful since I got back," O'Brien, a former state's attorney, said in an interview Thursday. "They greet me on the streets, in restaurants, and keep the phone ringing on my desk. They have a wonderful understanding. Alcoholism touches more people than most people realize."

Juanita, former secretary of the Peoria police chief, and O'Brien married 10 months ago. It was his third marriage. He has four children by each of his other wives.

"I would get up in the morning and pretend to be drinking orange juice, but it was laced with vodka," O'Brien said. "I would drink whisky from a fifth bottle and keep pouring pints back into it so people couldn't tell how much I was drinking. I was a helluva con man.

"At meetings I had to attend as mayor, I would belt drinks before so I wouldn't shake and then belt them afterward.

Vietnam Vets Said To Face More Problems

By JERRY T. BAULCH
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) - A famous disabled veteran of World War II says the Vietnam era disabled veterans are having a tougher time finding their way back into the mainstream of life than those of his war and Korea.

"It has to do with the attitudes of the people in connection with the war. They're coming home to a different environment," said Harold Russell. "Adjustment is especially different from anything we've had before."

"We've got to make a concentrated effort to get them back into the mainstream...they're got to learn to stand on their own two feet, but they need help," Russell said in an interview.

Russell is chairman of the President's Committee for Employment of the Physically Handicapped. Although not a professional actor, he won two Academy awards in the 1947 movie "Best Years of Our Lives" as the armless veteran learning to adjust to his handicap.

One was for best supporting actor, and the other was a special award for portraying the veterans' problemsn.

Russell said the plight of the disabled Vietnam era veteran is "a real problem...they're hidden away and there's not a great deal of publicity about it."

In his visits to military hospitals while the fighting was still going on, Russell said he found "defeatism" among the disabled veterans.

So many of them lack education and are not equipped to compete for jobs.

Harvard Prof Favors Acupuncture Bill

By MARY E. THORNTON
Associated Press Writer

BOSTON (AP) - A legislative committee was urged Thursday by a Nobel Prize-winning biologist, the state's public health commissioner and others to report favorably a bill which would legalize in Massachusetts the Chinese practice of acupuncture.

"It does seem to be a valid therapeutic technique," Public Health Commissioner William J. Bicknell told the Social Welfare Committee. "I would urge that it be considered as part of the practice of medicine."

Dr. George Wald, Nobel Prize winning biology professor at Harvard, told the committee he had found acupuncture to have a "rather clear basis in nerve physiology" during a recent five-week trip to China.

And the committee was told by one legislator, Rep. Ralph E. Sirianni Jr., that acupuncture treatments he is now receiving in the Boston area are relieving war-caused pains which had persisted for three decades.

Wald, who observed treatments in his trip across China, said a type of acupuncture therapy developed by the Chinese only 14 years ago is used in controlling pain - "an acupuncture analegesia" - and he said that method appears to have an obvious medical base.

Wald said he knew of no physiological basis for the acupuncture therapy which the Chinese have used for thousands of years by inserting needles at various points of the body and said "maybe it's soul medicine, but that is not to disparage it."

Wald said the acupuncture analgesia technique has been demonstrated to work well 90 per cent of the time and excellently 65 per cent of the time.

"Excellent means there was no drug backup," he said, "and Chinese doctors do not hesitate to use drugs to back it up if they think it's necessary."

Sirianni, a Winthrop Democrat, told the committee he has been in continuous pain since 1943 when shell fragments became lodged in his body when his war plane was shot down over Germany.

Severe back and leg pains could only be offset by dangerous surgery, Sirianni said he was told by physicians, so instead he claims to be undergoing acupuncture treatments.

Court Strikes Down Sterilization Ban

BOSTON (AP) - A city hospital's ban on performing voluntary sterilizations was struck down as unconstitutional Thursday by the U.S. Court of Appeals.

The court said the Worcester City Hospital's policy of barring sterilization while allowing other surgical procedures of at least equal complexity and danger violates the Constitution's equal protection clause.

In a decision written by Chief Justice Frank M. Coffin, the court said the Worcester case was substantially affected by recent decisions striking down restrictive state birth control laws.

Those decisions, said the court, make it clear "that a fundamental interest is involved, requiring a compelling rationale to justify permitting some hospital surgical procedures and banning another involving no greater risk or demand on staff and facilities."

The court's decision was in favor of Robbie Mae Hathaway, whose 12 pregnancies had resulted in eight live offspring, said the court, and "whose life would be jeopardized by future pregnancies."

The court noted that the Worcester City Hospital trustees in June, 1970, had formally adopted a previously informal policy barring its doctors from using operating rooms or staff members for performing sterilizations.

The hospital administrator in April, 1971, specifically refused Mrs. Hathaway's request that a tubal ligation sterilization be performed on her at the time of the birth of her eighth child, and had apparently turned down subsequent requests, said the court.

The court noted the hospital policy was based on an opinion of an assistant city solicitor that the legality of sterilization was "highly doubtful" in the light of state birth control laws. But it added that whatever merit the solicitor's opinion may have had then, the subsequent federal court decisions make it clear that "the Commonwealth no longer has, or could have, such an all-encompassing anti-birth control policy as he took the cited statutes to describe."

POW Narrates His Story

By MARY SCHEIER
Associated Press Writer

CHICOPEE, Mass. (AP)—Returned war prisoner Robert I. Biss says that during his more than six years of captivity there were times when he "went to the movies" five nights a week and played chess every day.

Maj. Biss, 33, one of 14 former prisoners being processed at Westover Air Force Base, told newsmen Thursday that in one of his prison camps the men took turns recounting old movies.

Biss said anything the narrator couldn't remember, he made up, and said two of his favorites were "Gone With The Wind" and "The Foxes of Harrow."

Asked if any "ribald details" were added, he laughed and said "well, we had been there quite sometime."

First Schools In Mass. Join Meat Boycott

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) - It will be tuna-macaroni-pizza-and peanut butter April 2 to April 6 for students who attend the two elementary schools in Clarksburg.

Joseph Joseph, superintendent of the Northern Berkshire School Union, said the children at Clarksburg's two schools are doing their bit to aid the meat boycott called by the American Federation of Women's Clubs.

Joseph said the state Department of Education approved the move and said the Clarksburg schools are the first in the state to take such action.

The superintendent promised the children that he will eat what they do during the meatless school week. The boycott includes the Sunday before and the Saturday after the school week.

Joseph said parents are being sent the meatless menu and an explanatory flyer. Joseph said a copy of the menu and flyer will be sent to federal officials and to the White House with a note saying "this is what the Clarksburg cafeteria is serving this week."

Joseph said the other towns in the school union, Florida, Savoy and Monroe, will be asked to include their schools in the boycott.

The Clarksburg children are the latest in a number of Western Massachusetts organizations to join the boycott. Women in Greater Springfield are planning picket-lines and meatless days, along with labor unions in the Springfield and Pittsfield areas.

Harvard Gets $3Million

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP)- Harvard University has received a $3 million gift to build a new dormitory in the Harvard Yard on the site of Hunt Hall.

A Harvard spokesman said Thursday that the gift, from a donor who wished to remain anonymous, would pay the entire cost of the new building in the North part of the yard.

Demolition of Hunt Hall, which was built in 1895, will begin this summer and the new 220-student dorm is expected to be completed by September, 1974.

Hunt Hall was the original Fogg Art Museum until the museum moved into its present building in 1927. Hunt is now used by the visual studies department of the University and these services will berelocated on the campus.

The spokesman said the new dorm is the first step in a plan to build additional housing at Harvard because of increased enrollment due to the merger with Radcliffe College.

INMATE PROTEST AT PLYMOUTH

PLYMOUTH, Mass. (AP)- Plymouth County House of Correction, scene of an inmate protest Wednesday night, was quiet Thursday, Sheriff Linwood Snow said.

Eighty-five of the jail's 138 inmates gathered in the recreation room and refused to return to their cells for the 10 p.m. lockup until a force of state police in riot gear put on a display of strength outside.

"We formed out there in front of the prison, and they went to bed," State Police Lt. Raymond McGuire. "That's all there was to it. We like this sort of thing. No problems."

Snow said the inmates were protesting the locking up of one man in segregation at 8 a.m. Wednesday. The inmate remained confined in segregation Thursday, the sheriff said.

Snow said he had met with the eight-member inmate council and told them he thought his action in locking up the inmate was justified.

DRUG CULTURE GONE FROM CHINA

By DAN HALL
Associated Press Writer

MADISON, Conn. (AP)-Author Helen Foster Snow says the drug culture of the pre-World War II China has given way there to physical culture and neighborliness.

Ms. Snow, home after a two-month visit to Communist China, said Thursday she was impressed by the fact that there "everything seemed to be in excellent good taste.

"The old China was the worst place for drugs," she said. "Now there are no drugs, no street crime, no prostitution and no juvenile delinquency."

Ms. Snow's recent tour of the Chinese mainland was her first since 1940. She has spent much of her life writing about China and chronicled the rise of Communism there as did her former husband, the late Edgar Snow.

"The Chinese in Hong Kong are just as vulgar...just like here," she said, but Communist China is "like a YWCA."

"The young people in china are on a physical-culture binge,' she said.

"Everyone in China is organized into something," she added. "Neighborhood committees organize to take care of local problems.

"There is no one who is not secure. They have housing, enough food, and they keep busy." She described the people as "happy, not delirious."

Ms. Snow said she was greeted by old friends and new acquaintances in a "very surprisingly cordial" manner.

"I didn't encounter any anti-Americanism," she added. "I'm sure it was there, but they didn't show it.

"That's the old Chinese courtesy. When you live with so many millions of people, there has to be a mechanism to control feelings," she said.

Lord Help Us

The editorial pages of the Collegian are perhaps the most grotesque flaming fiasco in the history of newsprint. The recent criticisms that have been leveled against them are both just and necessary. Critics have contended that the Editorial Department is: immature, inferior, politically prejudiced and amateurish. All these charges are unfortunately true. The editorial columnists could be described by many choice adjectives but it will suffice to say that they continually raise problems and fail to present solutions (this is the height of amateurism).

An effort should be made to eliminate the blatant political prejudices expressed in the paper. The ideal solution would be to recruit enough conservatives to write a column opposed to each liberal. However, there don't seem to be enough conservatives to go around. Instead, a program has been initiated to control the politics of the articles through the words and phrases used. Most words have liberal or conservative connotations. A PH scale should be established for the vocabulary that the authors use. Neutral words would have a PH of 7, radically conservative words would have a PH of 0, and liberal phrases would rank a 14. Phrases like: "Right On!" "Fuck the War!" and "Dick Nixon before he dicks you!" would rate 14. Slogans like "Up against the wall, commies!" "Red Menace!" and "Commie, Pinko, Fag, Queer!" would rank 0 on the scale. The editors could assign each word and phrase a rank on the scale. The ProPaPH for an article would be 7; but some leniency would be allowed, anything from a 6 to an eight would be accepted. This would cure the problem of a biased point of view and assure an adequate representation of all philosophies.

The criticism that the editorial page is inferior and amateurish cannot be disputed. To remedy this, I propose that each day a column from the New York Times (God's gift to the Earth) be printed alongside the MDC's columns. The shame of seeing their columns outclassed day after day would force the editorial columnists to write better and on more interesting subjects. To avoid complete dejection by the columnists and to prove to the reading public that there is something worse, a column from another paper should be printed on the other side of the page. The Chicopee Hearld-Sun-Daily-Shoppers' Weekly (God's gift to the Earth) could serve this purpose adequately.

MDC columnists have the fatal flaw of presenting problems but never offering solutions to them. This not only shows a lack of concern on the author's part, but also leaves the reader in a state of total dejection. The best and quickest solution to this problem is the Universal Solution. The Universal Solution is a phrase that could be used as a solution to any problem, for instance: "May the Lord see us through this crisis." "Jesus, Mary, Joseph help us." "Saint Timothy St Pantagruel Saint help us in our hour of need." For the non-believer different phrases can be used: "We can only hope the Administration will see the light", or, "This problem can only be solved through dedicated work." Different solution phrases could be used depending on the gravity of the problem. Collegian could be set up to determine who gets what phrase, an easily stalling crisis would rank 5, while a mind numbing problem would rank 1. In a 1 would sound something like this: "Jesus, Mary, Joseph help the administration see the light and solve this problem through dedicated work."

To further improve the editorial pages I would use all columns that attempt to be humorous.

May the Lord see us through this crisis.

Back In Gear

I like my hydrocarbon friends to be at least ten percent fruitcake along with the blood, bone, and muscle fiber. Joyce Kozolsky is eminently qualified to be my friend; I can't think of too many people I'd rather run into in Santa Monica. Yesterday Joyce did me a big favor; she freed me to write again.

Writing for the editorial page of the Collegian is in many ways similar to fighting Baron von Richtofen in a Pinto. You really have to have confidence to do it; Pintos work even less effectively in the air than they do on the ground. Editorial pages are traditionally the home of political observations, a brand of polemic which I find unappealing. For five years now I have nevertheless ground out a large number of columns for this page, few of which really belonged on an editorial page, but all of which were acceptable to my editors and to some segment of the public. The editors have always seemed at least satisfied with my copy, and my friends like to see their names in print. It's a satisfactory relationship.

When I'm in gear, it never troubles me that my copy is a bit off-beat. There are semesters when I don't mention Kurt Waldheim once, yet I lose no sleep. This semester, however, there has been an interruption in the flow, and I have beenfinding it difficult to get back into it. With more than 20,000 individuals, each in possession of the truth, living in this town, who needs my truth? It's less expensive at Zayre.

Yesterday I was attempting to stage a Collegian comeback, and I was not at all sure I could justify submitting anything. In my absence Gary Gomes has usurped the stream-of-consciousness number, and the editorial staff has expanded to the point where copy has to compete to make the paper. I was about to seek from Jerry Lazar some kind of assurance when I noticed Joyce's column all ready to go. "School is like an orgasm," it begs. Quickly the thought came to me, "school isn't like an orgasm at all." Following it out, I reasoned, if there are some people walking around loose saying that school bears even the slightest resemblance to an orgasm, why should I worry?

These last months have been little different from other months, in terms of verbalizable phenomena. Life goes on, even if I haven't chosen to comment publicly on its quality. Some observations, which might have become columns had I been able to write, remain somewhat clear. In view of the symptoms, I hope my hiatus is over. In the meantime, a brief collection of "Gee, I wish I'd said that's:"

The attention being paid to released prisoners of war was once paid to all returning veterans. Now special treatment is harder to come by. This either means that in the future GI benefits will be POW benefits, or that war has become unpopular.

My most recent visit to New York was most pleasant, but New York continues to be essentially intolerable, the clearest manifestation of which is the stream of tired, defeated faces that pass you on the street. Yesterday I saw similar faces on people leaving the Graduate Research Center, which doesn't say much for Amherst.

Several of my friends have spent a number of years getting high. I always decided not to worry, that people who aren't suicidal learn their tolerance and stick to it. Jim Morrison died of old age when he was twenty-seven, but it didn't hit home until Pig Pen died. You can die from getting high too much. With Ron McKernan gone, things won't be the same.

The University has an unfortunate tendency to legitimize absurdity. The Committee on Whatever voted to raise the rent of Residence Directors, although fortunately the decision was overturned. At the same time the Collegian refused to print an ad which read, in part, "fuck reality." The movies being advertised drew a crowd of four people after "screw" was substituted for "fuck." I can say fuck all I want, and I'm not paying for this, but Monty and Davis were censored. Someone in the Collegian office is a Blue Morini.

Richard Kleindienst has ordered Patrick Gray not to tell the United States Senate how the FBI operates. Perhaps the Senate should withhold funding for the FBI. Kleindienst, who serves as Richard Nixon's Attorney General, is one of Barry Goldwater's two closest political friends from Arizona, the other being Justice William Rehnquist of the United States Supreme Court. There are still those who believe Goldwater lost.

A former member of the Collegian is being paid $1200 to edit University Directions. For fifty cents, I could buy a compass and a pencil and draw the circle myself.

Playboy once published a piece of fiction by William Robinson, the point of which was that a generation gap occurs every two years, that people who are eighteen are two generations removed from those who are twenty-two. I was eighteen when I read it, and I agreed at the time. At twenty-two, I guess I still believe it, though much less willingly. Charlotte Newell has had the good sense to forge an alliance with the four-year olds. We should all be so far-sighted. Hoa binh.

On Prejudice

Prejudice is a real problem. It exists everywhere. But it does exist in every human being. It has many distinctions, some good-some bad. When a lady is "discriminating", it means that she has good taste. But the biggest exploiter of human prejudices today is big government. Big government has forced people into social relationships that they may not desire. This, in turn, has produced a race problem that has people of all colors hating each other. The blacks preach "Hate Whitey" while George Lincoln Rockwell and his nazis, and the Ku Klux Klan are preaching the exact opposite.

I believe that any government, no matter what the size and scope, does not have the right to discriminate against anyone because of race, color, creed, national origin, sex or income. This goes both ways. That is, the government should not pass a law saying that the "separate but equal" status is what goes but the government should not pass a law granting special privileges to any race, color, creed, sex, national origin, or income. This is in accordance with the principle of equality before the law, as well as equality before God. This, however, is as far as equality goes. No two individuals are equal. Actually, the fact that each individual is different is what can make life interesting. The fact that every individual is different is the very thing that people use to evaluate other people.

This is where the concept of prejudice starts. Each individual judges every other individual by his or her own standards, whatever they might be. Each individual has his or her own prejudices (standards). An individual chooses who he or she will like and associate with. This choice is based primarily on whether that individual can accept the prejudices of a certain individual.

Government intervention in these relationships is not only disastrous, it is unconstitutional. It certainly doesn't aide in eradicate racial hate and it government intervention in the same way, it surely won't make them like one [illegible] or, it might make him hate me worse.

Expanding the law of reasoning, this government's forcing someone to associate, in any way, with someone he doesn't like, for whatever reason, may result into a condition that can be dangerous.

The communists know this. In fact, they have been planning to divide this country along racial lines since 1928 but they did not gain much momentum until the Supreme Court vs. Board of Education decision of 1954. That decision by the pro-Communist Supreme Court was the first example of government forced social relationships. The ending of government forced segregation is, of course, honorable but going back to the theory that forced social relationships build up racial resentment by all persons involved, the decision ultimately has divided this country along racial lines.

The prejudice of blacks hating whites and whites hating blacks is totally wrong. Government intervention in overcoming this problem, either forced integration or forced segregation, has not only been a failure, it's made the problem a lot. I think prejudices, like this one, cannot be cured in future. Curing them involves time and patience, an evolution.

Actually, education is the one thing that can overcome the existing prejudices between whites and blacks. It is starting to work. But now the government is trying to destroy any progress made towards the elimination of this prejudice by using the scheme of forced busing to "achieve racial balance". Let me ask a question: If the elimination of prejudice involves the elimination of the feeling that there is a difference between the mind of a black and the mind of a white, and treating each individual black or white, as an individual, isn't the scheme of busing to achieve racial balance saying that there is a fundamental difference between blacks and whites? Isn't that kind of thinking racist? Think about it.

While this prejudice is undesirable, government's "trying" to do something about it has been a great failure. The only way that this prejudice can be eliminated is through education. Blacks and whites should be able to live together, side by side. The REAL thing that is preventing this is government. And I say, Government should not interfere in this problem, because it will solve nothing. And I personally hope you see the way when this will be.

In Reply To Walter C. Morgan

To Walter C. Morgan:
(Re: Collegian, 3/21, page 10).

1). You refer to us as "girls" and unappeciative ones at that. May I ask what we should be so appreciative of? Should an Indian thank a white man for returning to him what was his in the first place? Should a black be thankful it is not socially acceptable any longer to refer to him as a nigger? Should a girl then consider her cup running over if she is given equal pay and benefits as a man? I ask you sir not to feel yourself so benevolent for having given so little!

2). It is true that men have been in political control of our country since its birth, and as far as I am concerned they have done nothing to it but run it into the ground. You can't dispute the fact that the world, let alone this nation, is in a sorry state of affairs. Give women a chance, and don't knock it till you've tried it. If you can't seem to find a decent female politician, try the trick of looking beyond your nose. Excellence my dear, is in the eye of the beholder, and Bella Abzug and Shirley Chisholm, are in my eyes excellent, intelligent and worthy politicians. I am sure you won't find them "falling prey to their emotions," nor falling to pieces. I do believe a very good male politician - Edmund Muskie did just that on nationwide television not too long ago, over a stupid article from an equally ridiculous newspaper.

3). Women do not only an "equally integral part in life." If the two were complimenting each other, means the animal getting fucked, breeding, eating, and feeding, then factors your theory. Contrary to popular belief women are not just in an antiquity - as "animals." Some women are solely suited for various occupations for their order of liberation, biologically, elementary school teacher, nurse etc. It is not that women feel as though they have no place in society, but have about a lot more choice and interest in women.

4). You stated that we pass your notes up in the circle contest. What happened to the answer of three men, twenty are daughter? Are they too complicated for comprehension? And also where are those American egotistical, breadwinning males that are supposed to be the backbone of our country? Where's that bread to keep our sons and daughters out of day-care centers and their wives home in their "equally integral" roles? I see you have noticed that the psychologists that run these centers are women. I would assume then that the 'ole males couldn't back the responsibility.

So, my dear, fear not of your "integrity and male prowess being usurped by a female counterpart", because who the hell wants it besides another chauvanist counterpart? We've come too long a way to want that crap baby.

And as far as dildoes go, you ought to be aware of the fact that birth control methods are in incredible demand today, especially on campuses. So somebody must be fucking these women; and we all know: one can't get pregnant from a dildoe.

Andrea L. Talamas

To Walter C. Morgan:
(Re: Collegian, 3/21, page 10).

Mr. Morgan, you state that males alone have brought mankind along. Look you now to evaluate the [illegible] that have done. Also ask you to reflect a while and discover possible reasons why women's efforts may not have been given due credit. Look at one example of the permanence of prejudice against women: the times when women actually started to use male pseudonyms in order to get their works published. How many other talents have authored and been wasted by a society that does not give them a chance?

As to your theory that "The American male should be supplied as the very backbone around which our society is run", there is not one whether it is women who are the backbone having been relegated to the "circumstance" as you put it, leaving their male counterparts free to participate in the world outside the home. You are right when you say that females and females were conceived in earlier life, you fail to [illegible] society is harmed and evolve that is a technological society this is no longer true. It seems to me that you, Mr. Morgan, are desperately trying to defend your physical attributes when your mental and emotional ones are being challenged.

You are right again when you say it is a fact that women throughout history have been dubbed the gentler sex, that upon what fact is that idea based? And furthermore, we have only to look towards social issues to see how misconceptions and gross generalizations have been perpetuated and continuously affected the have thinking of society as a whole.

Fact 2 implies you were aware the factual contribution of your viewpoint that women have more optimum than men, which in turn aids them to fill several occupations. If you took the time to get the opinions of the people around you, you might discover that men indeed have a place in such fields as elementary school teaching, nursing, housekeeping, etc., just as women are needed in other positions. It depends upon the attributes of the individual, not the sex. Women are not arguing that they have not had a place in society; they are challenging the inferior status of it.

And, there you very much in your admittance that women and men complement each other in preservation. Don't they also complement each other in the care and upbringing of the life they produce?

Your conclusion that male integrity and governess is being challenged is true if you mind on taking your view age on the male assumption that men are forced unfair to the demands of the world, that whom are you trying to convince of your superiority, society or yourself? Do you feel not being competent enough to struggle for a place in life against the one half of the population that has traditionally been excluded?

Let Them Eat It

To The Editor:

Marie Antoinette was immortalized for uttering the words, "Let them eat cake!" Mrs. Knauer, President Nixon's food flunky, deserves no less a place in history for her stirring cry, "Let them eat hearts and brains!" The spectacle of this fossilized, plastic pig oinking in the faces of the American people was a comical as it was revolting.

However, not to be outdone, President Nixon promptly vetoed a bill to provide aid for the handicapped. His message was, as usual, perfectly clear. Our noble President is saying, "Let them crawl to the table and eat brains!"

To all of you who voted for Mr. Nixon, all I can say is, "Eat your hearts out!"

Hills House Hassles

To The Editor:

I am writing this letter in reference to the fact that Hills House is going to be taken over after this semester with all the residents faced with the fact that they have no place to live. The reasons given were as follows: 1) Financially, the dorm is breaking even while others are either paid off or heavily in debt such as Sylvan. The Sylvan residents have been bitching about the lousy conditions there. Since the School of Ed is a main reason for the turning over of Hills into office space, why not take over one of the dorms in Sylvan where it is close to the school. 2) Office space is lacking on campus so that a lot of the faculty are doubled up. With 50 more faculty members added there seems to be even more crowding. So with one person to room in Hills, the overcrowding will be alleviated. But there are 2 persons per room so that double the amount of people in will be going out. They want to place us in the cockroach infested Hamlin House where the rooms are almost twice as small. Hamlin holds only 170 while 400 are being thrown out. So where will the rest of the residents be placed? Some will end up in places such as Sylvan that neither they nor their parents can afford. Since they have to stay on campus, where will they go?

Some people in this place have busted their butts to get things badly needed. At the end of this vacation both North and South will have been painted. New furniture for the lounge has been placed in it with new beds, new desks, new lights for the halls, and carpet runners among other things. So if we lose this place that all goes down the drain.

Another thing is that a lot of guys have applied for counselor positions in the dorm. If we get kicked out, these guys lose their jobs and added income that they are depending on and they end up with no priority that they have built up while in Hills.

Since the new library will be occupied really soon, that leaves Goodell empty. Why can't they put up the faculty in Goodell and set up temporary partitions for the offices while they renovate it?

I think that the University should look at the students and other possibilities before they give somebody the Royal Screw.

Indian Militancy Is Warranted

By BILL LATTRELL

There are definite reasons behind the recent American Indian militant actions; to name a few, the occupation and destruction of the Bureau of Indian Affairs building in Washington D.C. during last November, the Alcatraz takeover, the burning of the courthouse in Custer, S.D., and most recently the Wounded Knee Seige.

First, historically the American Indian has been in a constant stage of plight since the appearance of the whiteman on the Atlantic coast. The "removal" policies executed by various European emmisaries and the government of this country, pushed the Indians west, in front of the migrating avaricious settlers. Today, although we realize the atrocities that have been committed in our dealings with the Indian of yesteryear, we still refuse to relinquish our self-instilled attitude of superiority. The fact remains that the United States Government and its apathetic people are still not willing to face the Indian's present situation, much less do anything it. Well deserved reparations would be appropriate, but far more important at this time is to examine and stop the indecencies that exist.

It appeared as if the situation was looking good for the Indian in 1970 when President Nixon seemed to be taking definite positions in line with pro-Indian policy, as revealed in his message to Congress in July of that year. At that time it was announced that a new national policy toward the American Indian was forthcoming. The Indians were to become self-determining, that states, counties, and cities are able to determine their own future. The Federal Government was simply going to act as a trustee for the Indians. They would be the protection agency that the Indians needed to "keep an eye on for the best interest" over American Indian land and resources. Unfortunately, the Congress has not yet to this day passed any legislation, and the Nixon administration has failed to keep its promises. For example, in the Bureau of Indian Affairs shakeups, old liners are being replaced by more old liners. This is a deceitful technique to use on the unknowing public.

Often the Indian tribal leadership is not a true representation of the people. It is true that Indians are allowed to elect their own tribal chiefs or chairmen, but this democratic election process can be very confusing to those not educated to its exact process. The voting results do not reflect the true American Indian wish. Secondly, the elected chiefs must be approved by the Secretary of the Interior, a person of obvious white government interests. This is indicative of the government's definitions of the Indians rights and self determination policies. American Indians still do not have the power to overthrow or impeach their leaders if they are unsatisfied with them, but if they make pleas to the government for such an oust, the government replies in a most hypocritical manner that since the Indians are on a self-determination policy, their hands are tied. The inconsistency that American Indians do not have the power of impeachment over their tribal chiefs (as recognized by the U.S. Government), and the governments refusal to do anything is an atrocity.

It seems quite reasonable that the Indians should have a complete right for self-determination. Results of government directed determination has hardly been successful. To cite a few statistics, the average death rate of an American Indian male is 45 years of age as compared to the national average of 67. Around the turn of the century, the American Indian possessed nearly 150 million acres of reservation and other land interests. Today he has 55 million acres left. The average Indian income is considerably less than half of that of the national average. Living conditions on American Indian reservations fall far below national standards. One particular condition reflects this. The suicide rate of American Indian teenagers is over 100 times the national average for the same group of people. Need more be said?

This is, of course, a scant outline of only some of the problems facing the American Indian. The public, then, should be a little less apathetic and a little more sympathetic towards the American Indian. Interest, through action, should be directed toward the United States Government so that atrocities and indecencies are halted. Coercion should be particularly directed towards Congress, to act on a Bill put before them more then three years ago on the subject of the plight of the American Indian, and to President Nixon who made the committment of the government and its federal agencies to promote a new, just policy toward the American Indian. Where is this new policy?

Finally, coercion should be directed to Mr. Rogers Morton, the Secretary of the Interior to reexamine the situation of the American Indian, and then based on these true findings to rearrange the Bureau of Indian Affairs for the best interest of the Indians' well being.

So, as it may be seen, the militancy that is becoming ever more pronounced in the American Indian is not totally unwarranted. It is hard for the average American non-Indian to imagine the intensity of the frustrations that took centuries to build up in the Indian, but it is not hard to realize that the frustrations do exist, that they are warranted ones, and that they involve problems that must be dealt with directly, with fortitude, and now...before it is too late.

Whitmore's Bureaucracy

By MICHAEL UGOLINI

If the vast bureaucracy of this University is ever going to be minimized, certain goals relative to information outflow of the Administrative body must be reached and maintained. It should be an easy task to pick any title from the many that exist and be able to clearly identify the functions of the person that holds that title. Presently this cannot be done. With over 2100 professional positions at Amherst it scares me to think that there are very few people that knew what half of them do.

In the past two weeks I've spent about eight hours in Whitmore trying to obtain information regarding the hierarchal structure of the place and the duties and responsibilities of the titles and offices within. Very few people I talked to were cooperative and helpful. Usually it took persistent bagdering and at times downright rudeness to get them to admit that they weren't sure of who was responsible for what. On several occasions, I was given the familiar verbal diarrhea: "...Oh, that information. That's not available in this office. You'll have to ask..."

University Directions, a publication designed to give new students some insight into the question of how the system operates, barely touches on the subject of Administrative faculties.

Job descriptions obtained from the Personnel Office are extremely vague in describing the duties of the more commonly held professional positions in Administration–Staff Associate, Staff Assistant, and Staff Administrator. When I inquired if any publication was available that described the functions of positions I was told not only wasn't it available but that no such animal ever exists.

If this information was made easily accessible, any interested person, based on his beliefs as to the policy affecting being good or bad, could find out who made that policy and whether it was within their province to do so. Perhaps some officials wouldn't be so quick to make snap, arbitrary decisions. Maybe the run-around trick to get people off their backs wouldn't be so prevalent. But, most important, there's the possibility that waste could be avoided through the eradication of do-nothing positions, if they are found to exist.

Information outflow as basic as function should be easily accessible to all. Since no publication now exists, I suggest the proper administrative office (what office is proper is anybody's guess) put one or two of their well paid "assistants" to the task of making one up.

Student-Faculty Teams Give Small Business Help

Free management counseling for small businesses is now being provided by UMass student- faculty teams in cooperation with the Boston Regional Office of the Small Business Administration.

Sponsored by the Center for Outreach Programs at UMass, the project includes 23 students and eight faculty members from the School of Business Administration, the department of hotel, restaurant and travel administration and the department of agricultural and food economics.

The purpose is to provide management counseling assistance upon request to small business firms. The present program includes eight small retailing and manufacturing firms in Western Massachusetts which have requested assistance.

The Small Business Counseling Program is a nation-wide pilot project of the Small Business Administration to involve university students and faculty in assisting the small business community, not only to help small business but also to provide university students with practical experience in identifying and solving problems of small business firms. The participating students receive credit for this Outreach experience.

Theodore W. Leed of the department of agricultural and food economics serves as a faculty advisor and the University Coordinator for the program. The other faculty advisors are: Albert L. Wrisley, department of hotel, restaurant and travel administration; and Arthur Elkins, James L. Wiek, Gerald Zeisel, Donald E. Stone, Charles D. Schewe, and Samuel Goldman of the School of Business Administration. William Burke represents the Center for Outreach Programs.

Life Workshop April 7,8

There will be a values clarification/life planning workshop on campus on the weekend of April 7-8. Sponsored by the Division of Continuing Education, the workshop is designed to help participants try to set up a life plan which is consistent with their own values.

Students, faculty members and others who are interested in participating should contact Cont. Ed. on the 9th floor of the Campus Center before leaving for vacation, as registration for the April 7-8 workshop closes April 2.

The purpose of a workshop such as this is to help people get in touch with their own value systems and try to formulate a life plan which is consistent with those values. In other words, it can help you decide what kind of job, relationships, and other activities will help you lead a life that is rewarding in terms of what you want for yourself.

The staff for the workshop are members of the Human Potential Institute in Conway, and have all received training at the New England Training Institute.

The workshop will begin at 9:30 Saturday, April 7, in 917 CC. The Saturday session will end at 5:00. The second session will start at 2:00 Sunday, April 8, and end at 9:00.

Registration and fee payment should be made through the Cont. Ed. office in 920 CC by April 2. Enrollment is limited to the first 100 who register. There may be a small number of scholarships available. For further information, call Cont. Ed. at 545-2591 or Gil Salk at 545- 0813.

Speech Dept. Gets TV Equipment

$4000 worth of used but serviceable television equipment has been donated to the UMass speech department's TV studio by WBZ-TV in Boston.

The electronic gear adds backup capability and sophistication to the studio, where an average of 100 mass communications students per week do laboratory work, Nielsen said.

The equipment was donated to UMass by Richard Ellis, WBZ director of engineering, through the efforts of Jay Ballard, a former UMass student now a WBZ staff member.

5 College Board Working To Improve Bus Service

"Bus Complaint Cards" have been distributed on campus by the Transportation Committee of the Five College Student Coordinating Board in order to receive feedback on the quality of the daily and evening bus service among the five area colleges.

Those who have had a bad experience or are dissatisfied with times, crowded facilities or drivers or have other problems should pick up a card at any residence area center or at the information desk on the concourse level of the Campus Center. The bus service is part of an entire program of student co-operation among Amherst, Mt. Holyoke, Smith, and Hampshire Colleges, and the University. This program involves course exchange, social participation, and cultural events. Leaf through the pamphlets at the information desk or catalogues in the Provosts Office in Whitmore to find the variety of course offerings available through Five College Co-operation. The Five College Calendar is also available which details events at the various schools each month, and is a great medium to keep posted on some very interesting current activities.

UMass Press Poetry Nominated For Award

"Conjure," a volume of poetry published by the University of Massachusetts Press, has won a National Book Award Nomination for the black writer Ishmael Reed.

It is the first University Press book to be so nominated and is Reed's first full book of poetry. He has written several novels, one of which, "Mumbo Jumbo," has won Reed a National Book Award Nomination in the fiction category. He is the only author among this year's more than 100 nominees to have two of his books nominated. "Mumbo Jumbo" was published by Doubleday.

When the UMass Press published "Conjure" in October of 1972, critics called it "lively, witty and provocative," and "a powerful collection." Reed and the editors of the University Press got together through the efforts of UMass English Professor David R. Clark, who knew Reed's work and was chairman of the UMass Press Poetry Board Committee at that time.

Born in Tennessee 35 years ago, Reed studied at the University of Buffalo, has worked as a journalist and as an actor and has taught at the University of California in Berkeley. He now lives in California.

The National Book Awards nominees are named in ten categories. In the poetry category, Reed is one of ten nominees, sharing the honor with such poets as W. H. Auden, John Berryman, Denise Levertov and Archibald MacLeish. The awards will be made in New York April 10.

"Company's" company— The musical will be presented after spring recess by the University Music Theatre. It is a story of a group of married people trying to obtain a wife for a bachelor friend.

Moliere Festival On WFCR

WFCR-FM will commemorate the 300th anniversary of the death of the great French playwright Moliere (1673-1973) by presenting a Moliere series. Every Sunday afternoon during April the station will offer a Moliere play—full or almost full length. The plays, acted by topflight French companies, will be introduced, summarized, and commented on in English by Dr. Jeffrey Carre, chairman of the French Department at Amherst College.

Each program will begin at or around 4 p.m. Exact times will be listed in the WFCR Program Guide or in local newspapers.

The plays will be April 1, "L'Ecole des Femmes" (The School for Wives), with Louis Jouvet; April 8, "Don Juan"; April 25, "L'Avare" (The Miser); April 22, "Les Fourberies de Scapin" (Scapin's Tricks); and on the last Sunday, April 29th, the play "Le Malade Imaginaire" (The Imaginary Invalid), during the performance of which Moliere was stricken and died.

Professor Carre suggests that those in the audience whose comprehension of spoken French is not strong procure copies of the French texts and then follow along for greater listening enjoyment.

Bowker Has 'Company' After Spring Recess

The UMass Music Theatre will present "Company" Thursday through Saturday, April 5, 6, and 7, in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m.

"Company," a musical comedy by Stephen Sondheim and George Furth, takes place in present day New York City, and centers around Robert, a bachelor, and his "good and crazy" married friends, who try their hardest to obtain a wife for him.

Songs from this recent Broadway hit include, "Company," "You Could Drive a Person Crazy," "Poor Baby," "Barcelona," "Side by Side" (a vaudevillian tap routine), and "Being Alive."

The UMass Music Theatre performance, entirely student-produced, is sponsored by the Fine Arts Council. Reserved tickets at $1 for UMass undergraduates and $1.50 for the general public, are available at the Fine Arts Council Box Office, 125 Herter Hall. Remaining tickets will be available at Bowker Auditorium one hour before each performance. Telephone (413) 545-0202 for both ticket offices.

Students' Film Festival

A film carnival sponsored by the Film Program of the English Department will be held April 24, 8 p.m., in 106 Thompson. A selection of the best student-made films will be shown.

Students interested in having their films shown should submit them to Professor Jack Jorgens, 426 Bartlett Tuesday or Friday between 9 and 11 p.m. April 18 is the deadline for submitting films.

All reels, boxes and cassettes should be labeled with name and phone number. Regular 8, Super 8, Super 8 sound, 16 mag, 16 optical as well as reel or cassette sound for 8 or 16 are all acceptable.

A paragraph giving credits, explanations or non-explanations can be submitted with the films, and copies will be distributed to the audience if the film is shown.

'Review' Reviews Carlos Williams

A special section on the late poet William Carlos Williams will be featured in the winter issue of "The Massachusetts Review" to be published this month. Paul L. Mariani, editor, is an associate professor of English at UMass.

Included in the Williams portion of the quarterly literary magazine will be a portion of his previously unpublished novel "Man Orchid," a black novel, besides two essays on Ezra Pound; also, a 1950 interview with Dr. Williams.

Also included in the issue will be works by French philosopher Albert Memmi, on Frantz Fanon; E. M. Beekman, on Ramond Chandler and American detective fiction; and Shaun O'Connell and Seymour Rudin, reviews on fiction and the performing arts.

"The Massachusetts Review" is a cooperative effort of Amherst, Smith, Hampshire and Mount Holyoke Colleges, and UMass.

Rape Is Sexual Rip-Off

By DRS. McCASHIN and KLEIN

The recent dramatic increase in reported cases of sexual assault has drawn surprisingly little comment from the psychological and psychiatric communities. In fact, the psychological literature contains little about the psychodynamics of a rapist. One reason for this is that rape is not necessarily a pathological conditiop per se, but can be behavior that is associated with other personality disorders, such as organic brain diseases and psychosis. Yet few persons commit rape because of diminished capacity.

Beyond this, what tends to obscure focused attention on the dynamics of a rapist, is the preoccupation on the part of many people in the clinical and law enforcement fields with determining the line of responsibility between offender and victim. All too often the victim is seen as having invited rape through seductive behavior. This preoccupation reflects sexist bias. In fact, the clinical data that is available suggests that rapists are little affected by aesthetic factors. The rapist usually chooses the first safe victim that comes his way (when he feels inclined to rape), regardless of her age, what she does or how she looks.

Rape is an anti-social act and represents a rip-off of another person's sexuality. Rapists can reflect values that exist in the larger society. He feels that because his victim is "just a woman" she can be objectified. He associates masculinity with violent assertiveness, feels women have no right to enjoy sex, harbors sado-masochistic wishes and possibly suffers from a severe sense of inadequacy, impotence and castration anxiety.

We emphasize possibly because rapists are first and foremost psychopathic in character. They are criminals who enjoy their criminality. They are lacking in conscience rather than ego control. The prevalance of rape reflects a parallel fascination with sado-masochism in our culture, and that sexual oppression and repression encourages sexual assault.

Drs. McCashin and Klein will accept questions in strict confidence for possible appearance in YOUR HEAD. Send or bring your questions to 303 Machmer Hall.

APG To View 'The Journalists'

Alpha Phi Gamma will open its spring programs April 2--the first day of classes after vacation.

Scheduled for members of the honorary journalism society is a planning session and a film. The Sigma Delta Chi motion picture, "The Journalists", will be shown at 7 p.m. April 2 at Campus Center 804-808.

After the picutre, APG members will discuss the annual elections, the spring initiation and the annual communications careers convocation.

'Weekend' Of Art

The Orchard Hill Art and Society program is planning a "weekend" of the arts that will run from Tuesday, April 3, through the following Sunday afternoon.

The program will begin with a panel discussion of "Art, the Artist, and Social Change." Panel members so far include musician Archie Shepp, writer and translator Sue Sherman, and Acklyn Lynch, moderator.

On Saturday and Sunday afternoons there will be workshops on poetry, film, graphic arts and black music. On Saturday night there will be a party featuring performances by some of the above artists.

Watch for a complete schedule.

Concert Comm. Logo Contest

The UMass Concert Committee yesterday announced the start of a contest aimed at providing them with a "logo".

A Concert Committee spokesman defined a logo as an "insignia and/or motto which defines the essence of the Concert Committee."

For the benefit of those who may not be familiar with the work of the Committee, its stated pupose is to "provide a wide range of quality musical entertainment to the university community, with the ultimate goal of creating an educational experience for both the Concert Committee and those it seeks to entertain."

The spokesman stated; "Woodstock's emblem of a guitar and bird is an example of what we have in mind."

The prize to be awarded to the winning artist will be a copy of an album of each of the three groups appearing in this spring's concert in the stadium, donated by the New Record Shop of Amherst.

Entries should be easily reproduced for use as stamps, posters, etc. They must be 5x5 inches and black and white. Include your name and phone number.

Contestants should submit entries at the Student Activities desk in the C.C. no later than Tuesday, April 10th. Entries will be judged according to originality, visual appeal, and personification of the Concert Committee. All entries become sole property of the Concert Committee.

Big Ditch To Enter Last Phase

The last phases of construction for The Big Ditch will begin Monday, March 26, on Campus Center Way, the road leading to the Campus Center Parking Garage. Traffic flow will be interrupted, but not stopped, for 10 weeks.

For the first three weeks, traffic will be re-routed over a nearby temporary gravel road. The campus bus stop will remain the same.

For the next seven weeks, workmen will be installing pipes in the ditch, and traffic will be two ways, but on just one lane. A policeman will be preent during daytime hours.

Motorists are asked to be cautious, especially at night. With this last major construction for The Big Ditch completed, the next steps are road repair and clean-up, and planting.

The Big Ditch will carry power lines for the new power plant which is being built at Tillson Farm and which will begin service during the next academic year.

ASTROLOGICAL FORECAST

—By SYDNEY OMARR—

A wise man, who is one of the country's top executives, once told me, "The wise man controls his destiny—astrology points the way."

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Accent is on removing obstacles to progress. Get ideas, thoughts on paper. Outline your philosophy. Define goals. Come to terms with yourself. Realize no one is going to give you something for nothing.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Study Aries message. Be ready for basic changes. Special message could set course of your direction. Geminii, Virgo individuals could play key roles. Subject of money is highlighted. Frank discussion with mate, close associate is indicated.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Emphasis is on where and how you live. Special relationship is tested. Be diplomatic. If you are too forceful, you arouse enmity. Know it and make intelligent concession. Applies especially when dealing with family member.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Low-key approach is best—obtain hint from Gemini message. People who depend on you seem to want perfection. That is impossibie to give— don't deceive others or yourself. Pisces person plays prominent role.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Creative forces flow. You are able to express yourself in meaningful manner. Relations with children are featured. Your emotions tend now to dominate. Member of opposite sex pays meaningful compliment.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Completion, finalizing of deal is indicated. Don't linger. Broaden horizons. Perceive future potential. Aries person can set example. Properly values come up for consideration. Get facts, discard rumors.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Permit ideas to flow. Welcome chance to utilize original approach. Surprise associates by displaying creative side to greater degree. Leo is in picture. Maintain independent stance. You have more allies than might be suspected.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Follow through on hunch. You could be inspired along lines which lead to solid profit. Know it and respond accordingly. Aquarius individual offers encouragement. Be receptive. Don't permit pride to block progress.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Cycle is high; take the lead. Make new starts in new directions. Emphasize personality. Make yourself heard. Highlight versatility. Emphasis is on correct timing, judgment. You will be basking in spotlight.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): One behind the scenes could be complicating what was a relatively simple matter. Know it and do some personal checking. You may be carrying too great a load. Tear away non-essentials. One you thought indifferent works in your behalf.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You are better able to communicate with friends. More persons now are interested in what you say and do. Accent is on fulfillment of desires. Gemini, Virgo persons play important roles. Change is beneficial.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You get material needed to successfully launch project. One you respect is in your corner. Know it and proceed accordingly. Consider desires of family member. Harmony in domestic area is now of special importance.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you are independent, an original thinker, fond of travel, capable of analyzing character. You draw to you many born under Gemini and Virgo. You will have an active social life in 1973 and May could be your most significant month this year.

Intramural Action...

Whalers Cop Title

By MDC STAFF

The defending champion Melville Whalers, brilliantly coached by Ed Fitzgerald, battled past a scrappy Celtics team 19-11 on Tuesday night to retain the Girls' Intramural Basketball Championship.

Both teams were tense in the first half, with the Celts enjoying a slight scoring edge, especially at the free throw line. Janet Manning, one of the Whalers' top rebounders, was tagged with 4 quick fouls early in the half and was quickly replaced. Jane Andrews came in and did a very fine job containing the much taller Celts. Nevertheless, the half time buzzer found the Celts leading by three.

The Whalers surprised the Celts in the second half by coming out strong and gaining the momentum almost immediately. Although the teams exchanged baskets in the early moments, the tenacious defense displayed by Mary Arnott and Sharon Gerace, together with the inspired rebounding of Janet and June Manning, brought the Whalers back strongly until the two teams were deadlocked 11-11 with 2 minutes left to play. At this point, Deb Oakley stole the ball for the Whalers and drove in for an uncontested lay-up. In the ensuing moments, she was fouled twice more, and converted 3 free throws to ensure the victory. It should be noted at this point that, although all the members of the Whalers team did not get a chance to play in this game, their substitute roles and enthusiastic support throughout the season have been instrumental in the Whalers' success.

High scorers for the Whalers in this contest were Deb Oakley with 15 pts. and Janet and June Manning with 2 each. June also chipped in with 7 rebounds. High scorers for the losers were P. Raymond with 4 pts. and P. Bradley with 4 pts.

Without a doubt there was optimism in the UMass camp all season long. Such optimism carried the team from the depths of 7-6 to the crest of a 13 game win streak and an NIT verdict in New York. And these fans were there to see it. (Staff Photo by George Withers).

Ruggers Head South

By MDC STAFF

While most UMies will be spending their Spring vacations in personal pursuits, the UMass rugby club will be trying to help the cause of gaining national recognition for UMass sports.

This weekend the ruggers are traveling to Florida to start off their Spring season with five tough games in Tallahassee, Orlando and Gainesville.

On Tuesday, March 27, UMass plays its season opener against a rugged Florida State team at Tallahassee. On Wednesday the team will play two games against an older and more experienced Orlando Rugby Football Club.

The tour ends on Thursday with two games at the University of Florida at Gainesville.

In an exclusive interview with schedule secretary Brian Skanes last night, the beefy second row told the Collegian "The major factor is that the Florida teams have been practicing and playing games since September. They'll be in much better shape and used to the warm weather."

UMass' first home game is Sunday, April 8, versus Holy Cross. The games are played on the fields beyond the intramural fields.

So get out, bring a date and a few beers, and root for the home team.

"It Was A Time To Be Happy"

By FRANK ANTOSIEWICZ

A win over Missouri and a strong showing against North Carolina in the National Invitational Tournament silenced the critics who said that UMass would be ranked seventh in New England and third or fourth in the Yankee Conference. All this they said would happen only if the sophomores matured quickly, but it was the seniors as much as the sophs who were responsible for the 20-7 record.

A win for UMass basketball for the first time ever in a national tournement, 13 straight wins, 16 of the last 19 games (losses to nationally ranked Providence, Syracuse and North Carolina) #2 ranking in New England and a recouping of the Yankee Conference crown enhanced the value of the roughest UMass schedule ever. The season had opened with 10 of the first 12 on the road and many thought that if they could win at least half of those 12, it would be a good season. The Minutemen did better than that as they came out of it 7-5 and with the players feeling that they should be 10-2 (since 3 of the losses were a matter of only 1, 2 and 3 points.

Team efforts in the early going against Harvard and Penn kept the hoopsters from dropping below the .500 mark. Coach Jack Leaman saved his 100th career win for Harvard's appearance in the Cage and then went on to complete his seventh year with a career mark of 117-62 at UMass.

Peter Trow was the hot hand in the early going and then was sidelined by a neck injury against Boston University in Boston and never re-entered the starting five as the season-ending drive to the NIT began. Others such as John Murphy hitting 10-12 attempts at Penn, Al Skinner with an average of 14.9 points and 8.8 rebounds a game, Bill Endicott with 25 points at Rhode Island, Tom McLaughlin with 26 points against Rhody when they came to the Cage, and then, Tom Austin's clutch performances against Missouri (14 points and 10 rebounds) and NC (21 points and 11 rebs), took turns being the hero.

Through the season a disciplined offense as well as a tenacious defense evolved. Team captain McLaughlin is quick to credit Coach Leaman and his assistants, Pan Gaudette and Ray Wilson, for the success. Leaman at Penn, which he considers the turning point of the season, continually shouted, "Do it my way," as UMass upset a nationally ranked team (19th) for the first time in history. Gaudette supplied an offense to combat the zone, while Wilson supplied the talent which he had gathered in his scouting jaunts around NJ, NY and New England.

Besides the coaches, McLaughlin supplied the leadership by acting as a go between to present the team's wishes. He also at times acted as an interpreter for the flaky sophs. Two other seniors, Austin and Charlie Peters who at one time were fighting for one starting slot at center, hustled to provide an example for the younger squad members. While others were scoring, they concentrated on defense. And soon both were starters. Austin with his long arms waving wildly in front of the press to hinder the ball from coming down the court and Peters at the other end to pick up loose balls, something like a centerfielder in baseball, confidently went about stopping their opponents from scoring, while other Minutemen filled the hoops.

Not to be forgotten is senior Chuck Olsen, who though he did not play very much, supplied the hustle during practice and the encouragement in such places as Penn where very few UMass fans ventured.

Junior Al Skinner, as the team's top scorer and rebounder, also supplied some of the leadership with his quick hands and tough defensive play. A steal by Al off the press incited the rest of mates to try just a bit harder. Some of his Long Island moves will be remembered by the unlucky fellow who was covering him and the New England Coaches recognized this by naming him All-NE.

The other starter was Rick Pitino, who at times would not take a shot the whole game. Pitino was the boss of the offense and acted the part by continually setting up others for the score. He led the Minutemen with 129 assists.

The sophs were always ready to take the shot. Murphy was the second leading scorer with a 11.8 average and was named ECAC player of the week for his 20 point performance at Penn. Endicott was the flakiest with his long frizzy hair and a 25 foot jump shot. His biggest smile of the season was seen after his 4 points and his holding of Ken Charles (one of the leading scorers in the country) to only 7 of 17 for 14 points.

The other soph guard was Jim Burke and defense was his adversary by reaching up to pluck cross court pass out of the air. His other contribution is the measles, which Pitino caught later in the season.

Tom Gillams did not get much opportunity to play, but when he did he showed that he had the ability. At Maine, when the other big men were in foul trouble, Gillams came on to help clinch the Yankee Conference championship.

On the other side of the towel were the contributions of the managers, Steve Libby and Bobby Powers. Libby was the first UMass manager to appear in a two part series on WHYN concerning the life of a manager. Powers provided the expertise acquired in five years on the squad.

Trainer Jim Laughnane traveled with the team to keep them on the floor, while student trainer, Bill Sangster, was on hand at practices for taping.

For a senior under the bright lights of Madison Square Garden, there's no finer place in the country to finish your season. Tom Austin did it that way. And in the process he wrote his own script. (MDC Photo by George Withers).

...You Won't Forget The End...

He never did stop hustling. Charlie Peters would have it no other way. Dr. A (Al Skinner) looks on and so does Tar Heel George Karl who made his presence felt in the UMass basketball program. But so did No. 54. (MDC Photo by George Withers).

For the Minutemen just being in New York for more than one was reward enough for a season that began in the middle of October. For when the team first went to scrimmage Manhattan at Madison Square Garden while MacPherson was still in the headlines, who would have guessed the outcome of '72-'73.

It's been profitable to many people for different reasons. And to Al Skinner as well. Just recently Dr. A. was tabbed UPI All-New England First Team. Yes, it's been a good year.

Gorillas Uncaged

By HOWIE BLOOM

Everybody's got problems, right? Kids, teachers, diplomats—even millionaires have them. Wherever you look, you'll find somebody who's got something that's bugging him. Take Coach Dick Garber of the UMass lacrosse team, for instance. Now there's a guy who's got something to worry about. His team starts its annual spring trip next week, and he has to figure out what he's going to do with the wealth of talent he's been blessed with this season. The Gorillas will be visiting Rutgers, Princeton, and Nassau Community College in preparation for their season opener at Cortland State on March 31st.

The trip will be most useful in helping Garber decide who his starters will be and what line combinations will be the most effective. Co-captains Hirsch Seidman and Dwight Blomquist, picked as All-Americans last season, will run on first midfield along with any number of other middies. Attack will feature Fred Michels, Pete Connolly, and Frank Garahan. All three have looked great in practice this winter, but will have to overcome the problem of not having played with each other for very long. Fighting off potential enemy goal scorers for the Gorillas will be last year's standout freshman defenseman, Bill Blaustein, aided by John McCarthy and Russ Incorvia. Goalkeeping chores will be split between Jim Haddad and John Rutledge.

Crimson Tide Washes Away Gophers

By KEN RAPPOPORT

NEW YORK (AP)—Alabama reeled off 16 straight points while holding Minnesota scoreless for eight minutes and pulled off an NIT upset with a dramatic 69-65 victory over the Gophers Thursday night.

The triumph sent the amazing Crimson Tide into Saturday's semifinals against the winner of last night's quarterfinal game between Fairfield and Virginia Tech. The other semifinal game Saturday matches Notre Dame and North Carolina, teams that earlier won quarter-final games.

Alabama's victory was all the more spectacular because the Crimson Tide were losing by 12 points at the half to a bigger and stronger rebounding team.

Giggin!!!

By MDC STAFF

Yes, the players made the season what it was today. Now only the memories of beating Pennsylvania, topping Harvard for Leaman's 100th victory, walking into the "Pit" at Orono, Me. and walking out with the Yankee Conference title, remain in your mind. Yes, you were entertained. But did you catch the sign on the fading Ivy of the Old Chapel wall this week. It read, "The Pep Band Will Be Giggin' at the NIT." That was only half the story.

Armed with nothing but enthusiasm, the Pep Band under the direction of Joe Ducci, helped give the game of basketball, UMass style 1973, that backdrop of emotion that college hoop so often thrives on. And the Pep Band lacked little such desire.

They invented the cowbell and as a matter of fact if you get a chance to stroll by Jack Leaman's office after vacation, check the ornament on the desk. Yes, it's the original Cowbell that never made it to New York City. The Bell that carried the Minutemen in the early going cracked and never dressed for the NIT. But the chicken was there.

The gimmick was part of their repetoire. And so were the drums that made along with the Cowbell, guest appearances at Durham, N.H. and Orono, Me., and Kingston, R.I. Their story won't be best told in their antics or equipment, but it's best personified in their attitude. You knew the Pep Band was around. They did the job.

For those who stayed on campus over the vacation, there was little more to do than measure the hours in coffeehouses. Our suburban jungle can actually be a lonely place at times, with the sun boring through empty courtyards. But today is the day of giggles and hurries; the classes are on, the papers are due, and the vacation is a memory.

America Begins Meat Boycott

By LOUISE COOK
Associated Press Writer

Sunday dinner meant things like macaroni, tuna fish or maybe vegetable casseroles for thousands of American families who joined the start of a week-long meat boycott aimed at cutting rising food prices.

The boycott went on despite newly imposed price ceilings on beef, pork and lamb. Many consumers said President Nixon's action to limit the cost of these items didn't come soon enough to help.

"Nixon is too little, too late," said Charles Weaver of San Antonion, Tex., a senior system engineer for a computer company.

Saturday dinner was tuna burgers for the Weavers; Sunday was tuna tacos. In addition, Mrs. Weaver said, she's making such main courses as eggplant casseroles, cheese dishes and eggs. She said she saves about $1 a meal by cutting out meat.

Faye Giordano of Brooklyn, N.Y., said Sunday's dinner for her and her husband, a traffic manager for a trucking company, was macaroni instead of roast beef. She said that during the week, "We'll have soups and omelets, macaroni, ravioli. We'll go back to the Italian way." Mrs. Giordano said her normal food budget is between $50 and $60 a week.

The boycott emphasis was on beef and other high-priced meats. Many families turned to chicken and other low-priced poultry items.

Some consumers said they wouldn't actually buy any meat this week, but would use some they had bought in advance, on sale, and stored in the freezer.

Two meat dealers in Reno, Nev., reported that a lot of their customers who planned to join the buying boycott had stocked up ahead of time.

Charles Bradley, the meat manager at the California Avenue Market, said sales last week were "heavier than usual." Kenneth Bell of the meat department at Les' Meat Block, said "quiet a few" of his customers planned to participate in the boycott, but "some of them are buying up ahead of time." He said he had cut down his orders for the current week "just in case."

Emily Dillon of Albany, N.Y., said she would use meat she had in her freezer, but would not buy any more because of sympathy with the boycott. She said her two daughters were married and noted that she had only her husband and herself to cook for, but added:

"I've been in the stores and if I were feeding a family, I don't know what I'd do. I'd hide rather than face the family with what I could probably afford to give them.

"The price ceiling took effect Thursday; enforcement by the Internal Revenue Service begins on Monday; and retailers must post ceiling prices by April 9. It involves only processors, wholesalers and retailes, and does not affect the farmer or cattleman.

Stoneham Gets Grinded Hand

By STEVE VIGLEY
Dining Commons Reporter

Food Services Director Joel Stoneham instructed all dining commons to switch from hot dogs to Polish sausages in retaliation for an MDC photo taken last October which revealed that two women were using hot dogs for their own purposes.

Stoneham said that the switch to "Polak slop" would act as a deterrant to further Collegian exposes, because no one would mind when "the gals rip it off".

A dining commons worker, Mrs. Mary Swzxybvqnrtski, reacted negatively to the Stoneham directive.

"I really don't know how that man can say those horrible things about Polish food," Mrs. Swzxybvqnrtski said. "Stoneham is making unsubstantiated claims when he talks about the quality of Polish food."

She noted that one year ago, Stoneham's wife was arrested for allegedly stealing a laundry bag filled with 200 pounds of kielbasa.

"If you like kielbasa," the dining commons employee of 32 years said, "then you have to like Polish sausage."

Student reaction to the Stoneham move was surprisingly favorable.

Student Senate President Larry Ladzdaki applauded Stoneham, calling him "an absolute ham."

Ladzdaki observed that Polish nights were the rare nights when students got anything edible from the dining commons.

In other related events, Public Saftey Relation Director Edward Johnston said that "Stoneham was up to his old tricks again".

The beleaguered Stoneham, wearing a face similar to the one three years ago when UMass police apprehended his brother-in-law on three counts of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon (dining commons waffles), commented on the Johnston statement by saying, "He's full of it."

Twenty-seven people died from food poisoning several years ago when the dining commons forgot to put their roast beef in a refrigerator because of a John Lederle testimonial.

Yes, folks, it's going to be delicious, wholesome, and appetizing Polish sausage from now on in the Dining Commons. Mmmmm, good! (MDC photo by John Spinster.)

'Truth' Hits World

By MARY SHYLER
Associated Press Reporter

WASHINGTON (AP)—Two-thirds of the world's population has received "true knowledge" according to an exclusive report published in the Boston Globe yesterday.

The Globe Headlight team investigated all aspects of the life of two-month old Perfect Master, Mahariji Guru El Mohammed Jesusius Moses.

The Mahariji, called "Chub" for short, was born in Framingham, Massachusetts late last year in what observors described as an "immaculate conception."

True knowledge was received, according to the Globe, by approximately 2,789,456,764 people when Pope Cohen III announced that the Vatican was extending full recognition to Chub.

"World peace has come," the Pope confidently announced.

"We've got them from everywhere," an ecstatic secretary announced, "even from Archbishop Makarios of Cyprus, from Cardinal Cooke, and from Elijah Muhammed."

On Wall Street, Perfect Master Cigars jumped 20 points yesterday, and the ticker-tape was serenely 10 minutes late at one point.

Reaction from the White House was taciturn.

"Why do you think I painted my house white?" President Nixon asked jokingly.

The immediate results of worldwide True Knowledge were best observed at the weather station at Bradley International Airport in Windsor Locks, Conn.

Pope Cohen announces to a hushed world that he has received "true knowledge".

"Incredible light is filling the earth", reported meteorologist Dan Kurt.

At this time, it is not known how long True Knowledge will be available.

Wood Will Run For Governor: Pooh-poohs McGovern

By JOHN W. DEAN

UMass President Robert C. Wood announced that he was a candidate for Governor today.

In an emotional appeal for support, Wood promised a job for every American.

"I think it is feasible," Wood dramatically announced, "to upgrade the quality of every person's life, even to the extent of providing them two salaries for the work of one job."

Wood was referring to Vice President Frank Phillips who received a salary of $1.8 million dollars last fiscal year.

Political pundits say that Wood has the large Massachusetts Greek vote in his hand. Wood has a large collection of Greek worry beads.

"I expect to win the election by 3/4 of a million votes," Wood declared. "If a . . my loyal UMass alumni do not vote for me, I will be greatly disappointed", he said.

The only other declared candidate for the gubernatorial race is Eleanor McGovern, wife of the former president of Massachusetts, George S. McGovern McGovern.

The personable Mrs. McGovern, in reaction to the Wood announcement, said, "I don't know what he's talking about. Why just yesterday, 2 students, Matt Takeoff and Bib Estellee, said that they supported me wholeheartedly."

At this press conference in the voluptuous Presidential offices in Boston, Wood pooh-poohed the McGovern candidacy.

"Pooh-pooh," said Wood. Wood lives on a 350 acre plot of land in the well-to-do suburb of Lincoln, Mass. His house, nicknamed Xanadu, is a monument to his humbling performance as a former Housing Secretary and trolley car conductor.

Names Changed

It was a busy day for the Board of Trustees yesterday.

They appeased the following name changes:

"Department of Leisure Studies and Sciences" to "Department of Play";

"School of Home Economics" to the "Betty Crocker School of Sewing, Cooking and Knitting";

"School of Physical Education" to "School of Business Administration and Manipulation";

"College of Arts & Sciences" to "College of Classical Studies";

"School of Education" to "College of Arts and Sciences".

Elmer Fudd Eats Mud

By STEPHEN WINK

Spokesman for the UMass Student Government Association today denied they were responsible for a raid on trailers belonging to the Warner Bros. Construction company on the UMass campus over vacation.

The raids were reportedly held to protest construction of the "Big Bitch", a series of underground dining commons and study halls between Tillson Farm and the physical plant. Construction of the underground facility is currently in its 87th year.

The raids, which left 182 cases of Schlitz beer, an extensive collection of old UMass yearbooks, and 6,000 "I'm a Polka Fan" bumper stickers scattered near the Sylvan area, were reportedly led by a crutch-swinging student on one leg.

"He just kept shouting "It's a cartoon, it's a cartoon", said one Warner Bros. employe, obviously shaken. "We kept shouting at him to stop and told him the ditch would be done soon, but he just shouted something like "Dream on" over his shoulder and hopped off into the distance."

SGA President Larry Lackadaisical, when asked about the incident, "I've been in Boston all week having lunch with what's-his-name. Hear of any good summer internships?"

David "LBJ" Johnson, director of the UMass Department of Public Safety, at first refused to comment on the incident, but when asked later declined to comment. Later in the day when asked yet again about the incident at an informal press conference in the back of a UMass patrol car Johnson explained his earlier remarks with a "You'll have to talk to the [illegible]."

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Robert W. Kane said the incident was "nothing to be concerned about. It seems to me like just some good ole fashioned high school or, I mean, college shenanigans. I think some of the courses about it have been blowing the whole thing completely out of proportion."

A survey of students around campus showed a wide range of responses to the incident from "Wow!" to "I don't care." In several other students who asked it there were yet good answers around.

The Young Workers Liberation League accused the administration of taking part in a coordinated attempt to cover up the incident, which they believe was another attempt to keep UMass students as low-key participants in "the true revolutionary struggle."

When asked what the "true revolutionary struggle" was, a spokesman declined to comment, saying, "We've been misquoted enough."

Runners and bicycling workers actively are dismantling the Drake's University Library. To prove it, we submit the photo picture. It proves that when students discovered that the Library, filled with books, would rot in the month's and by the end, they decided that instead of having the entire building vacant, they would haul it down, brick by brick, and then transported it to the Cranberry Experimental Station on the Cape. So Sorry. Associated Press. (MDC photo by Dick Henderson.)

Says Faculty 'Drags Its Ass'

Bromery Blasts Faculty Senate

Chancellor William Randolph "Dude" Bromery is shown here lambasting the Faculty Senate yesterday. The flashy Bromery became Chancellor two years ago when his son became Executive Editor of the Collegian. "At least I'll get a good press," the elder Bromery said at the time. Bromery does not smoke cigars. (MDC photo by Bill Cosby.)

By EARL KALDWELL

In the latest of a series of militant speeches, Chancellor William Randolph "Dude" Bromery blasted the Faculty Senate yesterday, accusing it of "dragging its ass" in the area of Darwinian evolutionary curriculum development.

The Darwinian theory states that man descended from the apes.

"How much longer", demanded the controversial Bromery, "will the faculty insist that man's closest relative is Samuel Gompers? How much longer will the faculty delude themselves with these pious illusions of grandeur?"

Bromery pointed out that the work of anthropologist Jane Goodell in Tanzania proved that apes were more intelligent than Samuel Gompers. He said that for the faculty to "purposefully, intentionally, and deliberately exclude Tanzanian apes from rhetoric courses" was tantamount to "negative action" in the area of student cognitive development.

"I will not tolerate it anymore, I will not permit it, I will not allow it, it cannot go on," Bromery warned the 32 Faculty Senators in attendance.

In other Faculty Senate business, Secretary Robert Wellman accused President David Booth of being a "typical Government Department fascist". Booth answered Wellman by politely reminding him that the "Government Department" had been renamed "Department of Political Science."

The Faculty Senate also voted unanimously to abolish all core requirements.

"I feel that undergraduates are mature enough and wise enough to choose their own courses", said Senate sage and septuagenarian Howard Brogan. "Besides," he added, "if they're old enough to drink with the big boys at the Top of the Campus and Chequers, they're old enough to opt on their own. Let's stop treating them as babies."

The next Faculty Senate meeting will be held two years from today at the Cranberry Experimentational Station on the Cape.

Morini Opposes Rights

By CARL MARKS
Associated Prius Reporter

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. (AP)—Rep. Louis Morini, D-Northamptos, announced his opposition to the Social Security Act, the Korean War, and the Bill of Rights today.

Speaking to a crowded banquet room at Augie's Restaurant, Morini described the Bill of Rights as "a pernicious, evil document".

He said that the Bill of Rights provides for freedom of speech, assembly, and religion. "I think these rights are unconscionable," he said.

Morino observed that the Bill of Rights was promulgated back in the 18th Century, and that thousands of "people" have aserbled themselves to it.

"Consider what this has done to the quality of the population", Morini said. "Why any little S.O.B. can get up and say anything he likes to anyone. It undermines the entire concept of democratic feudalism."

Speaking about the Social Security Act, Morini said that it protects "the aged, the infirm, and the poor" by "bleeding the people who can least afford it." Morini did not say who those people were.

"I am against helping any of those old duffers who pee under the railroad bridge in Northampton," Morini said, "and the Social Security Act abets their disgraceful behavior by providing them with money with which to buy their booze and liquor."

The Northampton legislator decried the Korean War.

"Never in the field of human conflict," Morini said, "have so many owed so little to such a bunch of idiots."

He added that if it weren't for Eisenhower, we would still be in Korea, "slogging it out with the gooks" and worse, "having their children."

Morini said that he was writing a letter to the Nobel Peace Prize Committee in Stockholm, Sweden, asking them to consider Eisenhower's grandson, David, for the Nobel Prize.

"David Eisenhower used to live in Northampton," Morini said.

Student Senate Stooged Sickly

By PERENNIAL CANDIDATE

The Student Senate last night agreed to fund the Goldfish Swallowing Club, the Rhetoric Department, and the Government of Ecuador in a meeting that was marked by a violent flareup on the floor over the length of the recess. The meeting was attended by the Big Three of Whitmore Administration Building, Chancellor Moe "Dude" Bromery, Vice Chancellor for Administrative Red Tape Tom "Larry" Champion, and Vice Chancellor for Extramarital Affairs "Curly" Guage.

In his opening remarks Chief Cahoon and Recognized Student Pig Richard Milhous Lodd accused the Big Three of being "lounger of the President's office" and of other asserted misdeeds. Mass Aggie president Woody Woodpecker denied the charges, calling them "the height of absurdity". He also vehemently denied that his last name had been jokingly given to him by his wife.

In other Senate news it was reported that Speaker of the Senate Boston T. Willingham was found guilty of embezzling $1.00 in Senate funds. The Senate unanimously voted Willingham Speaker for Life as punishment. It was also reported that Academic Affairs Chairman Nick Apostolos has officially been nicknamed by the Fraternity Pantsh.

The meeting adjourned after three minutes and forty-seven seconds.

New Africa House Taken By Whites

By RAY CYST

Vowing to "not move an inch until all our demands are met", members of the First World Alliance today took over Mills House, handing Bill Hanson, director of what has come to be known in Alliance circles as "Hanson's plantation", a list of "non-negotiable" demands to be met before the building will be cleared. The demands are:

1) Two seats on the CCEBS Academic Affairs committee.

2) The printing of an extra 5,000 copies of Drum.

3) Funding of a Ku Klux Klan study group out of CCEBS funds.

4) Freedom for all political prisoners, including Matt Tackett.

Hanson and a few top Mills House aides fled to the Campus Center where a news conference was held last night. Hanson visibly shaken and holding his customary can of Tab, told newsmen that he had asked the Chancellor to use restraint in the use of force. Chancellor "Dude" Bromery yesterday advocated "blasting the hairy bastards right out of there". In preliminary injunction in an permit to be served on the occupiers some time tonight.

Meanwhile, the occupiers inside the occupied building in road. Occupiers have passed the long hours by planning a "memorial over the dead dear of Mills which reads "Uncle Tom's Cabin", and by singing "The Song "Get Black Books Out" seems to be the crowd's favorite at this time.

A spokesperson for the occupiers told the press early today that the aim of occupiers were the demands are met in to "liberate" Mills House and to cut other any blacks inside cover again. Arthur "Shortstop" is pleased to merge the new house with Rogue Fig fraternity.

'House Of Peace'...

By GAYLORD SHAW
Associated Press Writer

SAN CLEMENTE, Calif. (AP)—President Nixon received last-minute briefings from aides Sunday as South Vietnamese President Nguyen Van Thieu sped across the Pacific for summit talks at Nixon's "House of Peace."

Thieu was due to arrive at Los Angeles International Airport at 8 p.m. EST aboard a chartered jetliner that he christened "Cooperation in Peace."

The phrase, painted in both Vietnamese and English on the Boeing 707, set the tone for the two days of talks at the Western White House, and at his home, which Nixon calls the "House of Peace."

Thieu is to be greeted with full military honors when he arrives at San Clemente at mid-morning Monday for his first face-to-face meeting with Nixon in nearly four years.

In advance of the start of the summit talks, Nixon conferred Sunday with his top foreign affairs adviser, Henry Kissinger. Thieu also set aside Sunday evening for conferences with his advisers at a Los Angeles hotel, where he is making his headquarters.

A group of demonstrators led by activist Tom Hayden and his wife, actress Jane Fonda, planned to march to the gate of the Western White House Monday at about the same time Thieu arrives by helicopter.

The demonstrators oppose further U.S. aid to Thieu and his Saigon government, but sources said Nixon was ready to assure the South Vietnamese leader that he has his moral and economic support in the postcease-fire era.

Thieu also is reportedly seeking a specific guarantee from Nixon that the United States would intervene militarily should North Vietnam blatantly violate the cease-fire agreement.

Awaits 'New Thieu'

By EDITH M. LEDERER
Associated Press Writer

SAIGON (AP)—President Nguyen Van Thieu has launched an image-building campaign to persuade the South Vietnamese people and the world that he's not a tyrant.

Few doubt Thieu wants to remain in power, or that he will. Though he lacks popular support, particularly in the central and northern provinces, political observers say nobody else is strong enough to challenge him as long as U.S. dollars continue to back him.

"He is still regarded as the man who stood up to the Americans and managed to get a better cease-fire agreement, although not a perfect one," said an American source. "He's a man who is not considered an American puppet, which is an advantage to him and to us."

Since the cease-fire Jan. 28, Thieu has taken to the hustings to promote his Democracy party. He flew to the Mekong Delta city of Can Tho to tout his land-to-the-tiller program of turning over land to the farmers who work it.

Last week, he freed Truong Dinh Czu from Saigon's notorious Chi Hoa prison. Dzu, who ran a surprising second to the Thieu-Ky ticket in the 1967 presidential election, was imprisoned for suggesting peace talks with the Viet Cong.

Critics had been demanding his freedom and the move was seen as part of Thieu's campaign to make himself look good and head off antiwar protests by American opponents of his regime.

But supporters contend Thieu has been unjustly maligned and misunderstood. They say he is good at face-to-face encounters and hope this will help him pick up political and economic support during his trip to the United States, Great Britain, Italy, South Korea and Taiwan.

Some say he and President Nixon have a lot in common: their middle class backgrounds, their isolation from critics, their political shrewdness and their policy of never moving unless they're sure of winning.

During his more than five-year reign over war-torn South Vietnam, Thieu's round, bland, untelling face and low profile have become legendary.

"He's a highly intelligent man—lots of smarts—and his personal life is unblemished," said an observer. "There are no dark chambers in the basement. He's not a Papa Doc. Thieu is a man of intelligence but caution. He thinks over every alternative many, many times."

Thieu, who will celebrate his 50th birthday Thursday in Washington, was born in Ninh Thuan Province on the south central coast of Vietnam. He was youngest of the five children of a small landowner.

He attended a Roman Catholic secondary school in the former imperial capital of Hue and worked in his father's rice fields during Japanese occupation in World War II.

With defeat of the Japanese and the return of French colonial rulers, Thieu joined the tough movement of the Viet Minh, a national liberation movement led by Ho Chi Minh who went on to become president of North Vietnam.

"I was deceived by them for several months," Thieu has said. "By August of 1946 I knew that the Viet Minh were Communists . . . From that moment on, I have been fighting communism."

By 1954, when the French withdrew and Vietnam was divided, Thieu was a colonel. He served four years as superintendent of the National Military Academy and attended the Command College at Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and a weaponry school at Fort Bliss, Tex. Thieu gained command of a division under dictator Ngo Dinh Diem, and he led its tanks against the presidential palace in the November 1963 coup that overthrew Diem. With characteristic caution, Thieu waited for other commnders to strike before sending his troops in.

After Diem's assassination, Thieu was promoted to general, but kept one of the lowest profiles among Saigon's new military leaders. Quietly, he gathered support for the showdown against swashbuckling Nguyen Cao Ky that thrust him into the presidency on Sept. 3, 1967.

Last Known POW Released

By JOHN BREWER
Associated Press Writer

CLARK AIR BASE, Philippines (AP)-Skinny and chalk-faced, the last known U.S. war prisoner in Indochina ate his first American dinner in nearly 3-1/2 years Sunday night.

Up until the last minute, he feared his release might be a trick.

Army Capt. Robert T. White, 32, of Newport News, Va., flew here via Saigon following his turnover in a Mekong Delta village. His Viet Cong captors said it was "only meters" fron where his reconnaisance plane was shot down Nov. 15, 1969.

"Even at the transfer site he was not sure he would be released," said a U.S. information officer who flew to the Philippines with White. "It was not until Lt. Col. Larry Robeson took his arm and said 'Let's go to the plane' that he realized he was a free man."

Though gaunt, White was said to be in good spirits and generally good condition after he checked into the hospital at Clark Air Base. He ate steak for dinner but was described as too tired from his three-day journey to the turnover village to begin immediate medical tests.

He limped but it was not announced whether he had any injuries. He was expected to be on his way to a reunion with his wife Judith by Wednesday.

White said he had been forced to move about through South Vietnam's swamps and jungles continually during his captivity. The Viet Cong turned him over Sunday at Xom Tieu, a delta village about 75 miles south of Saigon.

He was the 588th U.S. prisoner released by the North Vietnamese, Viet Cong and Pathet Lao since the turnovers began Feb. 12. The others have all returned to the United States after short stays here for checkups.

The mustached pilot stepped up to the microphone at Clark after leaving the C9 Nightinga le hospital jet in light blue hospital pajamas, gray robe and slippers.

About 100 persons waved signs and shouted "welcome home" in unison.

"I, uh,...to say the very least I am happy to be a free man again and I sincerely appreciate this warm and friendly crowd, a large crowd for one man," he said. "Thank you for coming out."

White reportedly had no immediate comment on whether he had seen any other Americans during his captivity or knew what happened to Navy Lt. Cmdr. John G. Graf, the observer aboard White's Mohawk OV1 light observation plane when it went down.

Graf was seen paracnuting to the ground. He is one of 1,327 Americans missing in action in Indochina. Army Brig. Gen. Russeell Ogan, the Pentagon's director of prisoner of war and missing in action affairs, said last week that South Vietnam was "a gray area" that could hold more Americans.

At a news conference Saturday in Saigon, the chief of the Viet Cong delegation said that as far as he knew no other Americans are being held.

N. Viets Deny Torture Of POWs

TOKYO (AP)—North Vietnam claimed Sunday it treated its American captives well and that returning prisoners' torture stories were drummed up to deflect attention from U.S. "crimes" in Vietnam.

The official Communist party newspaper Nhan Dan quoted statements from U.S. officials at the time the first U.S. prisoners left North Vietnam that the men were in good mental and physical condition.

No matter what the prisoners say now, the paper said, "the humanitarian policy" of North Vietnam's government "toward captured U.S. military personnel has been welcomed by the whole of progressive mankind."

The Nhan Dan commentary, broadcast by the official Vietnam News Agency declared: "The pilots of U.S. piratic planes who bombed during the last eight years were criminals. However, in keeping with their humanitarian policy and for the sake of their friendship with the American people, the government and the Vietnamese people treated them well. This truth no one could deny."

Nhan Dan said even the head of the U.S. delegation to the Joint Military Commission, calling it a North Vietnamese detention camp for U.S. military personnel, said "he was completely satisfied with that concentration camp and that captured U.S. B52 crewmen were humanely and well treated."
